Mr. VOORHEES. I know all about the General Burnett case, and I know there is to be no great wrong done there. I will not sit by and listen to a reflection on the Attorney-General's Office of that kind. I object to the joint resolution. Let it go over. I know enough about the case to know that there is no danger of any wrong being done by a man lying helpless, prone upon his back, the result of wounds received in Mexico, where he fought with such gallantry that he to-day carries General Jackson's snuff-box, which was given in his will to the bravest man who should distinguish himself in the next war with a foreign power. That is all that General Ward B. Burnett has on earth to keep him from starvation to-day, except a little pitiful pension that I hope the Attorney-General has construed has been increased by another. I hope it will be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana objects to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from Indiana understands that the joint resolution is only——

Mr. VOORHEES. I understand enough to object.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It is merely that no action shall be taken by the Interior Department at present.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let the Departments take care of themselves. They are able to do so for a day longer.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I give notice that I shall call up the joint resolution to-morrow.

Mr. VOORHEES. Very well.

Mr. BLAIR. I have just come into the Senate; and I wish before the matter of General Burnett is disposed of that it may be fully discussed. I believe the decision of the Attorney-General is right. I think this man ought to have everything that the special act gives to him. The general bill which has been reported by the Committee on Pensions is all right also, but with this effort to take from that gallant old veteran what the Government meant to give to him I have no sympathy whatever.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BECK and Mr. LAPHAM submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3854) to repeal so much of section 3385 of the Revised Statutes as imposes an export tax on tobacco; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BECK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 6514) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments. I give notice that I shall call the bill up at no distant day.

Several SENATORS. Fix a time.

Mr. HALE. I cannot fix any time, but either Saturday or Monday.

BUREAU OF EDUCATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a telegram from William A. Mowry, president of the American Institute of Instruction, and Gustavus J. Orr, president of the National Educational Association, now in session at Saratoga, transmitting resolutions in favor of the Bureau of Education and urging an appropriation equal to that of last year; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

INTERNAL-REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HOAR in the chair.) The pend-pending bill will not be read at length before the Senate unless some Senator shall require it.

Mr. HALE. I offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I move lie on the table and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, the revenue for the year ending June 30 has proved to be all that it was estimated it would be, or $400,000,000, and we have paid off a trifle over $150,000,000 of the public debt, leaving the charge for interest on the public debt a trifle over $57,000,000. If no changes were to be made in the laws it is estimated that our revenue for the coming year would be equal to that of the last, but an equal reduction of the public debt will not follow, for the reason that our pension charge has had and will have an extraordinary increase, the river and harbor bill has swollen into a torrent, and the deficiencies of former years have been brought forward and liquidated. Our expenditures for the coming year are, therefore, to be very considerably increased, but how much it will be impossible to ascertain until after the close of the session. That our scale of expenditures is rising too rapidly will hardly be denied, and the only sure way perhaps to check it is to shut off the flow of some part of the revenue into the Treasury by some straight and prompt reduction of direct and indirect taxation.

I have been anxious to have our national debt paid off because it will relieve our people of a heavy burden, and because it will then be much easier, as I believe, to maintain a sound system of finance. There will be no occasion for a division of sentiment about it. But there is only $460,461,050 that we can pay at will and redeem before 1891, and then there is only $250,000,000 due, and nothing more until 1907. If we pay so rapidly as to be compelled to go into the market and buy up our debt before it is due, we cannot do it without being subjected to a large loss in premiums. If, therefore, we pay the full amount required for the sinking fund annually, or not more than about $50,000,000, it would seem to be sufficient.

The tax bill as it came from the House proposed to remove between $23,000,000 and $24,000,000 of the war taxes. I remember with what difficulty some gentlemen voted for their imposition. I hope they will not now have equal difficulty in voting for their removal.

I do not understand that there has been any objection to the repeal of the taxes, as proposed by the bill of the House, other than this, that some have thought the bill did not go quite far enough. It must be remembered that we are soon to have the whole question of a revision of the tariff before us, with all the related facts which can be gathered by an industrious commission between this and the next session of Congress. The Committee on Finance were therefore reluctant to open questions about the tariff in advance of the special information expected in relation to the whole subject. Upon sober second thought, however, in a spirit of good will and harmony, believing it would also be acceptable to the other side of the Chamber, the Committee on Finance have now proposed amendments going further by reducing the duties on sugar one-fifth, and on Bessemer steel railway bars by a reduction of $8 per ton.

The change proposed on sugar is the removal of the additional 25 per cent. duty which was imposed in 1875 upon an emergency which has now passed away. This will reduce the rate of duties on sugar, melada, and molasses to the extent of one-fifth, or, if the importations this year should be the same as last year, to the amount of $9,595,427.

We also propose a temporary amendment, until something better shall be provided, by which sugars of a high saccharine strength shall not evade the proper duty by being so manufactured as to appear dark and dirty, and thus conceal their real value.

What the effect of the reduction on steel railway bars may be it is difficult now to predict. For the year ending June 30, 1881, the reduction of $8 per ton upon 166,239 tons imported would have amounted to $1,329,912. For the past year, however, the trade has been greatly depressed, both here and in Great Britain, and the price here of steel rails has fallen from $65 per ton to $49, and in Great Britain much lower. The reduction of duty now proposed will undoubtedly tend to increase importations, the uncalled for stocks on hand abroad will be likely to be sent here to be closed out at any price, and a further depression in price may follow, and this at a time when neither the manufacturers nor their employés are in a prosperous condition to meet it.

About 40 per cent. of the pig-iron produced in this country has for some time been consumed in the manufacture of Bessemer steel. Certainly it would be very disastrous just now to reduce the duty to any lower point than that named in the amendment of the Committee on Finance.

The practice of the trade to seek admission of foreign merchandise at lower rates of duty by changing its name or by changing some of its conditions is often ingenious and frequently surprising to law-makers as well as to collectors of revenue. When the Dutch standard of sugar was incorporated into our tariff laws it was universally recognized as the true standard of value not only in national laws but it was the buying and selling standard among merchants the world round; but ingenious sugar-makers have learned how to evade it, and it is no longer a standard of value. When the duty upon band-iron of a certain thickness was fixed at 1¼ cents or 1½ cents per pound, it was never imagined that such band-iron could be cut up into strips and tackled to buckles, and then, assuming another name, be subject to only half as much duty as that on plain band-iron. But such are the mutations of trade, and all descriptions of iron are year by year growing cheaper.

The error in this case affects both the manufacturer and the consumer, but it is not so large in amount as some have supposed. In the six months ending December 31, 1881, the amount of duty collected upon the band-iron imported in the shape and fashion of cotton-ties, or cut into proper lengths, was only $163,140, and if an equal amount was collected in the next six months, the whole amount would be only $326,280.

It will be for the Senate to decide in this case as in all others what shall be done.

These amendments of the internal-revenue laws and the tariff will cause a diminution of revenue of something less than $40,000,000. The amendments are such as would be sure to be made even after the most careful and thorough consideration, but at this late hour of the session they are all that ought to be made in lump sums, especially when the whole subject will be again before us in about four months. It would also be becoming on our part to show a wise moderation even in amending a revenue bill which the House of Representatives has the sole constitutional power to originate. It will be decent to bear in mind also that we have a commission authorized by law to examine and report upon these vastly important subjects.

The hot season by that time will be over; there will be less occasion for buncombe speeches or buncombe amendments, and we can then act more intelligently and more profitably for the country and ourselves. Undoubtedly other amendments could be offered that would seem appropriate. I could, if hard pushed, offer some myself, but believing the bill of the House and the amendments of the Committee on Finance contain all that we have any time to properly consider now, and that we ought not to open any wider field of labor for the House for which we must stand and wait, I shall feel constrained to ask the Senate to refuse, regardless of what may be their merits, any additional amendments which may be offered, and which perhaps in the near future may be likely to be accepted. It is time this session was drawing to a close, and I shall do nothing now and I trust nothing hereafter to prolong it by either long or frequent speeches.

I am gratified by the many evidences of the general prosperity of the country, especially by the assurances of an abundant harvest. The value of money is slightly increasing and there is no surer sign that capital is beginning to be employed in industries that promise more certain returns. But no legislator comprehends his position who does not take into view the possibilities of the future. In 1873 the great financial crisis started in what seemed to be the high-noon of prosperity, and years elapsed before the entire recovery of the country. In our own history these financial crises seem to have as much periodic regularity as the motions of the planetary system. Their recurrence appears to be fixed to the term of ten years. The natural inquiry would be, is there anything of this sort impending for the year 1883? Prior to 1873 unprecedented investments had been made in the construction of railroads, but the construction of nine thousand miles last year surpasses anything in our history. The fall in the prices of stocks of almost all kinds within the past year has been very large. The prices of butcher's meat, iron, and many other articles have gone down. Our imports of dutiable goods have been large, yielding $219,678,608 of revenue, but the position of our foriegu exchanges is now adverse, and instead of receiving large remittances of gold we are parting with considerable amounts almost every week. What effect a foreign war, now supposed to be imminent, may have upon our trade and industries who can foretell?

The immigration to our country has been enormous, and its proportions appear to be growing larger day by day. The great bulk of this immigration goes West, and the fruit of the increased labor appears at once in the increase of the agricultural productions of the country. That this is a great benefit no one will deny, but its final results, when all other nations are producing full and prosperous crops, is to depress the price of the vast products of our own citizens. The number of farms in the United States in 1870 was 2,659,985, but they had increased more than 50 per cent. up to 1880, and then numbered 4,008,907. This is a prodigious increase. There has not been such an increase in other branches of industry as will offer consumers at home for the wheat and other products that have been and will be harvested here, and it now looks as though the foreign demand would be very limited.

Therefore, though our crops promise to be large, I fear the remuneration of the farmers will not be large. It follows, if our importations should continue upon the present rather improvident scale, that we may have a large balance to pay in gold abroad at an early day. Last year our receipts from miscellaneous sources were large, amounting to over $37,000,000, but it is likely they will be much less the coming year.

Under all these circumstances it would not be prudent to diminish the resources of the Treasury to any greater amount than is proposed by the present bill and its amendments.

I shall now ask, Mr. President, that the amendments proposed by the Committee on Finance shall be first acted upon and then upon whatever individual members of the Senate may think it wise to offer.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, he who would win and retain the confidence of the people must treat public questions with absolute fairness and justice.

It is now more than seventeen years since the war between the sections closed and this Government became entitled to the methods and the principles of peace in its administration. During the four calamitous years of strife many measures of public policy, some of them necessary and some unnecessary, some just and some unjust, were enacted into laws as incident to a state of war, and were known as war legislation.

To a great extent the present system of tariff legislation belongs to this class of measures. It originated in the midst of the war, and was framed, shaped, and adapted to the condition of the country at that time. Whether in its general policy or in its vast details it was wisely or unwisely adjusted to the ends it had in view I shall not now make much inquiry; I shall not contribute to the tangled wilderness of figures on that point, for it is conceded, I believe, by everybody that with the transition of the country from a state of war to a state of peace a revision of the laws on this subject, in many important particulars, became a proper and needful work at the hands of Congress.

The business, trade, commerce, and general interests of the country grew rapidly away from the conditions which were claimed to justify the tariff legislation of twenty years ago. And as each year passed away the obligations to make necessary changes in the laws became more and more binding on the representatives of the people. Nothing at all, however, has been done to correct confessed evils, and, for the last six months at least, the question of responsibility, blame, and censure for the long delay has been discussed in the press and elsewhere, sometimes in great ignorance, often with great injustice, but always with great vehemence and assumption of superior wisdom.

Sir, let us look for a moment in the face of the facts on this point, and speak the naked truth, affect whom it may. Of the two branches of Congress the House has sole, original jurisdiction over the subject of the tariff in its inception, modification, revision, or repeal. The Constitution places the responsibility of action or non-action on that subject upon the immediate representatives of the people at the other end of the Capitol, and the proper measure of that responsibility will not be disturbed nor obscured in the public mind by the loud professions of haste and anxiety to revise the tariff at once, which we now hear on the part of those who have been in position all the time to do the work, and who have left it wholly undone.

Nor will the denunciation of the tariff commission, whose simple duties are to gather statistics and information for the use of Congress and the country, deceive anybody into the conclusion that the House was then about to act, after seventeen years of sleepy neglect, and that this very harmless commission kept that body from proceeding at once to the proper discharge of its duties on this subject. The truth is the Senate had no other way in which to urge forward the work desired; this body cannot originate measures connected with the public revenues, and the House would not and did not in this instance.

It was under these circumstances, and with a view to aid and stimulate the other branch of Congress in its long-neglected duties, that the late Senator from Connecticut, Mr. Eaton, distinguished alike for the high purity of his principles and his commanding ability, introduced here his bill for a commission looking to a far more speedy revision of the tariff than was promised by anything in the history, conduct, or organization of the House. That bill was reported back favorably to this body from the Finance Committee by the able and distinguished Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.] His strong support upheld it from the beginning to the end on this floor, and yet I doubt if any one will have the hardihood to assert that he is less anxious for an immediate revision of the tariff upon just and equitable principles than certain other gentlemen who, after closing their eyes and folding their hands in Congress and elsewhere for many years, now all at once have seemingly waked up in a great hurry and are crying aloud that somebody is delaying, holding, obstructing them.

Who delayed them in former Congresses? Who obstructed their efforts when they controlled the Committee on Ways and Means and had a majority in the House? Who held them back and quenched their fiery zeal for tariff reform when the entire machinery for that kind of work was in their own hands? I am weary of false pretenses on this subject. I hear it said that certain members of Congress who have been long in the public service could far better execute the duties assigned to the tariff commission than the commission itself. When and where have they attempted to do so, and who has hindered them? By the third section of the act of May 15, 1882, it is provided—

> That it shall be the duty of said commission to take into consideration and to thoroughly investigate all the various questions relating to the agricultural, commercial, mercantile, manufacturing, mining, and industrial interests of the United States, so far as the same may be necessary to the establishment of a judicious tariff, or a revision of the existing tariff, upon a scale of justice to all interests.

These objects thus specified in the law are not merely great and laudable; they are absolutely vital to intelligent legislation on the subject to which they relate. Can wise and equitable laws be enacted on the most important and comprehensive questions of public policy without full and reliable information? And yet I challenge the history of the last seventeen years to show a single attempt on the part of the House of Representatives to procure by committee, commission, or in any other mode, such statistical knowledge in regard to the agriculture, commerce, manufactures, merchandise, mining, and other industrial pursuits of the United States as were "necessary to the establishment of a judicious tariff or a revision of the existing tariff upon a scale of justice to all interests."

Nor will any human being, fit to be at large on his own responsibility, pretend that the House was about to enter upon tariff reform at the present session, and that it would have done so but for the surprising hinderance of a commission to hunt up and lay facts before them. Sir, I so fully concurred with the views of the very able Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] on this point that I cannot refrain from quoting his wise and excellent observations. He used the following language:

> Mr. President, I am not prepared to say that the two Houses of Congress are not competent to take up this question and dispose of it, but it has been here for many years not disposed of. I see no movement that indicates that it is likely to be disposed of at this session in any other manner than by a commission. With the immense amount of business Congress now has before it I do not think any committee of gentlemen of the two Houses understanding this question can afford to absent themselves from the deliberations of their respective Houses long enough to frame and bring in anything like a perfect tariff bill. When the commission is raised it is simply one to investigate and report.
> Mr. BAYARD. They can report from time to time.
> Mr. BROWN. As the Senator from Delaware suggests, they can from time to time report. They can take up for instance a particular subject, as cotton and articles manufactured of cotton, or sugar and molasses, or whatever articles they may think best, and if they desire they can report very frequently upon the question. After they have made their report we are not bound by it. The object is simply to give us information on the subject. When we get that information it will be proper that we should so use it as to promote the public interest, and that we should frame with that information in our possession a tariff bill that will approximate as nearly as possible justice to all sections and all interests. It is not a heavy expense; it takes no time that is not likely to be taken anyhow, as every Senator sees.

Nor did I leave any doubt as to my own views and purposes when voting on this measure. Nothing could possibly have been further from my mind than to delay the work of tariff reform wherever such reform might be found necessary. While the bill to create a tariff commission was pending in this body I made the following statement, as reported in the RECORD of March 29:

> I believe the present tariff system needs revision; I believe there are in it many injustices; I believe that it needs a full investigation, and that the result of that investigation should be laid before Congress to enable us to legislate for the best interests of all classes. Every industry is entitled to our care, and hence we want all the information we can obtain.
> A word in regard to what the Senator from Iowa has just said. If I thought this measure would postpone any proper opportunity to reform the tariff laws of the country in the interest of justice and general prosperity to all industries, I would not vote for it. On the contrary, I vote for it simply and solely as a measure to obtain information for future use, and if to-morrow an opportunity comes to legislate upon the same subject with sufficient light and sufficient information I shall embrace it at once.
> I voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. VANCE,] because I am one of those who believe that there is no necessary antagonism between the agricultural and manufacturing industries of this country. I believe there is a safe, sound middle ground between the high protectionist per se on the one hand, and the wild free-trader and direct taxationist on the other; that the prosperity of this country lies where its growth and its development both of lands and manufactures will be best promoted and protected, and I hope before this session closes to embrace an opportunity to point out that true medium ground; that ground where I think all the industries of this country can be encouraged and harmonized, and at the same time a sufficient revenue obtained.

When it is remembered in addition to all this that the brief lifetime of the commission will terminate in December next, that it has less than six months to run, I think it will be apparent to all that if, like Congress, it does no good on the subject, it will at least do no harm.

But, Mr. President, there is another and a far more important question than the one I have just noticed which always arises in connection with tariff legislation. It is a question as old as human government, and yet remains unsettled. It commenced its career in this country with the Constitution, and has grown rather than diminished in importance from that hour to this. The tariff is a method of taxation; it has its origin in the power of the Government to raise money for the public service, but like every other system of taxes ever known in history, its resulting consequences reach far and wide among the people; it touches, takes hold upon, and encourages or depresses their diversified interests; and this great consequent fact, this vast incident as it may be called, can no more be evaded, ignored, nor pushed aside in legislating for the general good of the country than the primary fact of revenue itself.

It is not within the range of human skill to so frame a tariff as to result in nothing but the collection of revenue, nor can human wisdom separate its direct and tremendous effects upon the industries and prosperity of the country from the bare, naked existence of a tariff. It is at this point that the extreme and contrary views now before the country begin to assert themselves. On the one hand there are those who declare their readiness to enact a system of tariff not so much with a view to revenue as to the promotion and protection of certain great pursuits in our midst; while on the other we hear a loud and persistent cry that nothing but revenue, revenue only, can possibly enter into the consideration of a subject which in fact, however, embraces directly and indirectly, in addition to the collection of revenue, nearly all the myriad interests of the laboring and business classes of the United States.

Between these two extremes and against them both I take my stand on that sure and safe middle ground which has for its defense the wisest interpretations of the Constitution, the practices of the Government when it was administered by those who framed it, the clear and explicit teachings of the fathers, the history of the great party to which I belong, the independence and strength of the country, and the welfare and happiness of its people.

Sir, I have the honor of a seat on this floor from a State more remarkable in many respects than any other commonwealth in this Union. I shall speak to-day as one of the representatives of her people, with no other ambition in this life than to guard and advance their prosperity. If I can feel when the battle of life is ended that I deserve well at their hands, I will go to my eternal rest in their midst without much concern as to what others may think or say above my dust.

Indiana does not owe her high rank and progressive position as an American State to the extent of her territory. In square miles she measures less than any other of the Western, Northwestern, or Southern States, with the single exception of South Carolina. The powerful and commanding States which alone compete with her in the West, such as Ohio, Illinois, Missouri, and Iowa, are far larger by metes and bounds than she is. Nor has she in any degree depended for her population, her wealth, and her enterprise upon a great city within her borders, such as Chicago, Saint Louis, or Cincinnati, drawing upon all the world for its vigor and growth.

The tillable soil, therefore, of Indiana is necessarily more fully tenanted than that of her rival neighbors; her fertile acres, fewer in number than theirs, are more thickly settled by her two millions of inhabitants; she has no one great hive of houses and streets in which a half million of her population stow themselves away from the fields; and the key to her success is the fact that an intelligent strong people have seized upon all the resources of nature so bountifully spread out in her borders, and are developing them with a skill and energy never surpassed in this or in any other country. The people of Indiana have determined to avail themselves of all the wealth within their reach, to appropriate all—not merely a portion—but all the gifts and riches proffered to them, both by the cultivation of their inexhaustible soil and by encouraging manufacturing industries wherever it is legitimate and profitable to do so.

Sir, it is the harmonious combination and development of all the elements of natural wealth which insures the progress and happiness of a people; and the fact that the agricultural and manufacturing interests of Indiana are both great and commanding calls for a policy of friendship and alliance and not of antagonism between them. It is not statesmanship, nor patriotism, nor even common sense to incite the hostility of one laudable branch of industry against another, when by combining the two in friendly co-operation every blessing, public and private, would be enhanced. The strength and support of nations rest fundamentally on agriculture, on the nourishing productions of the earth; but the skill, the ingenuity, and the industry of the manufacturer have gone hand in hand with the tiller of the soil in all the best civilizations of the world.

In 1879 the farmers of Indiana produced over 134,000,000 bushels of corn, more than any other State except Illinois, Iowa, and Missouri, the two former of which States have nearly 15,000,000 acres each and the latter one over 20,000,000 more than Indiana. The fourth State in corn in 1880, Indiana was the second State in the production of wheat, and is destined this year to be the first. Her wheat crop in 1880 was greater than those of Minnesota and New York counted together; equal to those of California and Pennsylvania combined; larger than the yield of both the States of Michigan and Kentucky; and greatly exceeding in number of bushels the wheat production of all the New England and Atlantic seaboard States from Maine to Texas inclusive, with the single exception of Pennsylvania.

In average per acre Indiana leads all the States of the great wheat belt of the Northwest, and her average and acreage are both rapidly increasing from year to year. Nor does the amazing fecundity of her fields fail in the proportionate production of any of the bounties or fruits of the earth. If there is no swift tide of immigration hunting homes within her borders it is simply because her lands are all taken up and to an unusual extent in a Western State occupied and cultivated by a permanent, thrifty, and vigorous population. More than 5,000 miles of railroad interlace the map of the State. Of her ninety-two counties, the locomotive, on its track of iron and steel, is now transporting passengers and freight through all of them but three, thus converting the State into a familiar neighborhood, its most distant points being but a few hours from each other.

It has been often said that the Northwest is the granary of the world; that it can feed all of the human family likely ever to be in want. I can as truthfully say that in all that vast prolific region the most abundant stores in porportion to area, and the most general and extensive developments of nature's prodigal resources, are to be found in that State which has honored me with its confidence as a member of this body.

But the broad and flowing harvest fields of Indiana, her meadows and her pasture lands, though yielding annually more money than all the gold and silver production of the United States, as shown by the statistics, though more splendid and richer far than robes of royalty set with diamonds, yet constitute but a portion of her wonderful natural endowments. In no other place on the globe did nature ever fashion and gather together within easy reach all the materials for so perfect a workshop, in all the mechanic and manufacturing arts, as in that State. Lying within the embrace of the Ohio and the Wabash Rivers on the south and west and of Lake Michigan on the north, her whole surface is intersected at brief intervals by medium-sized water-courses peculiarly adapted to the purposes of the manufacturer.

The hard wood of her forests is already famous in this country and in Europe for its utility and its beauty. The wagons, plows, drills, reapers, mowers, thrashers, every species of farming implements known to the husbandman are manufactured in Indiana on a scale so extensive that they reach the markets not only of nearly every State in this Union but also the markets of South America, Europe, South Africa, and Australia. The same is true in regard to the most elegant and elaborate articles of furniture now in use in the drawing-rooms, libraries, and public offices of the world.

While at home a short time since, a gentleman of the highest character, living in one of the manufacturing towns of the State, informed me that in examining the books of certain companies located there it was found that in the space of one week shipments had been made of rich and costly furniture and other specimens of skill in wood-work to England, Scotland, Sweden, Belgium, Russia, and Turkey in Europe, to Brazil in South America, and to Cape Town in South Africa.

Scarcely an exposition of the arts of industry has taken place in this country or abroad, whether it has been a State fair or a world's fair, within the last fifteen years, at which the hard and highly-polished wood of Indiana, manufactured by her own people into all the various articles known to the wants and luxuries of civilized life, has not been displayed, admired, and awarded first premiums. And in addition to this use of her timber, Porter, in his recent valuable work on the West, as shown by the census of 1880, says:

> Going westward, Indiana is the last heavily-timbered State within the parallels of 37° 40′ and 41° north latitude, which fact adds largely to the value of its forests; the products of which in 1878-79 were estimated by the State statisticians at $11,892,856 sawed lumber, and $4,532,304 staves, besides hewn timber, and large quantities used in wagon-making, and the logs transported to other States to be cut into lumber or used as spiles.

The stone quarries of Indiana are also one of the elements of her greatness as a State. For all works of massive masonry, such as public buildings, piers, and bridge abutments, no State in the Union can show a better quality or a more extensive supply. Her "beds of heavy, close-grained, compact magnesian limestone, so extensively quarried" now in various parts of the State, have a reputation for durability and strength second to none in the world. And the pure limestone of the sub-carboniferous age, underlying extensive regions of the State and furnishing the general markets of the country, is famous wherever this essential mineral is in demand.

> As a durable building stone it has withstood the ravages of time in buildings for upward of fifty years and still retains the hammer and chisel marks almost as sharp as when just cut. The density, as shown by analysis, exceeds that of the celebrated English Portland oolite. It likewise possesses greater strength.

Again, it is said by high authority:

> It may be quarried in blocks of any thickness and size. * * * At most of the localities where this stone is quarried blocks of much greater length, thickness, and width can be obtained if required, and Cleopatra's Needle might be duplicated should a market be opened for monoliths of that character.

Of another species of stone in Indiana, the following valuable fact has been ascertained and recorded:

Flagging may be obtained of this stone in flags fifty by two hundred feet, and four, six, or seven inches thick, and without break or flaw, that will not vary one inch in thickness over the entire surface. Stone twenty-two inches thick may be had in like dimensions and evenly bedded, if it were possible to handle such masses.

It is not strange, therefore, that the millionaires of New York and other great cities should make orders from the quarries of Indiana for the material of their palatial residences and the pavements which adorn the approaches to them.

In all the fine clays for the manufacture of porcelain, iron-stone china, and encaustic tile, this State, so favored by the hand of nature, is also very rich. The State geologist in speaking of one of the large and inexhaustible beds, says:

For the manufacture of fine grades of porcelain and granite ware it surpasses all other clays for purity of color and homogeneous texture.

The manufacture of floor and mural tile has proven a great success in Indiana. It is produced there from clays giving a variety of natural colors, and is now in use in this Capitol and in other public buildings. It is equal to the best foreign tile imported here from England, and is destined to supply the markets of the United States.

French plate-glass is also manufactured in Indiana upon a scale of great magnitude, and of a size and quality not surpassed in France itself. This important branch of skilled industry on the southern border of the State is now one of the most notable and valuable enterprises in the West, or, indeed, in any other section of the country.

In the manufacture of cars for the equipment of railroads Indiana has the most extensive works in the United States, giving employment to thousands of her citizens, making markets for the producer, and benefiting all classes of her people.

But, sir, in the points which I have as yet presented in her favor I have only been skirting, as it were, the edges of Indiana's vast natural wealth. In order to fully comprehend her capacity for usefulness to the human family and for greatness within herself we must enter her mighty coal-fields, more valuable than the gold mines of California or the diamond beds of Africa. Her measures of coal embrace 6,500 square miles, almost one-fifth of the entire State; but it is not their extent alone which constitutes their immense and growing value. There is found in the coal regions of Indiana an inexhaustible belt of the block coal, now so well known and so famous for its wonderful properties in all manufacturing circles throughout this country and Europe.

It is conceded by all familiar with the subject that this coal has no equal on the American continent, if in the world, in the manufacture of the higher grades of iron and steel. One celebrated author applies to it the following description:

To the purity of splint coal it unites all the softness and combustibility of wood, and the effects produced by it in the blast-furnace, either as to the quality or the quantity of iron far exceed everything in the manufacture of that metal with charcoal.

McFarlane, in the third edition of his standard work on the Coal Regions of America, thus speaks of the block coal of Indiana:

In burning it scarcely swells or changes form, and never cakes or runs together. It is this latter character which gives the block coal its peculiar value as a fuel for smelting iron ores, while it has sufficient bitumen in the form of gaseous matter to render it highly inflammable; and the blocks retain their shape until burnt to ash, in such a manner as will admit the ready passage of the blast and flame through the entire mass of fuel, ore, and flux.

On the other hand, the bituminous caking coals, of which the Pittsburgh coal may be taken as the type, swell and mix together, so that the blast cannot force the flame through the contents of the furnace, and the whole mass becomes chilled for want of sufficient heat to melt the ore.

Another eminent geologist, and without partiality on the subject, Colonel G. W. Foster, of Chicago, has made valuable reports in this connection. He says:

A portion of the eastern margin of the Indiana coal-field is known to contain a body of "splint," or "block" coal, which, while affording an admirable article of fuel for steam and domestic purposes, at the same time affords a fuel which will reduce iron in the hot-blast furnace without the preliminary process of coking. The result has been that within a few years numerous lines of railway communication have been opened, and others projected, to bring these coals in contact with the iron ores, and numerous furnaces have sprung up along the line of their outcrop. * * * Another feature with regard to this coal is its great purity.

You may inspect tons of it without finding any interlineated sulphur, and it is only rarely that a brassy film is to be seen along the joints. If you examine the ashes left by a burning mass they are as white and flocculent as those of hickory. It has, too, a resinous luster, with blotches of cannel-like appearance, which we see in the best varieties of Brier Hill. Containing no impurities which are readily acted upon, it will bear stocking for an entire season without loss.

This distinguished author, who is largely quoted by McFarlane, makes the following prediction:

Before the lapse of ten years the mining of these iron-smelting coals, instead of being restricted to a single district as at present, will be spread over a zone of one hundred and fifty miles in extent; and it requires no prophetic vision to predict that, before the lapse of half a century, Indiana will rival Pennsylvania in the amount of her mineral products—owing to the physical and chemical properties of the block coals, and their adaptation to the manufacture of the higher grades of bar-iron and Bessemer steel.

I prefer that others of scientific knowledge and laborious research should speak on these points rather than merely to advance my own opinions. Professor Cox, second to none in his profession, when State geologist of Indiana, made the following interesting statement in his report of 1870:

From her geographical position, and more especially on account of the extent and value of her coal-beds, and the peculiar adaptation of this coal to the metallurgy of iron and steel, which now forms one of the leading industries of the world, we can safely predict for Indiana a bright future as a manufacturing State.

The commerce of the new far West, which is increasing with a rapidity unprecedented in the growth of empires, will just as naturally look to Indiana for its supply of iron and steel with which to keep up the system of railroads traversing the great plains to the Pacific Ocean, as the old West looked to Pennsylvania. In Indiana we find the last great belt of timber suited for manufacturing purposes, and after crossing her borders, from thence to the Pacific Ocean, no coal has yet been found that can successfully be used in the manufacture of iron.

Such in brief space, drawn by impartial hands, is the picture of Indiana, present and future, displaying her gigantic physical resources. It is full of pride, congratulation, and hope for all her people. I cannot forbear, however, in this connection to add one more of Indiana's possessions, of higher significance, greater glory, and more priceless value than any or all that have been enumerated. Her permanent school fund is over $9,000,000; it cannot be diminished, but is constantly increasing, and it pays more per capita for the cause of education than the school fund of any other State in the Union.

The value of school property is nearly $12,000,000; the number of school-houses is nearly 10,000; the attendance upon schools is over half a million, and the payment of teachers' salaries in Indiana amounts annually to over $3,000,000. It is not surprising, therefore, that Porter, in his work entitled the West, from the census of 1880, which I have already quoted from, should, in speaking of the public schools of Indiana, make the following strong statement:

Superintendents, teachers, and people have been inspired with a species of enthusiasm on this subject. A system of county institutes has been ordained, and the attendance of teachers has been made compulsory, fines being imposed for this neglect of duty. Besides this there were 4,530 township institutes held in 1880. A large State tax is raised which is distributed pro rata on the basis of school population, so that the wealthier counties contribute to instruction in the poorer ones.

This tax added to the very large permanent school fund derived from Congressional grants pays more per capita toward the support of public instruction than the general fund of any other State. * * * Illiteracy has been reduced very rapidly under the operation of the improved system of public schools and other causes during the past ten years, so that the illiterates numbered in 1880 less than 1 in 1,100 of the entire population. At the same time the ratio of commitments for crime is below the average elsewhere, while the ratio of householders to the entire adult population is rather greater. * * * The public debt has been reduced until it is now scarcely a million after deducting its non-negotiable bonds, representing the funds it holds for the benefit of its own schools and colleges.

Taxation, except for recent public improvements, is a mere trifle. Public and private credit stands high. * * * As a consequence, home and foreign capital stands ready to embark in new enterprises or to enlarge existing industries. The advantages of homes in the midst of such privileges as we have described will prevent any considerable emigration, and will continue to attract immigration, especially to the industrial centers. With nearly half of her soil still unfurrowed, with her rich deposits of block coal of superior quality for smelting purposes barely broached, with a school fund larger in proportion to the population than any other State in the Union, with abundance of work and fair wages for all who come to her, Indiana enters upon a new decade confident of continued and increasing prosperity.

Mr. President, I have thus far dwelt, and somewhat in detail, upon the marvelous resources of Indiana, her unparalleled combination of agricultural and manufacturing wealth, and the high intelligence of her people, for the purpose of saying that, in full view of all these facts, I felt justified on the 5th of October last, at Atlanta, Georgia, in making the following statement:

Yet the people of Indiana, with all their tremendous capacity for agriculture, are not content to ignore all the other branches of remunerative industry. They are reaching forth their hands, guided by skill and intelligence, to develop all the bounties of nature and to pluck fruits in all the fields of labor. And if in paying a tariff tax for Government support, as revenue, they find that the laws compelling them to do so likewise foster, encourage, and protect their young and growing manufactures of iron, hard-wood, glass, woolen, and cotton, they will regard them with favor as the result of wise legislation. Indeed, they will demand such an adjustment of the tariff as to insure that end.

Sir, this statement I repeat here now in my place as a Senator. I believed it to be in harmony with the interests of the people of Indiana nine months ago, when it was first uttered, and time, events, and observation have since very fully confirmed me in that opinion. The figures of the forthcoming census report for 1880 make the following exhibit of the manufacturing industries of Indiana for that year:

Number of establishments	14,480
Number of hands employed	57,939
Capital invested	$76,341,728
Amount of wages paid	$24,195,057
Materials	$97,342,880
Products	$185,050,220

The rate of increase in the value of her manufactured products from 1870 to 1880 was about eight millions a year, and it has not been less during the last two years. That she is, therefore, now producing over two hundred millions in value per annum from her manufacturing establishments will not be questioned. At least 75,000 laboring people find employment in these establishments at wages which support themselves and a quarter of a million others, women and children, the aged and infirm, who are dependent upon somebody's active industry for subsistence.

Sir, am I expected to be blind to such stupendous facts as these in the history of my own State, and to disregard them in shaping the legislation of the country? Am I to be arraigned for claiming, as I do, that while the people of Indiana are paying their part of a tariff tax for Government revenue they shall also have all the protection, fairly incident to such a system, applied to the vast interests here disclosed? And these questions bring me to the vital issue involved in every tariff discussion from the foundation of the Government to present time. The standard of free trade has been raised here and there of late, as it has been occasionally for nearly three-quarters of a century past; but whenever it has been closely challenged and its consequences pointed out it has been furled and laid away.

Free trade does not mean a revision of the tariff; it means no tariff at all. Free trade does not mean a judicious adjustment of the tariff for the best interests of the whole country; it means to take a sponge and wipe out the whole system. Free trade does not mean a tariff for revenue only any more than it means a tariff for protection; it means no revenue at all by virtue of a tariff. It means direct taxation to the amount of the $200,000,000 now collected on imports and paid into the Treasury for the support of the Government. It means an army of tax-gatherers among the people, from house to house, assessing and collecting this enormous amount.

With custom-houses abolished and custom duties repealed, for that and that only is free trade, a deficiency of two hundred millions will at once occur in the public revenues. How is it to be made up? The wisdom of man can devise no other mode than that of direct taxation. There are thirty-eight States in the American Union, and it will be seen at a glance that in averaging this deficiency among them each one, great and small, would have for its share $5,263,157 to pay.

If, however, the amount was raised from the States in proportion to their rank in wealth and resources, Indiana being far above an average State, her people would have not less than eight and perhaps ten millions of it to furnish annually to the tax-gatherer for the Federal Treasury. There is no escape whatever from this conclusion. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] has presented this point so forcibly and well that I cannot forbear reading from him. In his speech here, March 27, he said:

> How do you propose to collect this $200,000,000? There are but two modes that I am aware of. One is a direct tax upon the people, the other is collect it upon imports. Which will we choose? I have heard no Senator on this side who has discussed what might be termed the free-trade side of the question propose to raise it by a direct tax. What would it amount to? We have thirty-eight States. Take my own State, Georgia; say it is an average State. If $200,000,000 should be raised by direct taxation, Georgia must raise each year in addition to what is now raised, by the collection of internal revenue and State tax, a sum amounting to over $5,000,000. Her people must submit to the present State tax, school tax, county tax, corporate tax, and all the taxes now collected which they consider burdensome, and we must add to that, if we are to collect it by a direct tax, more than $5,000,000 a year, which would be about four times as much as we now raise by taxation added.
> I take it for granted no Senator on this floor representing any one of the States will advocate that course for the collection of all our Federal revenue. If he does, my opinion is that he will find a large proportion of his constituents differing in opinion with him. Then how do we propose to collect it? We must collect it as heretofore, by levying a tariff upon imports. The addition of about five and a quarter millions a year to the internal revenue paid in cash by the people of Georgia for Federal purposes would knock all the poetry out of the able free-trade speeches to which we have listened with so much interest.

And again, further on in the same speech, that Senator with great pertinency observed:

> Some of the Senators whose arguments seem to look in the direction of free trade point out to the planters and farmers of this country the advantages of free trade, and tell them as the law now stands they pay a heavy per cent. on the imported goods purchased by them, and grow eloquent about the amount of money they would save on the goods purchased by them if there were no tariff. But I have noticed that no one of them has told the people how much direct tax they would be compelled to pay on their lands and all their other property to raise the $200,000,000 annually which is necessary to meet the demands on the Federal Treasury and which must be raised by a direct tax if it is not collected by a tariff. They forget to tell the people of Georgia, Tennessee, Kentucky, Alabama, and other States how much of the $200,000,000 direct tax would fall to their share if there were no tax on imports.

Nor have the people of Indiana been informed by those who talk as if they were in favor of free trade concerning the eight or ten millions of dollars which they would have to pay annually under a system of direct taxation if all tariff laws were repealed and free trade actually established. I submit the matter to their careful and earnest consideration. I think they will decide in favor of a tariff which will do two things, raise revenue, and, as an inevitable incident, foster and protect their incipient and growing manufactories.

To those who say they would raise revenue by a tariff, and in the same breath denounce protection, I reply that the two go together with a certainty and infallibility as absolute as the laws of nature which combine the light and heat of the sun. You can no more collect a duty on an imported article for revenue purposes without protecting the manufacture of that article in this country from foreign competition, to the extent of the duty so collected, than you can walk abroad in the clear, unclouded noon-day and not be followed by your shadow on the ground. This is the first lesson, the very alphabet of this whole question, and he who would be a teacher on the subject of the tariff must know it by heart.

But there yet remains another outstanding question which I desire to notice and to settle by authority at this time. It is not so important to be in harmony with the history and the principles of the party to which you belong as it is to be right, but it is a great comfort to be able to show that you are both. I propose to submit to the popular judgment whether the views I have advanced are orthodox or heterodox, coming from one who has devoted his life thus far, and who expects to devote what remains, to the principles and organization of the Democratic party.

Sir, there is a circumstance of great interest on this question, connected with the history of Indiana, showing that her people received at an early day the teachings of one who spoke while living, and who stills speaks from his grave, with more power than any other party leader in American history.

In 1828 General Jackson was a second time before the American people a candidate for their highest office, and party spirit was high and fierce. On the 22d day of January of that year, the Legislature of Indiana being in session, the senate branch of that body passed the following inquisitive preamble and resolution:

> Whereas the friends of General Jackson in the Western States advocate his election to the Presidency of the United States on the ground of his being friendly to internal improvements and the advocate of a judicious tariff for the protection of American manufactures; and whereas the friends of the same distinguished individual in Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi advocate his claims to the first office in the nation on account of his opposition to the above measures or systems of policy: Therefore, for the purpose of enabling the citizens of Indiana to ascertain what are the real sentiments of General Jackson, and to give them an opportunity to vote understandingly at the next Presidential election in reference to these great interests,
> Resolved by the senate, That his excellency the governor be requested to address a respectful letter to General Andrew Jackson, inviting him to state explicitly whether he favors that construction of the Constitution of the United States which authorizes Congress to appropriate money for the purpose of making internal improvements in the several States, and whether he is in favor of such a system of protective duties for the benefit of American manufactures as will, in all cases where the raw material and the ability to manufacture it exist in our country, secure the patronage of our own manufactures to the exclusion of those of foreign countries, and whether, if elected President of the United States, he will, in his public capacity, recommend, foster, and support the American system.

In accordance with this resolution the governor of the State communicated with General Jackson, and in due time received the following bold and direct answer:

> HERMITAGE, February 28, 1828.
> SIR: I have had the honor to receive your excellency's letter of the 30th ultimo, inclosing resolutions of the senate of Indiana adopted, as it appears, with a view of ascertaining my opinions on certain political topics. The respect which I entertain for the executive and senate of your State excludes from my mind the idea that an unfriendly disposition dictated the interrogatories which are proposed. But I will confess my regret at being forced by this sentiment to depart in the smallest degree from that determination on which I have always acted. Not, sir, that I would wish to conceal my opinions from the people upon any political or national subject; but as they were in various ways promulgated in 1824, I am apprehensive that my appearance before the public at this time may be attributed, as has already been the case, to improper motives.
> With these remarks I pray you, sir, respectfully to state to the senate of Indiana that my opinions at present are precisely what they were in 1823 and 1824, when they were communicated by letter to Dr. Coleman, of Virginia, and when I voted for the present tariff and appropriations for internal improvements. As that letter was written at a time when the divisions of sentiment on this subject were as strongly marked as they now are in relation both to the expediency and constitutionality of the system, it is inclosed herein; and I beg the favor of your excellency to consider it a part of this communication. The occasion out of which it arose was embraced with a hope of preventing any doubt, misconstruction, or necessity for further inquiry respecting my opinions on the subject to which you refer; particularly in those States which you have designated as cherishing a policy at variance with your own. To preserve our invaluable Constitution and be prepared to repel the invasion of a foreign foe by the practice of economy and the cultivation within ourselves of the means of national defense and independence should be, it seems to me, the leading objects of any system which aspires to the name of "American," and of every prudent administration of our Government.
> I have the honor to be, very respectfully,
> ANDREW JACKSON.

And now, sir, what were the principles contained in the Coleman letter transmitted by General Jackson to the governor of Indiana as his platform on the subject of the tariff, and on which he had freely staked his political fortunes in 1824 and again did so in 1828? To fully understand its great weight and import it is necessary to observe the letter to which it was an answer. In April, 1824, Dr. L. H. Coleman, a gentleman of prominence and a member of the Virginia Assembly, addressed General Jackson the following communication:

> DEAR SIR: Being one of the six members of the Virginia Assembly in caucus last winter who voted for you as a fit and proper person to be supported by the people of the State for the Presidency of the United States, and having since heard that you are in favor of the "protecting-duty policy," I take the liberty of desiring you to inform me whether you intend voting for the tariff bill now before Congress. I wish to have information on the subject as soon as your convenience will permit, that I may answer the Fredericksburgh committee, who invite my co-operation in getting up a ticket for the hero of New Orleans. In this county you have many friends, and some think your support will be better in Petersburgh than in any of the contiguous counties. We are anti-tariff here; and candor requires me to say that should you be the advocate of a measure to which our interest is evidently opposed, the zeal with which you have been hitherto supported will be relaxed.
> I am, &c.,
> L. H. COLEMAN.

If Jackson had been an ordinary man this would have been a most trying letter for him to answer. It came from one of his six friends in the Virginia Legislature; it contained views on the tariff antagonistic to his own; it tempted the ambition of the hero of New Orleans with the prospect of success; and it closed with the assurance that his support would be relaxed and fail if his answer was unsatisfactory. Yet how grandly he at once responded. I will read his immortal letter:

WASHINGTON CITY, April 26, 1824.

SIR: I have had the honor this day to receive your letter of the 21st instant, and with candor shall reply to it. * * * You ask me my opinion on the tariff. I answer that I am in favor of a judicious examination and revision of it; and so far as the tariff before us embraces the design of fostering, protecting, and preserving within ourselves the means of national defense and independence, particularly in a state of war, I would advocate and support it. The experience of the late war ought to teach us a lesson, and one never to be forgotten.

Heaven smiled upon and gave us liberty and independence. That same Providence has blessed us with the means of national independence and national defense. If we omit or refuse to use the gifts which He has extended to us we deserve not the continuation of His blessings. He has filled our mountains and our plains with minerals, with lead, iron, and copper, and given us a climate and soil for the growing of hemp and wool.

These being the grand materials of our national defense, they ought to have extended to them adequate and fair protection, that our own manufactories and laborers may be placed on a fair competition with those of Europe, and that we may have within our own country a supply of those leading and important articles so essential to war.

Beyond this I look at the tariff with an eye to the proper distribution of labor and revenue, and with a view to discharge our national debt. I am one of those who do not believe that a national debt is a national blessing, but rather a curse to a republic, inasmuch as it is calculated to raise around the Administration a moneyed aristocracy dangerous to the liberties of the country.

This tariff, I mean a judicious one, possesses more fanciful than real dangers. I will ask what is the real situation of the agriculturist? Where has the American farmer a market for his surplus products? Except for cotton he has neither a foreign nor a home market. Does not this clearly prove, when there is no market either at home or abroad, that there is too much labor employed in agriculture, and that the channels of labor should be multiplied? Common sense points out at once the remedy. Draw from agriculture the superabundant labor, employ it in mechanism and manufactures, thereby creating a home market for your breadstuffs and distributing labor to a most profitable account, and benefits to the country will result.

Take from agriculture in the United States 600,000 men, women, and children, and you at once give a home market for more breadstuffs than all Europe now furnishes us. In short, sir, we have been too long subject to the policy of the British merchants. It is time we should become a little more Americanized, and instead of feeding the paupers and laborers of Europe, feed our own, or else in a short time, by continuing our present policy, we shall all be paupers ourselves.

It is therefore my opinion that a careful tariff is much wanted to pay our national debt and afford us the means of that defense within ourselves on which the safety and liberty of our country depend, and last, though not least, give a proper distribution to our labor, which must prove beneficial to the happiness, independence, and wealth of the community. * * *

I have presented you my opinions freely, because I am without concealment, and should indeed despise myself if I could believe myself capable of acquiring the confidence of any by means so ignoble.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ANDREW JACKSON.

Such, Mr. President, were the views of Andrew Jackson, communicated directly to the people of Indiana, and on which that people rallied to his cause. If these views were applicable to the interests of Indiana at that time, they are a thousandfold more so now. In 1828 her manufacturing industries and investments were hardly sufficient to leave a trace in the statistics of the country. Now the principles of Jackson encourage, foster, and protect hundreds of millions in active capital and production as well as hundreds of thousands of wage laborers and those dependent on them within the borders of that great State. The principles of Jackson applied to the whole country also furnish a revenue for the support of the Government, thus enabling the people to escape the unbearable curse of direct taxation and the devouring hordes of tax-gatherers.

But the letter just read admits of but little if any comment; it is a commentary of wisdom in itself. It ought to be published everywhere in letters of living light as the true statesmanship of the tariff question. I will venture to hope that it will be printed in every newspaper in Indiana as a special message from General Jackson to the fathers of the present generation of thinkers and workers. It carries with it grave instruction, and a solemn emphasis on the issue in which all are so much interested. The march of events and the development of the country prove its consummate wisdom and its far-reaching foresight.

It is hardly necessary to say that the principles announced by Andrew Jackson while a candidate for the suffrages of the American people governed his conduct in the administration of public affairs after he became President. In fact he advanced rather than receded in his views as to the power and the obligation of the Government to encourage and protect its domestic industries. The necessity of protective legislation other than as an undeniable, ever-present, ever-continuing, and indissoluble incident to every tariff known to the comprehension of sane men is not now insisted on by any considerable number of people.

The incidental protection which attends forever and under all circumstances upon every kind of tariff ever known upon earth is all that is now claimed in Pennsylvania, or anywhere else, and is sufficient, when properly adjusted by the law-making power, to promote and care for all the industries involved. But it will be seen from the second annual message of General Jackson, as President, delivered December 7, 1830, that he believed in and asserted the constitutional right of the Government, whenever its interests of peace or war demanded, to legislate directly for the protection of its home industries as against the policy, the ambition, and the hostile purposes of foreign nations. I will ask the Clerk to read that part of the message to which I refer.

The Clerk read as follows:

The object of the tariff is objected to by some as unconstitutional; and it is considered by almost all as defective in many of its parts. The power to impose duties on imports originally belonged to the several States. The right to adjust those duties with a view to the encouragement of domestic branches of industry is so completely identical with that power that it is difficult to suppose the existence of the one without the other. The States have delegated their whole authority over imports to the General Government without limitation or restriction, saving the very inconsiderable reservation relating to their inspection laws. This authority having thus entirely passed from the States, the right to exercise it for the purpose of protection does not exist in them, and consequently if it be not possessed by the General Government it must be extinct.

Our political system would thus present the anomaly of a people stripped of the right to foster their own industry and to counteract the most selfish and destructive policy which might be adopted by foreign nations. This surely cannot be the case; this indispensable power thus surrendered by the States must be within the scope of the authority on the subject expressly delegated to Congress. In this conclusion I am confirmed as well by the opinions of Presidents Washington, Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe, who have each repeatedly recommended the exercise of this right under the Constitution, as by the uniform practice of Congress, the continued acquiescence of the States, and the general understanding of the people.

Mr. VOORHEES. Sir, I might easily consume the day in reading from the fathers whose names are cited by Jackson in support of his position on this great question. The authority of their teaching is all one way. Their opinions are simply links in a strong and harmonious chain of argument, from the very beginning of the Government, in favor of so shaping the collection of revenue under a tariff as to encourage home manufactories and protect them from competition with the low wages and pauper labor of Europe. The first law ever framed in this Government on the subject of a tariff, enacted July 4, 1789, by the very men who had just completed the Constitution itself, was prefaced by the following preamble:

Whereas, it is necessary for the support of Government, for the discharge of the debts of the United States, and the encouragement and protection of manufactures, that duties be laid on goods, wares, and merchandise.

Thus explicitly declaring the twofold nature, the revenue and the protective features, which conjoin in every piece of tariff legislation ever devised by human skill. I will not dwell, however, in these distant regions of the past; I am content to rely on the principles of the Democratic party as enunciated in our own day and generation. There are a number of Senators on this floor who voted for James K. Polk for President in 1844. He carried Pennsylvania over Henry Clay, the author of the American system, and in his inaugural address we find the reason why he was able to do so. He said:

I have heretofore declared to my fellow-citizens that, in my judgment, it is the duty of the Government to extend, as far as it may be practicable to do so, by its revenue laws and all other means within its power, fair and just protection to all the great interests of the whole Union, embracing agriculture, manufactures, the mechanic arts, commerce, and navigation.

He believed that a tariff should have first in view the collection of revenue, but he declared that in adjusting the details of such a tariff he was in favor of such "discriminating duties as would produce the revenue needed and, at the same time, afford reasonable incidental protection to our home industry." In his first annual message to Congress he thus perspicuously points out the inevitable conjunction between revenue and protection and the principles by which both objects can be attained. I quote his language, as follows:

It becomes important to understand distinctly what is meant by a revenue standard, the maximum of which should not be exceeded in the rates of duty imposed. It is conceded, and experience proves, that duties may be laid so high as to diminish or prohibit altogether the importation of any given article, and thereby lessen or destroy the revenue which at lower rates would be derived from its importation. Such duties exceed the revenue rates, and are not imposed to raise money for the support of the Government.

If Congress levy a duty for revenue of 1 per cent. on a given article it will produce a given amount of money to the Treasury, and will incidentally and necessarily afford protection or advantage to the amount of 1 per cent. to the home-manufacturer of a similar or like article over the importer. If the duty be raised to 10 per cent. it will produce a greater amount of money and afford greater protection. If it be still raised to 20, 25, or 30 per cent., and if, as it is raised, the revenue derived from it is found to be increased, the protection or advantage will also be increased; but if it be raised to 31 per cent., and it is found that the revenue produced at that rate is less than at 30 per cent., it ceases to be a revenue duty.

But why should I look further back into the past than the last Presidential election for a correct interpretation of Democratic principles on this question? The able and intrepid leader of the Democratic party in 1880 spoke with no uncertain voice, and his words are full of wisdom. I indorsed the position of General Hancock then, and I indorse it now. Here is his letter, which I read now with my full and absolute approval:

GOVERNOR'S ISLAND, NEW YORK, October 12, 1880.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: I have received your favor of the 11th instant. In my letter of acceptance I expressed my full sympathy with our American industries. I thought I spoke plainly enough to satisfy our Jersey friends regarding my tariff views. I am too sound an American to advocate any departure from the general features of a policy that has been largely instrumental in building up our industries and keeping Americans from the competition of the underpaid labor of Europe.

If we intend to remain honest and pay the public debt, as good people of all parties do, and if we mean to administer the functions of government, then we must raise revenue in some way or other.

With a reunited and harmonious country we shall certainly in time pay off the public debt; but the necessity of raising money for the administration of law will continue as long as human nature lasts. All parties agree that the best way for us to raise revenue is largely by the tariff; so far as we are concerned, therefore, all talk about "free trade" is folly. But the tariff question will probably be treated with justice to all of our interests and people by some such bill as Eaton's.

I believe that a commission of intelligent experts, representing both the Government and American industries, will suggest tariff measures that will relieve us of any crudities and inconsistencies existing in our present laws, and confirm to us a system which will be judicious, just, harmonious, and incidentally protective as well as stable in its effects.

I am, very truly, yours,

WINFIELD S. HANCOCK.

Hon. THEO. F. RANDOLPH,
Morristown, New Jersey.

Sir, had this sound and sensible letter been written three weeks earlier and time been given for its circulation in advance of the October election in Indiana Hancock would have been chosen President and American history been far differently recorded. The past is no longer within our reach; it is gone forever; but the future lies before us full of bright promise and assured victory if we adhere to the doctrines of the fathers of the Constitution, to the principles of Jackson, Polk, and Hancock.

Mr. President, in the views which I have advanced to-day I have not spoken for the promotion of any one interest in this country at the expense of another; "justice and sound policy forbid the Federal Government to foster one branch of industry to the detriment of another, or to cherish the interests of one portion to the injury of another portion of our common country;" but I deny that such results ever have or ever will follow the principles I entertain and in support of which I have cited the most illustrious names in American history.

I deny that the intelligent and honest application of these principles to American legislation has ever burdened or oppressed any class of labor or production; on the contrary, laws made pursuant to these principles have encouraged, fostered, and protected every field of toil and enterprise of every description in all this broad land. In the farmer I recognize the first and most potent factor in the progress of the world; he feeds the human family; he equips the commerce of the seas; he nourishes the traffic of great cities, and without him the earth would lay aside its robes of civilization and resume its savage garb. No law should be enacted, no policy adopted by any nation on the globe without primary reference to his interests, for on his interests all others depend. But, in the development of the resources of the country, in the diversified and multiplied channels of labor, in the increase and prosperity of home, neighborhood, markets, in the subsistence of growing and industrial populations, who can fail to see that the prosperity of the farmer is more deeply involved than that of any other citizen?

In 1816 Thomas Jefferson, himself a farmer, and the great affirmative, aggressive apostle of Democratic faith, exclaimed:

We must now place our manufacturers by the side of the agriculturists.

I repeat that statement now in the interest of both classes. This point no longer needs much argument. The farmer of Indiana is not mistaken as to its true bearing when he sees, as he does every day, long trains of cars laden with the iron ores of the mountains of Missouri and the regions of Lake Superior wending their way to the great block coal-fields of his State, to be manufactured into the best iron in the world. He knows that the opening of every coal mine, of every blast furnace, of every rolling-mill, every nail factory, every stove foundry, every stone quarry, and every establishment for the manufacture of glass, implements of husbandry, furniture, as well as woolen and cotton goods, enhance the value of every acre he owns, and create a demand, almost at his door, for what he has to sell. It is true that he pays a tax for the support of the Government in the purchase of articles manufactured abroad which have paid duty, and on articles of home manufacture which are protected to the extent of that duty, but he knows that he would have to pay the same and a heavier tax under a system of direct taxation, without any compensating advantages if the policy of free trade prevailed.

There are twenty-seven members of the other branch of Congress from the State of Pennsylvania, and many of them represent purely agricultural districts with no manufacturing interests in them. Why are they all of one mind on the subject of the tariff? Why do they all vote together, without reference to party politics, when that question arises? Because they have seen in the development of their vast manufacturing interests the promotion and welfare of every other interest in their State. Experience teaches better than theory; practical results are of more value than the conclusions of the most skillful doctrinaires. Sensible people do not revolt against results which show themselves in widespread prosperity and general happiness.

Sir, there is a future near at hand for this country by the side of which the brightest pages of human history will grow dim. We are traveling swift and far toward a condition of complete national independence, power, and glory such as the eye of man hath not seen, nor his mind hitherto conceived. This Republic, like the lion's whelp, couched between two oceans, by the side of mighty lakes and rivers, in deep, broad valleys, and on the slopes of teeming mountains, has gone up from her prey; that prey, the wealth of the physical world, the spoils of nature's universe, conquered to her use, not in blood and pain, but by the skill and enterprise of her people in the arts of peace.

But in the fulfillment of that career to which the American people have been called there are changes just before us which will fill the world with wonder and the habitations of men with additional blessings. It has been said and sung through generations that westward the star of empire takes its way; not the empire of force, but of development, of thought, of industry, and of human progress. The course of that star in this country points now in another direction. I see it hovering over the mountains and the plains of the South, the herald of a new and marvelous birth in all that region of richer resources than the globe anywhere else contains.

I am not here to-day to discuss the policies of the South in the past, but I invoke for her now a policy which will cause her future to shine with a strength, an independence, and a renown such as she herself never dreamed of in her most ambitious moods. That development of the South, of which she is capable, is but scarcely begun. Ninety-five per cent. of her gigantic natural wealth yet sleeps the sleep of ages, undisturbed by the enterprise of man.

Let us cross the Potomac and stand for a few moments together on the soil of Virginia; Virginia now broken in fortune, her credit gone, her name coupled with financial dishonor, her securities hawked in the markets at home and abroad without value; Virginia, once so honored, now fallen so low. And yet Virginia is rich enough this hour in all that is most desired by this great age and in all that is most useful in human advancement to pay not only her own debt but the national debt besides. Wiley, in his extensive and valuable treatise on the iron-ore regions of the United States, gives his approval to the startling statement that—

Pennsylvania, rich as she is, is poor in iron ores as compared with Virginia.

The hand of nature gave to Virginia a dower so rich that even Pennsylvania, her great and opulent sister, is poor in the comparison. Coal and all other ingredients are also there in profusion for the development of her untold wealth. Will not her people reach forth their hands and appropriate these treasures? When they do the dust of humiliation will be wiped from her brow, and her escutcheon will blaze with a stronger light than ever before.

We may wander through the mountains of West Virginia; explore the vast iron and coal deposits of Eastern Kentucky, as well as the valuable coal measures in her western borders; we may follow—

That great iron belt of the United States which, beginning in New York, runs through Pennsylvania, furnishing many of the largest furnaces of that State with their stock; crosses Maryland; passes through the entire width of Virginia; constitutes the iron region of East Tennessee, Western North Carolina, and Northwestern Georgia, and ends in the unparalleled and magnificent deposits of Alabama—

We may inspect the rich iron and coal beds of Arkansas and Missouri; and everywhere after passing into the Southern States we find the same prodigious bounties of nature awaiting the touch of capital, skill, and industry to call them forth. There is nothing lacking within their borders to tempt the cupidity and excite the exertions of man. The Spaniard once landed there in quest of gold, but they are richer than any gold-bearing region in all the realms of history. Their unparalleled cotton-fields speak for themselves; that beauteous and resplendent belt, whose tinted bloom extends from Eastern North Carolina to Western Texas, makes its own argument in behalf of a policy which will plant the manufactory in the midst of the crop; which will pay to the producer, instead of to railroads or ships, the cost of transportation to the mills of New England or of Old England; which will keep all the profits, both of production and of manufacture, at home; which will make the Southern people self-reliant and independent; which will adorn their water-courses, their bays, and their harbors with growing towns and aspiring cities; which will create a market in his own neighborhood for everything the planter has to sell; which will give a wider range of employment to the rising generations of both races without forcing them all into the fields; which will develop skill, call forth inventive genius, elevate, refine, and better the condition of all classes.

Such is the policy for which I contend, and such the results I foresee, if it is adopted and pursued in good faith for the encouragement and protection of every interest of the people alike. I speak not for monopolies nor jobs; let them all be weeded out of our tariff legislation; but in the light of the past and the promises of the future I believe the principles I have asserted, if judiciously and with fairness applied, will make the American Republic, in all its extended parts, South, North, East, and West, the wonder and the glory of the ages; the full, abundant home for hundreds of millions of prosperous, united, happy people.

I speak not in support of a tariff for revenue only, nor of a tariff for protection only, but in support of a tariff which collects the necessary revenue, and at the same time, to the extent of that revenue, extends protection, with discriminating justice, to American manufactories. By virtue of this doctrine, indorsed and enforced by the wisest minds in our history, a great but only partial development of our common country has been achieved; but the work which remains to be done will now follow. The day is not distant when the mountains and the plains of the South will flame with blast-furnaces and rolling-mills; when Pittsburghs and Birminghams will raise their smoky towers in Virginia, Tennessee, Georgia, and Alabama; when the rugged ranges in eastern Kentucky will pour forth such a stream of wealth as to divert attention from even her own beautiful blue-grass garden; when the whole South, responding to wise legislation and to the calls of duty, will be seen moving forward and keeping even pace with the enterprise and wealth of the North.

Sir, when that day comes our cup of blessings will be full; the voice of sectional contention will be hushed; the interests of the country will be harmonious; States will strive no more with each other, except in the shining pathways which lead to greatness; nor will they differ any more, except as "one star differeth from another star in glory."

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] desires to take the floor on the tariff question for to-morrow.

Mr. BAYARD. Yes, sir; I wish to be heard on this bill, and I may as well get the floor now for to-morrow.

Mr. MORRILL. I will also give notice that I shall not ask the Senate to consider the tax bill until two o'clock to-morrow, in order to give Senators an opportunity for bills on the Calendar until that hour.

Mr. FRYE. I do not know that the rule requires notice to be given that a motion will be made to strike out, but I desire to give notice that I shall move, when it is reached, to strike out, in section 4, line 1, the words "on and after the first day of October 1882," and also all of section 4, after the word "act," in line 11.

Mr. HALE. I gave notice to-day of an amendment to the same effect as this amendment, I will inform my colleague.

Mr. FERRY. There is no necessity of giving any notice of any amendment to the pending bill. That requirement simply applies to appropriation bills.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I renew my motion for an executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and thirty minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at six o'clock and twenty-five minutes, p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 13, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REPORT OF SURGEON-GENERAL OF THE NAVY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following Senate concurrent resolution; which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed for the use of the Navy Department 1,000 copies of the report of the Surgeon-General of the Navy.

THOMAS M. GRANVILLE.

Mr. FORD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read and referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives to the Clerk of the House the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the funeral and other expenses contracted by the sickness and death of Thomas M. Granville, late an employé in the House folding-room; and there shall also be paid out of the contingent fund of the House by the Clerk of the House to the widow of deceased twelve months' pay from the date of his death, subject to the approval of the Committee on Accounts.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. KASSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The pending question was on the following amendment, offered by Mr. BLACKBURN:

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay to the officers and employés of the House of Representatives borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of July, 1882, one month's extra pay at the compensation then paid them by law, which sum shall be immediately available.

Mr. WILSON. On yesterday I desired, in discussing the proposition to strike out the paragraph from line 2025 to line 2031, inclusive, to ask the privilege to print some additional remarks. I now submit that request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. WILSON.] The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is recognized. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was merely a formal amendment. The House is aware of the facts mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] of the Committee on Appropriations, the other day, that the officers and employés of the House are paid better and higher salaries than any employés of the Government outside of the Capitol. The monthly pay-roll of the House, covered by the amendment pending, independent of the Capitol police, is $34,718.47; and it is therefore proposed by the amendment to pay as extra compensation to these employés this sum of $34,718.47 to the exclusion of all other employés of the Government, although it is conceded, as I remarked, that the compensation we pay to the officers and employés of the House is greater than the compensation paid to any of the employés of the Government outside of the Capitol.

This $34,718.47, sir, is a naked gratuity, without even a pretense of consideration, and I inquire of this committee by what authority they take money out of the public Treasury to give to any person as gratuity? The gentlemen around us, the officers and employés of the House, are pleasant gentlemen. I have received innumerable courtesies from them, and feel kindly toward them, and would do them, individually and collectively, any act of kindness in my power; but what right have we to discriminate in their favor because they are our personal friends by granting them a gratuity out of the public Treasury?

This House commenced this business some years ago, and having adopted a proposition to pay the employés of the House back pay equal to a month's pay concluded to extend it one step further and passed an amendment to pay each member of the House and Senate the sum of $5,000 as a gratuity. Then the public indignation burst forth and the Republican ascendency in the House was swept away. Yet we are now proposing to do the same thing, to the extent of the officers and employés of the House, which met with such universal censure and condemnation, taking money from the public Treasury to the amount of $34,718.47 and give it to our friends and favorites whom we meet every day. What right have we to be generous at the expense of the public Treasury, and where is the limit of such generosity? By what authority can we do this? I say it is not only a wrongful and unauthorized appropriation of the public money, without any possible justification, but it is a usurpation of power on the part of the House, to take money drawn from the labor of the country by taxation and appropriate it according to our own unrestrained will in making gifts to our friends and favorites.

That is not the Democratic doctrine. Democratic principle denies the right of Congress to give away the public treasure. I do not propose to follow the example of the Republican party which culminated in the back-pay law of 1873. I propose to follow the Democratic doctrine that not a dollar of money shall be taken from the public Treasury except for the wants and necessities of the Government. You are assuming the right here to take money from the public Treasury and to give it as a mere gratuity to your friends and favorites. Every one of these officers and employés has been paid his monthly salary in full, and now you propose to pay them $34,718.47 more. I cannot conscientiously concur in this, and as a Democrat I deny your right to do it, and I do not intend even by silence to concur in your further swelling these enormous appropriation bills and then go before my constituents and denounce the extravagance of the majority of this House. I will at least to the extent of my vote and my voice resist the enlargement of these enormous bills which are depleting the Treasury.

Mr. WILSON. Before the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] takes his seat I desire to ask him whether or not it has been the habit of the House for many years, almost for a time to which the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, to accord to its employés this extra compensation?

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that it has not been.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me answer the gentleman. I say this is not a new proposition. I say it was enacted into law not once only but twice during the Forty-sixth Congress. I say that the present Speaker of this House, while a member of the minority side of the Forty-sixth Congress, offered the very proposition which I have now offered, and the majority side accepted it and the Democratic employés of the House took it. That was done twice in that Congress.

I say further—and in that I but repeat what I said yesterday when I submitted this proposition—that I considered it simply an act of decency; that we had made no protest when we were in the majority against receiving for our own employés the very identical compensation which this amendment proposes; and I did not intend to let this bill go through without offering it back to the other side.

Mr. VALENTINE. Permit me to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to the fact that during the present session of Congress one month's extra pay was voted to the Democratic employés of this House going out of office.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It was.

Mr. VALENTINE. And the gentleman from Indiana made no objection to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think you will find that he did. He never concurred in this giving away the money of the Government.

Mr. VALENTINE. He sat silent in his seat.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] and say yes, that was done in this Congress. One word more. This is the only method open to this House to do anything toward equalizing the salaries of the officers of the two Houses.

Up to the 1st day of July of this year this House had been in session three hundred and twenty-five hours more than had the Senate, or sixty-five working days of five hours each. Of the RECORD of proceedings and debates up to the 1st day of July of this year this House for this session of Congress, as compared with that of the Senate, had 3,000 columns more of the RECORD than the debates and proceedings of the Senate amounted to, and yet we all know that a disproportionate salary is paid to every employé of the Senate as against the employés of the House.

Mr. DUNN. Cannot that of the House employés be increased?

Mr. BLACKBURN. You cannot get it done. The Senate insists that it shall regulate the pay of its own employés and will not allow it to be reduced, and the House Committee on Appropriations has never yet proposed to increase the compensation of the employés of the House.

Mr. DUNN. They can do it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. This is the only practicable method, and is but a pittance toward equalizing the salaries of disproportionately paid and worked officers and employés. It is sanctioned by precedent. Having been myself a member of the majority party in this House that became the recipient of it, I will stand here and go before the country on the proposition to return now the civility to the other side. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLER. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment and an amendment to an amendment are already pending and no further amendment is in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mine was simply a formal amendment and I withdrew it.

Mr. MILLER. I now move to amend by inserting "4th day of July" instead of "1st day of July."

Mr. BLACKBURN. You mean June 15.

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman will accept June 15, I will substitute that date.

Mr. BLACKBURN. According to my information the substitution of that date will have no effect except to cover the cases of three very worthy men. It will simply make a difference of three men who were on the rolls on the 15th day of June and were not on the rolls on the 1st day of July. I do not care about the date particularly, but I drew my proposition so as to make it comport with the fiscal year.

Mr. MILLER. I hope all this will not come out of my five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. It will.

Mr. MILLER. My motion is to substitute "4th day of July" for the "1st day of July." As the proposition now stands, three persons who were temporarily on the roll but for four days, and were acting as substitutes for three regular employés of the House, will receive this extra compensation, instead of the three regular employés of the House, who have served every day since the 5th day of December last. I think the amendment should be agreed to, and I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will accept it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is then upon the amendment as modified.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of saying that I regret very much this irregular mode of proceeding. I want to date it back to the Forty-sixth Congress. It was done by this House in the Forty-sixth Congress over the heads of some of us who had charge of the appropriation bills.

It is a very ungracious thing for any man to say anything in this House on a subject of this kind, because we are constantly coming in contact with our employés, and the courtesies existing between the employés and the members of this House are very gracious, and they ought not to be disturbed. Few of us like in any way to disturb them or to say anything that will mar them in any way.

But in the Forty-sixth Congress the proposition was presented, as members of that Congress will recollect, for the purpose of equalizing the salaries of the Senate and House employés. In general, the salaries of the Senate employés are much greater than the salaries of House employés doing similar service. This House knows how active, how anxious, how strenuous the Committee on Appropriations was at that time to reach some kind of a compromise with the Senate; and the chairman of the Senate committee agreed that if we would waive the question for the time being, that committee would initiate proceedings in the Senate so that in the following session a compromise might be effected and the salaries equalized. But they failed to do that, stating as a reason for failure to comply with their promise that the Senate absolutely refused to back them.

When the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was reported by myself to the House two years ago efforts were made, as will be remembered, to increase the salaries of various employés of the House, and I stood here and made points of order against every solitary increase. When a proposition was made to increase the salaries of the clerks at the desk in the House—the reading clerks, tally clerk, and journal clerk, five in number—I made the point of order that the proposition was contrary to law. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] who was then in the chair, sustained the point of order tentatively, momentarily; and when some disturbance was made in the House about it, he submitted the question, as the gentleman now occupying the chair submits most of the points of order, to the House. There is no doubt that this House is a good judge of points of order when it comes to vote. The question was submitted, and the House voted that I had not made my point in time; so the increase for three of the clerks went in, and the other two followed as a matter of course. Their salaries stand to-day at $3,000, an increase of $500; and they are higher to-day than any salaries in the Senate for the performance of corresponding duties. Now the proposition of my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] in the liberality and generosity of his heart (and I confess I sympathize with him) is to increase by this amendment the salaries of these five clerks as well as the others. Is that right? I put the question, is it right?

I rose only to make these remarks and to say that this question of equalizing the salaries of Senate and House employés is now in conference between the two Houses.

To be candid, I am afraid that no satisfactory conclusion will be reached. For myself, in order to settle this question, I am willing, contrary to my convictions heretofore, to sign a report equalizing these salaries, putting up the salaries of some of the employés of the House, reducing possibly the salaries of other House employés, and making a reduction in the cases of many of the Senate employés, while possibly it might put up a few. Although this would be an increase of the salaries of a large portion of the employés of the House, (while in other cases there would be a reduction,) I am willing to settle this question in this mode to get away from the present method of legislation. I admit the force of the remark made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] a moment ago——

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment, as the Chair understands, is withdrawn. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] as modified.

Mr. HISCOCK. Has the amendment proposing to insert two months instead of one been withdrawn?

The CHAIRMAN. It has. The amendment stands now as modified upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MILLER.]

Mr. HISCOCK. Fixing as the time the 15th of June?

The CHAIRMAN. The 4th of July.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to offer an amendment; but before doing so I ask that the original proposition as it now stands may be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay to the officers and employés of the House of Representatives borne upon the annual and session rolls on the 4th day of July, 1882, one month's extra pay as the compensation then paid them by law, which sum shall be immediately available.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Was not the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to include the Capitol police adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. It was ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then the aggregate amount of this appropriation is not so large as I have stated it. I move to amend by adding to the amendment the following:

But this appropriation, amounting in the aggregate to $34,718.47, although a gratuity, shall not be subject to any political assessment to aid in the election of any person to office or to a seat in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make a point of order on this.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a limitation upon this appropriation of money.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds in the amendment no limitation on the expenditure, but simply a limitation on the use of the money after it is paid out. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the Chair will submit this question to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is clear upon this point.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire that there may be no mistake. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] and myself agree (and I am inclined to think the Chair agrees with us) that the date named by the gentleman from Pennsylvania by way of amendment was the 15th of June instead of the 4th of July.

The CHAIRMAN. What the gentleman from Pennsylvania offered is open to amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Make it read June 15 instead of July 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the modification is agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is as to whether this proposition will cover that large body of laboring-men employed upon the Capitol grounds who receive comparatively very small compensation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not able to say who are borne on the annual or session rolls, never having had occasion to inquire into the matter, and having no person on either roll.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to add to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided this clause shall not apply to any person who has not been borne on the rolls six months prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that persons who have been placed upon the rolls for a very short time should have this month's extra pay in addition.

Mr. MILLER. I hope that will not be agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not know whether or not that is a proper provision, but I presume my friend from Illinois has offered it on the theory there are quite a number of men employed by the House, or which it is authorized to employ, for the number is daily increasing, who have been placed upon the rolls only for a short time, and that it is not proper they should receive back pay to the full extent of a month's compensation.

I rose for the purpose, however, of specially calling attention to the fact that this proposition does not apply, as I learn now, to any of the employés of the Government who are not receiving from $60 up to $300 per month compensation. The laboring-men around this Capitol receiving $1.25 per day are entirely overlooked, while to those who receive ample salaries and whom we meet daily in pleasant intercourse we are willing to make this gratuity out of the public Treasury. The laboring-men must toil on through the heats of summer without any extra month's pay, while we give it to those who have, as I have stated, ample compensation already.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will modify my amendment and make it three months.

Mr. SPRINGER's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurred on Mr. BLACKBURN's amendment as amended.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 82, noes 10.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. BLACKBURN and Mr. HOLMAN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 122, noes 24.

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Mrs. E. F. Conway, widow of the late Martin F. Conway, for expenses incurred by him in contesting for a seat in the Thirty-sixth Congress, $500.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make a point of order on that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. My point of order is that there is no law authorizing this appropriation of money. I see from the text that the claim is one which accrued in the Thirty-sixth Congress, some twenty-two years ago. It stands upon the footing of ordinary claims against the Government. I know of no law authorizing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to hear the gentleman from Indiana, and the committee will come to order.

Mr. HOLMAN. After the division of the House, and while I was getting to my seat, the preceding paragraph of a similar character was passed by, and I should like to return to that.

Mr. HISCOCK. We would like to understand what it is the gentleman from Indiana is saying.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will resume their seats, and when order is restored the gentleman from Indiana will proceed. [After a pause.] The gentleman from Indiana will now proceed.

Mr. HOLMAN. My point is that if this is a claim at all, and I presume it is, it originated some twenty-two years ago, and is therefore a matter over which the Thirty-sixth Congress had proper and legitimate jurisdiction. There is no law in existence authorizing this appropriation of money.

If the gentleman from New York puts this case upon the ground that the general rule is to be adopted in all former election contests for seats in this House, when it was not the custom to make allowance to the contestant or contestee, we are to go back and make an appropriation therefor, if that is to be the general and absolute rule, then it presents an interesting subject of inquiry on the part of this House, and one manifestly regarded as new legislation. I remember this contest from Kansas very well. I had the honor to be a member of the House at the time, and what surprised me——

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary to debate the merits of the question, but gentlemen must confine themselves to the point of order. If the gentleman from Indiana will distinctly state his point of order the Chair will then hear the other side.

Mr. HOLMAN. My point of order is that there is no law authorizing this appropriation of money, that it is not authorized by any general or specific law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any gentleman wish to be heard on the other side?

Mr. HISCOCK. No.

The CHAIRMAN. This is evidently in the nature of a claim not resting upon any law, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would be glad, Mr. Chairman, if permitted to do so, to reserve the point of order, in order to hear any statement that may be made in reference to this matter, as the facts of the case have passed from my recollection.

Mr. RYAN. If the gentleman will yield I will be glad to explain the circumstances.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman from Kansas allow me to say a word?

Mr. RYAN. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not mean to complain of the ruling of the Chair; but I do mean to say that former Congresses, not once but twice, offered this sum of money to Mr. Conway and he indignantly refused to take it because he said it was a mere pittance, and not what was justly due him from the Government. He was, Mr. Chairman, subsequently unfortunate, lost his reason, and died in an asylum; and the present Committee on Appropriations saw proper to give to his widow, who has been left childless, the money that former Congresses offered to him.

Mr. HASKELL rose.

Mr. RANDALL. There is a law, if the Chair will permit me——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is now informed by the gentleman from Indiana that he will withhold the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I only desire to say that there is a law touching this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not now about to rule upon this question, having already done so, but simply desires, in view of what has now been stated by the gentleman from Indiana, to withdraw his decision also, the point being reserved, and the gentleman from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. RANDALL. The law provides that in cases of contest the sum allowed shall not exceed $2,000.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HASKELL. I shall need all of the time, but yield for a question.

Mr. ATKINS. I only wanted to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that while he states the law correctly, it does not apply here, for the reason that this is a case which occurred prior to the passage of the law. It is an old case, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania will find by looking into it.

Mr. HASKELL. I want to state to the committee the facts in this case, since the point of order has been temporarily withdrawn.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; suspended only.

Mr. HASKELL. Well, it is withdrawn for the purpose of hearing an explanation as to this case. The member of Congress alluded to in this provision of the bill was the first Representative in Congress from the State of Kansas after its admission into the Union. He had a contested-election case, in brief, like other contested-election cases, and incurred expenses in connection with it. Very soon after his term expired or the contest was made he became insane, and for many years was an inmate of Saint Elizabeth's——

Mr. CALKINS. Will the gentleman permit me to make a slight correction? This was not a case of contest between individuals, but it was in the nature of a contest for a seat, and rested upon a question of law as to when the State of Kansas was entitled to admission.

Mr. HASKELL. Very well; I am not making that point. I am merely stating in outline the general features of the case.

But I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that before the claim was pressed to a conclusion, on whatever ground it was based, the man became insane and for many years was an inmate of Saint Elizabeth's Asylum. Recently he died. His widow from the date of his insanity up to the present time has been entirely dependent upon her own exertions for her support. She raised to young manhood two noble boys, and within the last two years she has seen both of them buried from her sight by disease, and just at the time when they had reached that age which would have enabled them to add something to the support of their mother. She has incurred debts which she must pay for the funeral expenses of her only children.

The sum of money designated by this bill is the sum allowed by two committees of this House for the expenses attendant upon Mr. Conway's contest for his seat, and would have been appropriated and paid but for his protest. Now, I want merely to say this, since it adds, as I hope it will, one scintilla of explanation of the equitable features of this case, that during all of his insanity, by the strange vagaries that rest upon the minds of insane people, this old claim formed the chief topic of his conversation, and to those who knew him this fact appealed very strangely to our sympathies as well as to our sense of justice.

I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana, therefore, since there are several of these claims, if he will not withdraw the point of order in this particular case in view of the circumstances which surround it?

Mr. HOLMAN. The facts of that case have now come to my mind, it being refreshed by my colleague from Indiana, [Mr. CALKINS;] and I think it is a reasonable ground for this appropriation. It was not a contest for a seat, but whether or not a man could be recognized as a member of the House until after the admission of the State which he claimed to represent into the Union. He was admitted finally, but not, of course, before the admission of the State. He was here for quite a long time pending the admission of Kansas into the Union, and I think it is a fair and equitable claim upon the Government for the time he was here waiting for his seat. Kansas came in under an enabling act; and while the subject is mentioned here as an appropriation as if it were a contest for a seat, it is really as has been stated by the gentleman from Kansas, and while perhaps the fact is quite immaterial as to the form in which the appropriation should be made, still it might be better to amend the phraseology of the paragraph to conform to the facts.

Mr. RYAN. The statement made by the gentleman from Indiana is quite correct in reference to the facts of this case.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me say one word. This case came before the Committee on Elections of the last Congress. This gentleman was at that time an inmate of the Saint Elizabeth Asylum, near this city, but still not so far off in his reason as not to understand distinctly the nature of his claim. His contest here was for admission, not as against an individual, but for the admission of Kansas into the Union as a State. His claim was for $3,500 for the period from the time of his election to the time when the State was admitted into the Union. When the State was admitted into the Union and he took the oath he drew his pay from that time. But he insisted, having been elected, he was entitled to the $3,500 to cover the period during which he was here before taking his seat, having been elected by the people of his State when the enabling act was submitted to the vote of the people.

I felt a great sympathy for him and his distressed family. He was a man of marked ability when he first came to represent the State of Kansas on this floor. Having lost his reason, and being confined in an asylum for many years, he was unable to attend to the claim; but while still in the asylum he came before our committee, and we were moved by his own statement to make a recommendation in the last Congress of $500. When he came before the committee, and I told him the result of its deliberations, with an indignation worthy of a Roman senator he turned on his heel and walked out of the committee-room, saying he would not accept such a pittance from Congress. He was at that time an inmate of the asylum. This did not change my opinion in regard to his claim; and I hope this will be allowed to his widow.

Mr. HOLMAN. To avoid the effect of establishing a wrong precedent, as we cannot afford to go back and hunt up these cases of contest, I move to amend by striking out the words "in contesting for" and inserting in lieu thereof "before his admission to."

Mr. RYAN. We accept that.

Mr. ATHERTON. As I understand, it was a salary earned which ought to have been paid, although not allowed at that time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

To pay to the legal representatives of the late Hon. Fernando Wood, a member elected to the Forty-seventh Congress, but who died before the time of its organization, $6,000.

To pay the widow and children of the late Hon. Evarts W. Farr, a member-elect to the Forty-seventh Congress, but who died before its organization, $6,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask to submit the amendment which I send to the desk to come in after the paragraph last read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the point of order on the paragraph last read.

The Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. RANDALL, as follows:

To pay to the widow of Carlile P. Patterson, late Superintendent of the Coast Survey, $6,000, equal to one year's salary, in recognition of the great and voluntary services rendered to the Government during the lifetime of said Patterson.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will withdraw it for a moment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will reserve the point of order until the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been heard.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the point of order on the paragraph last read.

Mr. HISCOCK. If there is a point of order reserved on the Farr paragraph, I reserve one on the paragraph preceding that.

Mr. ATHERTON. That is too late.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not believe any one will make that point.

Mr. ATHERTON. I will.

Mr. ATKINS. Oh, no.

Mr. RANDALL. It has come to be the habit of Congress——

Mr. HISCOCK. Before the gentleman proceeds let us understand this about reserving the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] reserves the point of order on the paragraph last read.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I reserve the point of order on the preceding paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection the point of order will be considered to be reserved as to both paragraphs.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. It has come to be the habit of Congress, as in this very bill, to make appropriations to the widows of deceased members of Congress, aggregating, $6,000, which is in excess of the amount allowed for one year's salary. In this amendment I propose that we shall appropriate to the widow of this public officer, $6,000, which is equal to his annual salary during life.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. What are her circumstances?

Mr. RANDALL. I will state the facts in a moment. The truth is, that the death of this officer can be almost directly traced to overwork and overzeal in the performance of his duties to the Government. I ask the Clerk to read two paragraphs which I have marked from the report on another subject in relation to this officer. He will find them on the first and second pages of the report.

Mr. HISCOCK. I insist on my point of order against the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman waived it to let me be heard.

Mr. HISCOCK. I thought the gentleman had closed his remarks.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to incorporate this as part of my remarks, because it shows in language better perhaps than I can employ what I would like to have weigh with the committee in support of this amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The beneficiary, Eliza W. Patterson, is the widow of the late Carlile P. Patterson, Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey of the United States, who died suddenly in August last while in the performance of his duties as such officer. Captain Patterson had been connected with this branch of the public service for more than twenty years, during which period his service was distinguished by its great usefulness and the absolute fidelity with which he discharged all his functions.

The character of the service rendered by him deserves more than a passing mention. During and since the civil war he rendered important extra-official services to the Government for which no compensation was provided by law. During his connection with the Coast Survey, in addition to his constant labors in that department, he was made chairman of the commission to reorganize the revenue-marine service; a member of the commission to examine and test life-saving apparatus and appliances; of the board to prepare a plan for the improvement of the harbor of Washington; of the interoceanic canal commission; and of the Light-House Board; and was called upon for various minor services too numerous to recite.

Captain Patterson, equally with Professor Henry, is entitled to recognition for the great improvement in the public service above referred to, and for the very great economy in public expenditure which resulted from his long attention and great labor bestowed upon the question, not only increasing the efficiency of the service but resulting in a reduction of expenses exceeding a million and a half dollars. For all extra-official services above referred to no compensation was ever made to him by the Government. The pressure of all these duties and the constancy of his labor led to the absolute neglect of all private interests.

Captain Patterson left his family almost totally unprovided for and in great distress for the means of support, leaving also debts for even the necessaries of life. His death disclosed the fact that his entire assets left for the benefit of his family amounted to about $500, while the debts last above referred to far exceed that sum.

Mr. RANDALL. I appeal to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] not to raise a point of order on this amendment. I have offered it by instructions from a select committee appointed under the action of this House to consider the services of this officer.

Mr. HISCOCK. I must insist upon the point of order. At least a half dozen cases have been presented to the Committee on Appropriations that are equally meritorious with this, not more so perhaps, but not less so than this case. There is no law which authorizes the giving of a year's salary to the family of a deceased officer. There have been a number of deaths of persons in the diplomatic service——

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to reserve the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman need not give himself any trouble; the point of order will not be withdrawn.

Mr. McMILLIN. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I understood him to indicate that he would withdraw it. I was sitting back of him, and there was some confusion that prevented me from hearing with distinctness.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have indicated no such thing; I insist upon the point of order. As I started to say, a number of deaths have occurred in the diplomatic service and I know of no reason why this same provision should not be made for their families if it is made for the family of this officer. There is but one course for me to pursue, and that is to insist upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to learn from the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] whether the principle involved in this amendment is not the same as that involved in preceding paragraphs in the bill for families of deceased members of Congress.

Mr. HISCOCK. I can only say this in reference to the preceding paragraphs, that possibly the same principle is involved. But there has grown up in the House a practice commenced certainly as early as the Forty-sixth Congress, for I then became familiar with it, of giving to the family of a deceased member who had been elected to Congress, though he never took his seat in it, the sum of $6,000 for—I will not say for what.

Mr. ATKINS. And in the Forty-fifth Congress.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman corrects me; in the Forty-fifth Congress. That having been the practice, the Committee on Appropriations have not felt justified in departing from it. But points of order have been reserved upon these paragraphs. When the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] made his point of order against the paragraph in relation to Mr. Farr, I then made a point of order against the paragraph relating to Mr. Wood.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want this amendment mixed with the other two subjects.

Mr. HISCOCK. Whether the points of order would be good against those paragraphs, I will say that I believe it is good against this amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire simply to say that during the last Congress and during the preceding Congresses the House has ordered such sums to be put into the sundry civil appropriation bill. They never have been regarded as in order except when made so by order of the House. It was in that way, under a resolution of the House, that the family of Mr. Farr was paid for a part of the Congress in which he was serving at the time he died. And the resolution providing for paying his family his compensation related not only to that Congress but to the present Congress. It has never been held, however, that such propositions were in order, except as ordered by the House, and the Committee on Appropriations have acted under those orders of the House.

Mr. ATKINS. If the Chair will allow me just a word. I am perfectly familiar with the way in which these precedents grew up, for I myself had charge of the sundry civil appropriation bill in which the paragraphs were placed.

The gentleman from Texas, Mr. Schleicher, who represented the San Antonio district, died after his election to the Forty-sixth Congress, and died during the short session of the Forty-fifth Congress. As a matter of mere sympathy on the part of this House it was agreed to pay his family a year's salary.

Mr. Clark, of Iowa, died also about the same time, and my recollection is that he was not re-elected. But Mr. Schleicher was re-elected. And his family being here, his wife and ten children, two thousand miles away from home, this Congress voted $6,000 to his family. It also voted a sum for the family of Mr. Clark, of Iowa.

Mr. BLOUNT. And did it under a resolution of the House.

Mr. ATKINS. And did it under a resolution of the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. One word further in this connection. I desire to recur to the paragraph commencing with line 2032 in relation to the family of Mr. O'Connor. Though that paragraph has been passed, I ask that a point of order may be allowed to lie against it also.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let this point of order be decided first.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee has adopted that paragraph.

Mr. HISCOCK. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that although that paragraph and the one in relation to Mr. Wood have been passed, and the point of order was not made against either, yet the moment that the paragraph was read providing for the payment of $6,000 to the widow and children of Hon. Evarts W. Farr the point of order was made against that clause. Now, I appeal to the gentleman in common fairness——

Mr. ATKINS. I think myself that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is right.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The Chair got unanimous consent for a point of order to be reserved against those paragraphs.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, against the paragraph in relation to Mr. Wood; but I desire to have it apply to all that class of cases in the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I want it to be understood that I object to any point of order resting against anything which has been passed by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair distinctly asked if there was objection.

Mr. RANDALL. And I objected.

The CHAIRMAN. But not at that time.

Mr. RANDALL. I could not hear what was going on owing to the confusion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets that, but must keep the record correct.

Mr. HISCOCK. As I understand it now, by unanimous consent a point of order is allowed to be made against the clause commencing with line 2032.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not disposed of the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that two points of order cannot be entertained at the same time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is entertaining no point of order except the one on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. How could we get back to another point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen are giving their views upon the point of order in their own way. The Chair will hear other gentlemen who may desire to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. McCOOK. I do not wish to be heard, but I would like to hear.

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Chairman, I think it would not appeal to the good sense or good feeling of this House if the paragraph in regard to the legal representatives of Mr. O'Connor is allowed to go through without exception, it having been decided by a vote of the House that he was not elected to a seat; and yet——

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman is not speaking to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is listening; the gentleman from New Jersey has not completed his sentence.

Mr. ROBESON. And yet to have the point of order pressed against similar claims in the cases of gentlemen who have been decided to be entitled to their seats, and against meritorious officers of this Government who have served it long and faithfully, who have sacrificed their lives in the diligent pursuit of duty, and an appropriation for whom is exactly in the line of precedent. I remember that when Professor Henry died there was adopted in behalf of his family a provision similar to this which is now sought to be offered in behalf of the much more dependent and much more needy family of Captain Patterson, who not only served this Government in a civil capacity but was a naval officer offering up his life as a stake in behalf of his country ever since his boyhood.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman is speaking upon the merits of the proposition. I insist that he be confined to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Of that the Chair must be the judge. The gentleman from New Jersey is speaking of a civil officer of the same class as these other persons who have been civil officers.

Mr. ROBESON. I wish to say that ever since Congress has taken control of these subjects, inasmuch as these salaries are fixed by law and subject to the action of Congress in the form of law, similar appropriations to this and for similar objects have been ruled in order over and over again in this House upon the ground that they were consistent with past precedent and present propriety.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman before he takes his seat whether he knows of an instance where these propositions have been ruled in order by the Chair when the question has been raised.

Mr. ROBESON. I know that at the last session, in the very face of a law restricting appropriations by Congress for contestants in election cases to $2,000, this House, in more cases than one, voted an appropriation beyond that sum, against the protest of gentlemen of the Appropriation Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. If no other gentleman desires to speak the Chair will rule upon the point of order. The Chair is very anxious to adhere to a principle of action upon these questions. If he consulted the action of the Committee of the Whole yesterday in voting that it was in order to put upon the bill extra compensation for which no provision of law whatever existed, he would be very much embarrassed in ruling this amendment out of order. That question, however, was determined by the committee, not by the Chair. So far as the Chair is called upon to determine points of order, he desires especially to adhere to a principle that shall guide him throughout the bill.

He regards this amendment (and he says this rather by way of notice than otherwise) as resting on the same principle of compensation to a civil employé of the Government not provided for by existing law as several items found in the bill and yet pending. The only question with the Chair is whether he ought not to take the rule to be settled by the Committee of the Whole in all these cases instead of deciding himself upon a general view which he would be obliged to apply in turn to all matters of this kind.

The Chair is therefore inclined to submit this question to the committee, if there is a difference of opinion as to what he has stated—that the cases rest on the same principle. The Chair will therefore submit——

Mr. McCOOK. I suggest that the amendment be read, so that the Committee of the Whole may fully understand it.

Insert as an independent paragraph, after line 2045, these words:

To pay to the widow of Carlile P. Patterson, late Superintendent of the Coast Survey, $6,000, equal to one year's salary, in recognition of the great and voluntary service rendered to the Government during the lifetime of said Patterson.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The point of order, I understand, is still pending and debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is still pending.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, about the only soldier, I believe, who is not at this moment on the pension-roll is a man who lost both his arms while engaged in the military service of the Government. He has not yet been granted a pension, although I appealed to the committee——

A MEMBER. That is not on the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Now, I wish to say, on the point of order, it strikes me before we take up these civil employés and place them on the pension list we should dispose of the case of that poor old soldier——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must direct the attention of the gentleman to the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Then upon the point of order I wish to say that if this point is to be overruled, it simply opens up the civil list of the Government for pensions or bounties. The gentleman in whose behalf this amendment is offered enjoyed for years a large salary with the perquisites attached to his office, and I understand he had accumulated from this source quite a large fortune.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not speaking to the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think he is, Mr. Chairman, and I trust if the point of order in this case is to be overruled that before that is done the gentleman shall be permitted to state the principle which it is proposed to put on this bill by this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. This officer, Mr. Chairman, has been enjoying large salary and perquisites as well as high honor at the expense of the people for very many years.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs the gentleman not to trifle with the point of order, as he is detaining the business of the House, and the Chair will not hear him unless he confines himself to the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The Chair listened to the gentleman from New Jersey, who did not reach the point of order as nearly as my remarks do. I desire to contrast the principle governing this case and the principle governing the cases of deceased members of Congress. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that in the case alluded to of the widow and children of Hon. M. P. O'CONNOR, that a resolution was passed by the House on that matter during the Forty-sixth Congress.

A MEMBER. That has nothing to do with this.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There was action by that Congress authorizing an appropriation for the widow and children of Mr. O'CONNOR like that which is contained in this bill. There was a law, therefore, which warranted the Committee on Appropriations in placing that item relating to the widow and children of Mr. O'CONNOR in this bill. But in this case suggested by the amendment there is no resolution and no law whatever authorizing it. It is a new proposition and does change existing law, for this man's salary expired at the time of his death. You cannot increase the salary or make this allowance without changing the law and making an entirely new law.

And where is the member of Congress will insist such an amendment is in the line of retrenchment. It is not in the line of retrenchment. It is a change of law, and not retrenching expenditure must be ruled out of order. If this House shall hold that the point of order is not well taken, then I shall insist, as we are simply opening up the entire civil list of the Government to pension, that that shall not be done until this poor soldier who is armless to-day, with a growing family to support, five or six children dependent on him, his family increasing, I am sorry to say, while his pension case still remains before the Committee on Pensions in this House. I say I shall insist that the case of John B. Tucker shall first be provided for, and the pension which he is entitled to shall be granted to him.

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think it proper to continue debate on the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the point will be made distinctly that it is controlled by the third clause of the twenty-first rule of the House, and that under that rule this amendment is out of order.

Mr. ATHERTON. I wish to make a suggestion to the committee that this is not determined by any former precedent from the fact the effort is not to give an officer a sum of money, but to give to a member of his family a sum of money and to one who never rendered any service to the Government. Therefore it could not be governed by any such rule mentioned for the purpose of justifying a sum to be given to an officer who had relations with the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. The practice of the House has been uniform as to deceased members.

Mr. HISCOCK. We can continue this debate by unanimous consent, and I have heard no objection to that being done. It is too serious a matter to be passed over without being understood by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now submit the question to the committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. We wish the committee shall understand the question before it is submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the wish of the House to be that debate on the point of order shall be closed.

Mr. HISCOCK. Does the Chair object when no member on the floor objects to the continuance of the debate?

The CHAIRMAN. When enough has been said on the point of order, the Chair states that fact to the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is, when the Chair proposes to decide himself, but now the question of order is submitted to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman desires to prolong the debate and that is the wish of the committee the Chair has no objection.

Mr. HISCOCK. I see my colleague from Illinois on the Committee on Appropriations upon the floor, and I propose he shall be heard on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee makes no objection the gentleman from Illinois will be heard.

Mr. CANNON. I will not detain the committee but a minute, and I wish to say, as this is submitted to the committee to decide, I think it is competent at least the committee should understand the full scope of the point of order, and without reference to the merits of the amendment. I will not discuss them at all.

The establishment of the precedent here proposed demands the careful attention of the committee. What is it that is proposed? Without law, without resolution of the House, by amendment to an appropriation bill, in opposition to the rule, to insert a provision giving $6,000 to a party who does not now come within the scope of the law. It is that, pure and simple; and if the committee shall hold it is in order, then we establish a precedent which makes it competent to amend this bill and to include every man, woman, and child to the extent of fifty millions of people so far as the point of order is concerned.

It may be that upon the merits I would have a very great deal of sympathy with this proposition; but we cannot afford in this manner to make a precedent; and as the Chair has seen proper to submit the point of order to the decision of the committee, I hope when that presentation is made they will deal with it in such a manner as to establish no such precedent, but that it will be determined in accordance with the rules of the House and in the interest of sound legislation and administration.

Mr. HISCOCK. If in order, Mr. Chairman, as a further reason in support of the point of order, I desire to call attention to the fact that a bill, as I am informed, is now upon the Speaker's table from the Senate giving this same sum, and I am glad the gentleman from Illinois has called my attention to it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the Chair will look at that bill and see if it is one that embraces the same subject-matter.

The CHAIRMAN, (after examining the bill). The Chair is unable to find anything in this bill which bears upon this question.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. This bill which has been handed to the Chair is one which relates to the remission of certain taxes upon real estate.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not see why that should be presented in support of the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is not the mistake of the gentleman from New York, who called attention to it. It was an inadvertence on my part.

The CHAIRMAN. Irrespective of his own opinion, and because of the identity of the provision here with other clauses of the bill, the Chair has stated that he was unwilling to take the responsibility of determining the point of order, which would oblige the Chair to adopt the same course with reference to other provisions of the bill; and therefore prefers to submit it to the judgment of the committee. Shall the point of order be sustained?

The point of order was sustained.

Mr. RANDALL. Now I ask to modify my proposition in a manner that I think will be acceptable, by providing that the amount of money to be paid to the widow in this case shall be the unpaid balance for the fiscal year from the date of his death.

Mr. HISCOCK. I cannot consent to that.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I withdraw it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent now that I shall be allowed to enter the point of order upon the previous provision of the bill which has been passed——

Mr. RANDALL. That I object to.

Mr. McCOOK. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCOOK. I desire to ask if the point of order has been made against that portion of the bill which makes provision for the payment of the widow and children of the late Mr. Farr, of New Hampshire, and not against the appropriation for the payment to the heirs and legal representatives of Mr. Wood and Mr. O'Connor.

Mr. ATHERTON. That provision has been passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will answer the gentleman from New York that the Clerk had read to the end of line 2045, when the gentleman from Indiana on the right [Mr. HOLMAN] reserved the point of order against that clause touching the payment to the widow and children of Mr. Farr. Thereupon the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee, rose and stated that he would reserve the point of order in that case against the previous paragraph touching the payment to the representatives of the late Mr. Wood. The Chair thought he was too late to make the point after the paragraph had been passed, but said it would be entertained without objection. Objection was asked for and none was made. Therefore the Chair regards the points of order to be reserved upon both of these paragraphs. That is the present condition of both of them. Now the Chair entertains the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana, and recognizes the gentleman upon the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. At the time that I made the point of order upon this paragraph I was not, in the confusion prevailing in the committee, aware of the fact that the first of these paragraphs had been submitted to the committee and passed, or I should have felt compelled to apply it to all of them, and not to one to the exclusion of the others. I was glad, however, to observe that the mistake was corrected by the unanimous consent of the committee.

My point of order is this, that there is no law authorizing this appropriation of money. The Chair of course would not be willing to hear me upon the question of policy involved here, and I am content to put the proposition upon the point of its exclusion by the third clause of the twenty-first rule of this House, namely, that there is no law authorizing its expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear gentlemen upon the other side on the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order now to move to reconsider the vote upon the proposition as to the widow and children of Mr. O'Connor and providing for the payment to them?

The CHAIRMAN. That could only be done by unanimous consent. There is no reconsideration in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to that.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I give notice that I shall move when this bill comes before the House to amend it by striking out that clause.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I understand the point of order upon this clause with reference to Mr. Farr has been withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no such intimation.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask who made the point of order upon that?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] makes the point of order now upon that paragraph relative to the payment to the representatives of Mr. Farr as not being in pursuance of existing law and not authorized under the rules in this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will withdraw that point of order so that all of these may be placed upon the same footing. No gentleman here I am sure desires to apply the restriction to one case which he would not apply to all of the others.

We must treat all alike or do nothing, and I will vote, however much against my feelings, to strike out the appropriation for the widow and children of Mr. O'Connor, unless the others come in which are of equal merit and rest on precisely the same foundation; although it would be one of the things I would most regret in my official life, in regard to my fellow-members in the past, if I were to vote to strike out the appropriation in the O'Connor case.

Mr. ATKINS. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to let all these three appropriations be on a footing. I do not think we can make flesh of one and fish of another.

Mr. MILLER and Mr. RANDALL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania on the left [Mr. MILLER] is recognized.

Mr. MILLER. I trust that this point of order which has been made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will not prevail. I call his attention that in lines 2032, 2033, and 2034 an appropriation is made of $4,637.13 to the widow and children of M. P. O'Connor, who was returned as elected from the second South Carolina district. I was solicited to offer an amendment to strike that provision out of the bill on the ground that Mr. O'Connor not only never took his seat but that he died on the 26th of April, 1881, and that a committee of this House found that he never had been elected. I find, on an examination of the records of the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, that Mr. O'Connor drew $731.87; that Mr. Dibble, who claimed to have been elected as his successor, drew as mileage $266.80, and drew as salary $5,485.45. That is to say, these two gentlemen, who claimed seats as Representatives on the other side of this House, from whence comes this objection, have drawn as salary and mileage, including the amount in the bill, $11,121.25; and yet a committee of this House found as a fact, which finding has been ratified by a majority of this House, that neither O'Connor nor Dibble was entitled to a seat.

The paragraph appropriating this amount to Mrs. O'Connor has been passed over and has been approved and that amount of money is appropriated to the widow and children of Mr. O'Connor. If it is without law, certainly the gentlemen on that side who make the objection will by unanimous consent agree that the committee shall go back to line 2032 and strike out the appropriation for the widow of a gentleman who never was elected and never was entitled to a seat.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] will please confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. MILLER. I will do so. Out of regard to the fact that this was an appropriation to a woman and a widow, and in accordance with precedents, I refuse to offer the amendment, and I trust that the other side of this House will show themselves as magnanimous and gallant to the widow of a man who was elected as they have shown themselves magnanimous and gallant to the widow of one who was not.

Mr. RANDALL. In answer to the appeal of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] I want to say I have objected to none of these items, and raised no point of order. Those items, however, were passed, they were adopted by the committee, and, as was my privilege, I objected to going back.

Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. BRIGGS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] is recognized.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire, if permitted, to make an appeal to my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and also to make a statement of fact in reference to the case of Mr. Farr. I had charge of the sundry civil bill during the past Congress and in the case of Mr. Schleicher we had provided for the payment to his representatives of his salary in the Congress in which he was serving when he died, and had also provided for the payment of the salary which he would have had if he had lived to serve in the Congress to which he was elected. When the case of Mr. Farr came up a similar principle by general consent was considered as proper to be applied. When the bill came to be made up as to Mr. Farr's case some question was raised as to whether or not it were not better to provide in that bill for the balance of that Congress and let this Congress provide for the present one. That was stated in the House and it seemed to be universally assented to.

Mr. Farr, as known to many of us, was a Federal soldier who discharged his duties in our midst with an empty sleeve, having lost his arm in battle. His widow was here, poor, with little children, without any means of support, appealing to the sympathies of members on either side of this House, and not in vain; and I trust that the feeling which then encouraged her will not be wanting now. I appeal to my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to withdraw the point of order in this case.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to indorse every word the gentleman from Georgia has uttered, and join in his appeal.

Mr. BRIGGS. My object in addressing the Chair when the gentleman from Georgia was recognized was simply to state the facts in relation to the condition of my deceased colleague's family. As the gentleman from Georgia has stated, Mr. Farr was a gallant Union soldier. He lost his arm at the battle of Williamsburgh. He died leaving no estate. He left a widow and three small children, the oldest of whom to-day is sick, and according to the latest reports I have from the physician is probably sick with consumption from which he cannot possibly recover.

Now, under these circumstances I ask the gentleman from Indiana, after he has allowed the proposition to pay the heirs of Mr. O'Connor, after he has allowed the proposition to pay the heirs of Mr. Fernando Wood, $6,000 in each case, to withdraw the point of order and let this widow and these three children of a dead Union officer receive this money which they actually need for their support and their sustenance.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to state as clearly as I can—it is a point too clear to discuss—that the committee cannot afford to discriminate between these three cases. They stand for all practical purposes on the same common principle, and if one is allowed, of course the others ought to be. This committee cannot afford to act unjustly by making discriminations between these three cases.

When the division of the committee took place I was acting as one of the tellers. Before I could return to my seat and look at the bill the paragraph now pending had been reached, and I made the point of order on it, as I had intended to do on the two preceding paragraphs. But I will not consent that by any point of order I may make there shall be a discrimination between these three cases.

I insist, however, that upon considerations of high public policy Congress should not enter upon this practice of making appropriations such as are contained in these three paragraphs. I cannot see upon what principle they can be sustained.

As I understand, the practice never obtained until the Forty-sixth Congress; it was not the practice, so far as I am aware, of any preceding Congress. I do not think we can fairly and justly take money from the public Treasury for such purposes however meritorious the cases may be, and I have no doubt this case is a meritorious one, without some underlying principle of public policy that will justify it. I can find none here. I do not, therefore, feel justified in withdrawing the point of order; but I will not retain it in such a manner as to allow a discrimination to be made between these three cases.

Mr. RANDALL. That is just the appeal I was going to make to the gentleman. A point of order against the Farr paragraph would be a discrimination.

Mr. HOLMAN. I could not consent to that discrimination. I ask, therefore, that for the present these three paragraphs be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. If a point of order is pending it must be determined.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I feel that a statement is due to the gentlemen who constituted the sub-committee of the Committee on Appropriations that made up this appropriation bill. In the discussion of this paragraph the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has seen proper to refer to another and a preceding paragraph, as he had a perfect right to do. I mean the O'Connor appropriation. I want to deal fairly in this matter. I want to indorse every word that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] and the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIGGS] has said about this case; for I know it is all true.

In the Forty-fifth Congress two members of this House died. One was from the State of Texas and one was from the State of Iowa. The Committee on Appropriations recommended, and the House adopted its recommendation, an appropriation of the sum of $6,000 to the respective families of the deceased members.

We came to this case; and we now ask the House to do precisely what was done in the other cases. I want to say for the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK,] the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the chairman of the sub-committee on this bill, and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUTTERWORTH,] who with myself constituted that sub-committee, that when we reached the O'Connor case, in view of the contest over his seat and the vote that the House had recently taken declaring that he was not elected to a seat in this House, they directed me to examine into the matter and satisfy myself as to what amount of money ought to be given to the family of Mr. O'Connor; not to report it to the sub-committee at all, but to report it to the clerk of the committee with instructions to write it in the bill. They did not make it a matter of cavil; they left it to me.

This is what I did: I took the amount of his salary for one year and added to it the amounts for stationery and mileage, and deducted from the sum every dollar of pay which he had received as a member of this House. That action I reported to them, although they told me to report it to the clerk and write it in the bill. And the fairness which they exhibited in the matter I am sure will command the esteem and the respect of everybody here.

Now, in Mrs. Farr's case we have not proposed to do a whit more than we did in the case of the family of Mr. Clark, of Iowa, and the family of Mr. Schleicher, of Texas. Those were the precedents which the committee undertook to be guided by. I did think, and I think now, that it will be difficult to imagine a case in which you should follow a liberal precedent that will command more regard than the one which we are now considering. The condition of the family is stated——

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RANDALL. I want to appeal to the gentleman from Indiana——

Mr. BLACKBURN. In common fairness I do say that if the widow and children of the dead member from New Hampshire are to be denied the provision made in this bill for them it seems to me to be but fair that we should go back and strike out what we have done for the family of the dead member from South Carolina.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to give notice——

Mr. HOLMAN. One moment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will hear what the gentleman has to say.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask unanimous consent that upon the withdrawal of the points of order, both the one reserved by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] and the one reserved by myself, a vote may be taken in the House on these three propositions.

Mr. RANDALL. We will agree to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish them all to stand on exactly the same footing. I do this in view of the possible injustice that may be done growing out of the point of order being made so late, from a misapprehension.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee cannot control the action of the House, but an understanding may be entered into.

Mr. SPRINGER. The House always carries out these understandings; there is no trouble about that.

Mr. HISCOCK. I feel that I am justified in binding this side of the House that we will consent that a vote be taken in the House in each case.

Mr. MILLER. On the case of Mrs. O'Connor as well as the others?

Mr. HOLMAN. Putting them all on the same ground.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair deems it wise that either the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] or the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] should state in distinct phraseology what the understanding is.

Mr. HISCOCK. The understanding is that there shall be a separate vote upon each of the three paragraphs.

Mr. RANDALL. No; not on each, but a separate vote on all.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; a vote on each.

The CHAIRMAN. This indicates the propriety of the suggestion of the Chair.

Mr. RANDALL. They are all on the same basis, and let them be settled by one vote.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will consent that there shall be one vote upon all three.

Mr. HOLMAN. I prefer (and I trust the gentleman from New York will consent to this) that a vote be taken separately on each proposition.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana is that there shall be a separate vote upon each.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I do not think it will make any difference whether the vote be taken on these items separately or together; for I believe, without regard to sides in this House, there are very few men here who will not vote squarely, honestly, and justly in regard to these cases, whatever the position of the man may have been when he was alive and a member of this House.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then the understanding is that there shall be a separate vote on these three propositions, wherever called for a separate vote.

Mr. MOULTON. Then we will vote them in ten to one.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state what is to go upon record as the understanding of the parties, namely, that a vote may be taken upon demand in the House upon the question of striking out these three propositions, either together or separately.

Mr. HENDERSON. I offer an amendment, to take the same course as the other three items.

Insert as a new paragraph, after line 2045, the following:

"To pay the widow and children of Hon. Robert M. A. Hawk, deceased, the sum of $3,925.60, amount of salary for the unexpired term of his service as a member of the Forty-seventh Congress."

Mr. HENDERSON. I offer this to take the same course as the others.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HENDERSON, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To James Gillette, $1,500; Thomas H. Herndon, $1,500; William C. Oates, $676.45; to the widow of James Q. Smith, $1,500; E. C. V. Blake, $500; Joseph Wheeler, $2,000; Jesse J. Finley, $2,000; B. H. Lanier, $1,000; J. Floyd King, $1,500; Charles M. Shelley, $2,000; Alexander Smith, $500; Edward W. Robertson, $500; George M. Buchanan, $2,000; Van H. Manning, $2,000; John R. Lynch, $2,000; James R. Chalmers, $2,000; Edward W. M. Mackey, $2,000; to the heirs of M. P. O'Connor, $1,000; Samuel Dibble, $1,000; Carlos J. Holbrand, $1,000; D. Wyatt Aiken, $1,000; Horatio Bisbee, jr., $2,000; George Q. Cannon, $2,000; Allen G. Campbell, $2,000; J. S. Barbour, $500; G. W. Witherspoon, $1,000; R. H. M. Davidson, $1,000; W. M. Lowe, $2,000; Paul Strobach, $2,000; Hilary A. Herbert, $2,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to offer an amendment to correct the text.

Mr. CALKINS. I arose for the same purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say that James Gillette, named in this paragraph as a contestant, I knew as a boy in Philadelphia, where he was born.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no motion pending.

Mr. RANDALL. I move, as Mr. Gillette is dead, to insert "the administrator of."

Mr. CALKINS. Let me suggest that the amendment be "the widow of."

Mr. RANDALL. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that amendment will be adopted.

There was no objection.

Mr. CALKINS. I am authorized by the Committee on Elections to offer certain amendments to this paragraph. Since this and the following paragraph were inserted in the bill several cases spoken of in the next paragraph as undetermined have been determined by the committee. I therefore desire to move, by direction of the Committee on Elections, amendments allowing the full amount in these cases.

Mr. ATHERTON. Should not these amendments come in connection with the next paragraph?

Mr. CALKINS. No, sir; the gentleman will see that the introductory words of the next paragraph are:

And the following-named persons, on account of expenses incurred by them in cases still undetermined.

The cases for which I desire to provide by way of amendment have now been determined, and consequently provision should be made for them in the paragraph now pending. I will indicate the amendments to the Clerk:

Add to the pending paragraph: "Samuel Lee, $2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this amendment will be considered as adopted. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CALKINS. I also move to add:

John S. Richardson, $2,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to this amendment?

Mr. PAGE. Let the amendments all be offered before the vote is taken. The gentleman is not perfecting the text, but offering additional amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the gentleman will offer them all as one amendment. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CALKINS:

John S. Richardson, $2,000; Robert Smalls, $2,000; George D. Tillman, $2,000.

And then, not under instruction of the committee, but as an amendment offered by me personally, I move——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests to the gentleman to reserve that.

Mr. CALKINS. Very well, I will do so.

Mr. STEELE. I have an amendment to offer to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order to the amendment moved by the gentleman from Indiana, the Chair understands, have been withdrawn. The Chair will further suggest that the question be put first on the amendment suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Elections.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask a question of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CALKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to know whether these amounts have been audited, and that these are the results of that audit, and furthermore whether they conform to the law and do not exceed $2,000 in any case?

Mr. CALKINS. They have been audited. Vouchers have been filed and the parties have made affidavits to the correctness of the accounts.

Mr. BLOUNT. And none exceed $2,000?

Mr. CALKINS. Yes, sir; not one is over $2,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to know whether quite a number of these cases where allowance is made are not pending and undisposed of?

Mr. CALKINS. They are pending in the House, but the committee has disposed of all but Lee and Richardson, which are disposed of practically. So that the contestant and contestee, so far as they are concerned, have nothing further to do.

Mr. HOLMAN. My colleague, chairman of the Committee on Elections, will say whether or not they are acting on the principle that each one of these contestants and contestees, whether he has merit in his case or not, is to receive $2,000 each out of the public Treasury.

Mr. CALKINS. I will state that the Committee on Elections in passing on each one of these accounts necessarily had to determine the question whether the contest had been instituted in good faith and carried on in good faith, and whether there was ground for such contest. I may say, without violating any of the secrets of the committee, some of the members of the committee do not agree with the majority of the committee in some of the cases; but in the cases where the recommendation has been made it has been made by the majority of the committee. They of course have passed on these questions.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman think that where a party brings a contest for a seat in this House and fails in that contest he is entitled to receive $2,000 from the public Treasury?

Mr. CALKINS. That question is no longer open to serious discussion.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is entirely a new doctrine.

Mr. CALKINS. I remind my colleague from Indiana that since the law was changed, and I believe it was changed in 1852–'53, such allowance has been made. The expenses up to that time had always been paid by Congress out of the contingent fund of the House. The members then received a per diem compensation. In 1852–'53, up to which time the expenses of contestants and contestees, as I have said, had been paid out of the contingent fund of the House, a law was passed by which no expenses were to be paid unless by appropriation; or, rather, the law declared that these expenses should not be paid out of the contingent fund of the House. From then until the present time Congress has been making specific appropriations for paying contestants and contestees in cases recommended by the Committee on Elections.

Mr. HOLMAN. Were there any cases pending before the committee where allowances are not recommended?

Mr. CALKINS. Oh, yes.

Mr. MOULTON. Lots of them.

Mr. SPRINGER. Are not these cases so far disposed of that no action of the House will change the liability of the Government to pay these men?

Mr. CALKINS. That is it exactly.

Mr. SPRINGER. It does not matter what may be the action of the House on these cases, we will be liable to pay them this sum.

Mr. CALKINS. I take that suggestion as a statement of the exact condition of affairs. On every one of these cases the questions raised by my colleague from Indiana have been passed upon by the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, in reference to the statement of the honorable gentleman from Indiana, that an unsuccessful contestant ought not to be paid his expenses, I must dissent and take issue with him from the fact that it often happens by reason of the party bias of the House at a particular time a most meritorious case is rejected and a person allowed to get a seat who ought not to get it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman say that our legislation should be predicated on any such presumption? Does he hold that where there is an unsuccessful contestant the party who makes that unsuccessful contest is entitled to be compensated for his expenses out of the Treasury? To adopt any such rule would invite contests almost in every case.

Mr. CALKINS. Up to that time these expenses were always paid out of the contingent fund.

Mr. HOLMAN. During a very large part of the time nothing at all was paid. This is a modern invention.

Mr. SPRINGER. I recognize the fact the gentleman states, but I insist that the right of representation is so sacred that this House should by all means in its power give permission to the poorest man in the land to assert his right and title to a seat on this floor.

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. Chairman, a single word. I desire to remind my colleague that in almost every State in this Union the State Legislatures have adopted the same rule applied by Congress to contested elections, of paying the expenses of the contest.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALKINS. I now move, in line 2063, a formal amendment to correct an error in a name. It is printed in the bill Edward W. M. Mackey. It should be Edmund.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. CALKINS. I also ask to make a correction in line 2065. Carlos J. Holbrand should be Carlos J. Stolbrand.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALKINS. I now offer the following amendment in my own right, and not by direction of the Committee on Elections; and ask that it be inserted at the end of the amendments which have been adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Thomas J. Reed, $2,000; Samuel J. Anderson, $2,000.

Mr. CALKINS. I want to state, Mr. Chairman, briefly in connection with this amendment, that this case has been also heard and probably determined, I do not know about that, but heard at all events, and since this bill was reported to the House, or it would have been put upon it before. I make the amendment in justice to these gentlemen.

Mr. ATHERTON. Should not a similar provision be made in favor of Mr. Stoval and Mr. Cabell?

Mr. CALKINS. Yes, sir; I am going to offer an amendment for that purpose.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether any conclusion was reached or any provision is to be incorporated in the bill for the payment of Mr. Cannon, of Utah, up to the time his seat was declared vacant?

Mr. CALKINS. That has already been disposed of by the House, the gentleman will find.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to add another amendment, and state that I will move to strike out where it appears in this paragraph the amount appropriated to Mr. Stoval and Mr. Cabell, and offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To J. T. Stoval, $2,000: George C. Cabell, $2,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is instead of the $1,000 in the bill?

Mr. CALKINS. Yes, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to offer any further amendment to the bill?

Mr. CALKINS. That concludes what I desire to offer, but I give notice that I will move to strike out of the bill the amounts for which provision has been made by these several amendments.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 2070, after the word "thousand," the words "five hundred;" so that it will read: "to J. W. Witherspoon, $1,500."

Mr. CARLISLE. I desire to say if this amendment is adopted that I propose to offer an amendment increasing the appropriation in favor of Mr. Davidson to $1,260, for which he has filed vouchers before the committee.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. There is no objection whatever to that.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask that the proposed amendment be reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether the gentleman for whom this increased appropriation is proposed to be made has filed the vouchers in accordance with the law for this additional amount?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. The amount is shown to have been expended. He has made the statement and filed the vouchers.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is explaining the fact.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Yes. I say the statement has been made, and is shown both by the contestant and the contestee, Mr. Witherspoon and Mr. Davidson, that the expenses have been much more than the amount allowed here in the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make no objection, then.

Mr. MOULTON. I understand that this $500 was not allowed by the committee, and that after an investigation they decided to allow only $1,000?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire if the amount in the bill, $1,000, is not the amount recommended by the Committee on Elections?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; it is.

Mr. HISCOCK. The action of the committee was $1,000?

Mr. MILLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ATHERTON. I desire to state that I think the Committee on Elections have given this matter pretty full consideration, and, according to the belief of the majority of the members of that committee, we gave to this man in accordance with the amount that we gave to the others, and a very sufficient sum to cover his expenses. I think the Committee of the Whole had better stand by the action of the Committee on Elections, because if this change is made other changes will be proposed, and if you are to take our judgment as worth anything at all, after having maturely examined the question, you had better stand by that judgment here and now, or we will get into confusion and have arguments made and time expended in the effort to get some more of these amounts increased.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ATHERTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 2068 and 2069 strike out the words "Allen G. Campbell, $2,000."

Mr. ATHERTON. I gave notice in the committee I would offer this amendment in the House. The action of the committee on the allowance of this $2,000 was by no means the unanimous action of the committee.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. ATHERTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. I voted a moment ago against an increase of $500 because the Committee on Elections had considered the question and the majority of them had recommended $1,000. Now what am I to do in this case, when the majority has recommended $2,000?

Mr. ATHERTON. That is very well put; and if I do not give a good reason to the contrary the gentleman had better stand by the action of the committee. In the other case I think the action of the committee was unanimous. In this case it was not unanimous.

Mr. RANNEY. It was not unanimous in the other case.

Mr. ATHERTON. I have not much time to say what I ought to say, but I want to make a suggestion or two about this matter. Mr. Campbell, as will be recollected, appeared here, claiming a seat in the House by virtue of a certificate which showed upon its face he was not prima facie entitled to the seat he claimed. It is not necessary to repeat the argument. He presented, however, an account for the expenses he had incurred in the contest. I have a copy of it here. I have not time to read it, but I will be glad to submit that statement, copied by the clerk of the committee for the information of the House, as part of my remarks. In that statement are items like this:

H. C. Clark, for services rendered as stenographer, $2,708.33.

If you will turn to the record of the case you will find the amount of testimony taken by a stenographer, or by any officer on the part of Mr. Campbell, just occupies ten pages in the record, and he comes here and presents an account for more than $2,700 for the stenographer. He had an attorney before the committee that occupied perhaps an hour or two, and who presented in addition to that two small written briefs; and for the services of that attorney he pretended to claim in his account, $5,061.68.

I oppose this whole thing, because I think on the very face of this account there is evidence of such wrong that no payment should be made until the account is presented a little more in accordance with what we know was proper and right in the premises.

For the expenses of this contest he presented a claim for nearly $9,000; and if that, upon its very face, is not indicative of fraud in making out the account, I do not know how it could appear on the face of the papers.

The paper referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22, 1882.

In the matter of George Q. Cannon, contestant, vs. Allen G. Campbell, contestee, claiming to represent the Territory of Utah in the Congress of the United States:

Statement of expenses incurred by Allen G. Campbell, contestee.

Mr. CASSIDY. I desire to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Ohio. I have known Allen G. Campbell for a great many years. I know him to be as conscientious and correct as any man in any part of this country. I know, too, when he certifies to this House, through the Committee on Elections, he has expended a certain sum in this contest, it is literally true—every word.

Mr. ATHERTON. Let me ask the gentleman——

Mr. CASSIDY. As to that item for counsel fees, I know it from Mr. Campbell, and also from the attorney whom he brought here from Salt Lake City, Mr. McBride, a former member of this House, that he paid that attorney $1,000 per month for his services; and he kept him here a sufficient length of time to aggregate the amount charged in that bill. I know, also, he had a stenographer all the time he was here.

Mr. ATHERTON. For what purpose?

Mr. CASSIDY. He was employed in taking testimony and making out such papers and briefs as they had occasion to use before the committee.

Mr. ATHERTON. Let me say to the gentleman that no such papers were offered.

Mr. CASSIDY. But even admitting such charges were excessive, it cannot be denied Mr. Campbell is entitled to the $2,000 which the committee has allowed him. He has expended five times that amount in this contest.

When gentleman say this contest was frivolous they do not understand the situation of affairs in Utah Territory. Everybody in that Territory knew at the time these men were before the people for election that George Q. Cannon was not a citizen of the United States. Every man in Utah Territory was notified that George Q. Cannon had not resided in this country a sufficient length of time to become a citizen at the time the alleged paper of naturalization was issued. Therefore when men voted for him they voted knowing that he was not qualified to hold any office under this Government. Acting upon that theory, Governor Murray issued a certificate to the only person who was a candidate for the suffrages of the people who was eligible to this office. And a great many legal gentlemen in this country believe, and the law-books are full of decisions of that character, that where a candidate is ineligible, and the voters are notified of the fact, if they cast their suffrages for that candidate they will have as much effect as if they had voted for the Cardiff giant or the man in the moon; that they deliberately throw their votes away, and that the eligible candidate is the man who is entitled to the office. Proceeding upon that theory, Mr. Campbell came here in good faith and expended the sums which he set forth as having expended in this contest.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want to inquire of the gentleman——

Mr. PAGE. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want to know whether 18,000 legal voters in the Territory of Utah did not vote for Mr. Cannon, believing him to be a citizen of the United States and to be eligible?

Mr. CASSIDY. No, sir; there were not 5,000 who believed it, and they voted women, girls, and children of all ages.

Mr. PAGE. I move to amend the amendment so as to include in the motion to strike out these words: "George Q. Cannon, $2,000."

Mr. ATHERTON. I make a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ATHERTON. I want to know if it is in order for the gentleman to make that motion to strike out until my motion to strike out has been disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. It is undoubtedly in order to enlarge the scope of the motion to strike out so as to include additional matter.

Mr. PAGE. I find upon examination that Mr. Cannon has drawn from the Treasury of the United States, as the Delegate from the Territory of Utah for the Forty-seventh Congress, the sum of $3,750. Now, I claim that that amount was drawn out of the Treasury in violation of law. The late Clerk of this House had no authority to put the name of Mr. Cannon on the rolls of this House, and that money, $3,750, has been drawn from the Treasury without authority of law. He came here without a certificate from the governor of Utah; and the late Clerk of the House, without such a certificate being presented and without any authority of law, put his name on the rolls of this House, and he has drawn this money from the Treasury.

When this House met in December last it refused to admit Mr. Cannon; it refused also to admit the contestee, Mr. Campbell, because it was claimed that neither had a prima facie case. But in the mean time Mr. Cannon was drawing his salary as though he had been elected.

I say, therefore, that this proposition to pay Mr. Cannon $2,000 for moneys expended in defending his contested-election case is all wrong, and that the money paid him out of the Treasury of the United States for salary as Delegate was wrongfully paid and without authority of law.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is not under debate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Nothing but this $2,000 is under debate.

Mr. PAGE. I am debating this proposition to pay Mr. Cannon $2,000, and when the gentleman brings in his amendment to pay Mr. Cannon up to the time when the contested-election case was decided I shall vote against it, and I hope this House will vote it down. I hope my amendments will prevail to strike out both Cannon and Campbell.

Mr. CALKINS. With reference to the point made by the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE,] that the name of Mr. Cannon was put on the roll of this House without authority of law as the Delegate from Utah Territory, I have this statement to make for the information of the Committee of the Whole:

The contestee in that case, Mr. Campbell, presented a certificate signed by the governor of Utah Territory, which certificate this House voted was infirm upon its face and gave Mr. Campbell no prima facie right to a seat here. At the same time Mr. Cannon presented to the late Clerk of the House a certificate from the secretary of the Territory of Utah, and also a certificate of the governor, showing the aggregate vote returned as cast for either party by the precinct and county officers in the Territory of Utah. The late Clerk of the House thereupon put the name of Mr. Cannon upon the roll, and did not regard the certificate of the governor of the Territory presented by Mr. Campbell, because it had an infirmity upon its face. That is the fact with reference to the action of the late Clerk.

Upon the organization of the House the Speaker decided that the same rule did not apply to a Delegate that applied to a member of the House, because it was not necessary to swear in a Delegate in order to perfect the organization of the House. The Speaker therefore refused to recognize the same rule with reference to the certificate of the governor, and both of these gentlemen were refused a seat upon this floor and the whole matter was referred to the Committee on Elections.

Mr. SPRINGER. One question right there. Was not the decision of the Committee on Elections virtually to the effect that Mr. Cannon was prima facie elected?

Mr. CALKINS. I am coming to that in a moment. These, in short, are the facts with reference to the action of the late Clerk of this House in putting the name of Mr. Cannon on the roll so as to enable him to draw his pay as Delegate after his name was on the roll. I do not think, therefore, that the point made by the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] should lie against this clause. It is an allowance to Mr. Cannon, so far as we can make it, for his expenses in trying to defend a seat to which he claimed he was entitled. If the objection of the gentleman goes at all, it should be against the allowance of the salary of Mr. Cannon up to the time that this House decided there was a vacancy in the office of Delegate.

Mr. PAGE. It is too late now; he has already drawn the money. I want the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] to send up to the Clerk's desk and have read the law under which the Clerk of this House is authorized to put the name of a Member or Delegate on the roll.

Mr. CALKINS. I will not send up the law now, for I have not time to have it read in my time. But the law was read to the House when the matter was decided in the first instance by the Speaker, and is probably familiar to all the House.

With reference to the point made by my colleague on the committee [Mr. ATHERTON] against the allowance to Mr. Campbell, I desire to say that if there ever was a contested-election case in which a man ought to be allowed the expenses of his contest, this is such a case. Mr. Campbell made it possible for this House to decide a question which had been pestering the country for the last quarter of a century—to establish a precedent (and it matters not whether future Congresses follow it or not) and to go on in the line of the thought of the people of this country that polygamy must be suppressed. Mr. Campbell made that possible. In prosecuting his contest he expended not only the amount allowed by the Committee on Elections, but, as stated by the gentleman from Nevada, [Mr. CASSIDY,] four or five times that amount. He prosecuted the contest with vigor; he prosecuted it honestly, as every gentleman on this floor knows; and if any man ought to be allowed the expenses of a contest he certainly should be.

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment, to strike out the words "George Q. Cannon, $2,000," it was not agreed to.

Mr. ATHERTON. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I fail to see in what way the action of Mr. Campbell enabled the majority of this House to pass the law that it did on this subject. I do not know what that has to do with the question, or what connection there was between those two things. Enough on that point.

Now upon the main question: Mr. Campbell came here and attempted to get a seat in this House when the papers which he presented showed upon their face that George Q. Cannon had received 18,568 votes and Mr. Campbell only 1,357.

Mr. CALKINS. The gentleman will bear me out in the statement that I never depended upon the law to which he has referred in order to unseat Mr. Cannon. I never assumed that position.

Mr. ATHERTON. Certainly the gentleman is right in so saying; but that simply emphasizes the fact that when Mr. Campbell came here with his contest every man in the House who gave any attention to the law relating to elections knew that Mr. Campbell had never been elected, that he had no right whatever to the seat; because in the history of this country—and there is no exception to this rule—no man has ever been declared elected where some one else received a majority of the votes, even where the party receiving the majority was known to have been disqualified. But Mr. Cannon was not disqualified; everybody knew it. He had a certificate of naturalization, just such a certificate as has been decided by the circuit courts of the United States and by this House, or, at all events, its Committee on Elections, to be a good certificate of naturalization.

Mr. CASSIDY. We never went behind the certificate.

Mr. ATHERTON. Mr. Cannon was not permitted to occupy his seat—not for any reason that Mr. Campbell ever asserted before this House or that Governor Murray of the Territory of Utah ever asserted; on the contrary, the refusal of this House to seat Mr. Cannon was simply upon the ground that the majority here had decided that no person practicing polygamy should be permitted to occupy a seat on this floor; and this decision was based upon a law passed after the election and after Mr. Cannon was here attempting to attend to his duties as a Delegate from that Territory. On this account only—for no other reason—Mr. Cannon was kept out. No reason ever urged here by Mr. Campbell in support of his contest or presented to the House through the Committee on Elections had any tendency toward seating him. Both he and the governor of Utah knew, if they knew anything about election laws, that the papers he presented showed upon their face the infirmity of his title, and that he was not entitled to his seat. He came here in defiance of every rule of law that ever governed any legislative body in the United States, seeking upon one-thirteenth of the votes actually cast to overcome the overwhelming majority on the other side.

Something has been said about women and children voting. Admit all that may be alleged on this point, and still no sane man will assert here that Mr. Cannon had not the support of five, six, seven, or eight legal voters to one who cast his vote for Mr. Campbell. Yet Mr. Campbell comes here and presents this account of expenses, one of the items of which is $2,700 for a stenographer, though his best advocate to-day cannot show on this floor how a single dollar of this was ever expended. [Here the hammer fell.] I withdraw the pro forma amendment. I will only add that if the large amount named in the bill be struck out I may not object to allowing Mr. Campbell something; but he ought not to have the large sum here proposed.

The question being taken on the amendment to strike out the words, "Allen J. Campbell, $2,000," it was not agreed to; there being —ayes 32, noes 56.

Mr. STEELE. I move to amend by adding to the pending paragraph the proviso which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That, excepting the widow of James Gillette, none of the parties named in the foregoing paragraph shall receive any of the benefits therein named, unless the contestant or contestee therein named has or had a prima facie or an equitable right to the seat contested. The decision of the question of right to seat hereinbefore named to be vested in the Committee on Elections of the House of Representatives.

Mr. STEELE. I merely wish to state in support of the amendment I have offered that it cuts out any man who has not a prima facie or equitable right to a seat in this House.

Mr. MOULTON. How are we to decide that?

Mr. STEELE. The Committee on Elections should decide that.

Mr. MOULTON. It has been decided already.

Mr. STEELE. They have not decided they have a prima facie and equitable right in each case. This makes it incumbent upon them to decide they have a prima facie and equitable right. This committee has said that certain parties shall have certain allowances, but it does not say they have an equitable or prima facie right to a seat in this House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Who will be authorized to decide this question when the money is to be paid?

Mr. STEELE. The Committee on Elections will have to do that.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the Comptroller of the Treasury go after the Committee on Elections to know whether he shall audit the account or not?

Mr. STEELE. It will have to be embodied in the certificate upon which they will draw their pay.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is utterly impracticable.

Mr. ATHERTON. Suppose, for instance, one man holds a certificate of election and has a prima facie right, and it is shown before the Committee on Elections that the other man was elected by 10,000 majority, will you not pay in such a case?

Mr. STEELE. I wish we could judge of the action of the governors of the several States, but I have not proposed that in this amendment. When a man receives the certificate it is to be presumed the party receiving it is innocent if any wrong has been done.

Mr. CANNON. Take the case where two parties make a contest in good faith and neither one gets the seat. Under the gentleman's proposition neither would receive pay.

Mr. STEELE. If neither has an equitable right they will not be paid.

Mr. CANNON. It is a common thing to send them back to run over again.

Mr. STEELE. I myself will not vote to give any man a single dollar who does not come here with an equitable right.

Mr. STEELE'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to move an amendment by direction of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BRAGG. I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky wish to move an independent paragraph?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. LYNCH. I wish to offer an amendment to the pending paragraph. I move to strike out, in line 2050, "$1,500" and insert "$2,447;" so it will read, "to James Gillette, $2,447."

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point that it changes existing law.

Mr. LYNCH. I will have to speak on the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will reserve the right and allow the gentleman to be heard.

Mr. LYNCH. What I wish to say in explanation of this amendment is this: I am aware of the fact that a law is in existence limiting the amount to be paid to contestants and contestees to $2,000. In my judgment that law is inoperative, and has no binding force upon the House.

My reasons are these: each House of Congress, under the Constitution, is the sole judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its own members, and any expense which may be incurred by a contestant or contestee in asserting his right to a seat on this floor necessarily involves the question as to the right of the House to pass on the question of its own membership. For instance, if the House of Representatives of the Forty-seventh Congress, or if the House of Representatives of the Forty-seventh Congress with the concurrence of the Senate can decide that the House of Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress shall not be allowed to pay a contestant or a contestee for expenses incurred to an amount not exceeding $2,000 they can also decide that nothing whatever shall be allowed. And if we admit they can pass a law or decide by bill or resolution, or order that a succeeding House of Representatives shall not have the power to pass on any such question, that, in my judgment, is practically deciding that the House of Representatives of a succeeding Congress shall not be permitted to exercise the right which the Constitution says it shall exercise in passing on the question of its organization and its membership.

If the House of Representatives of a preceding Congress can say that the House of Representatives of a succeeding Congress shall not pay a contestant or contestee anything whatever in the way of reimbursing him for expenses incurred in the prosecution of the contest, or in the defense of the case, it is equivalent to saying that this House will not allow the next House practically to pass upon any such question; for the effect will be to prohibit any man from making a contest for a seat in the House unless he happens to be a man in opulent circumstances. No one but a rich man could make a contest for a seat in the House of Representatives should one House decide that the next House would allow nothing whatever for it; and if one House shall say such expense shall be limited to $2,000, if can, as I have said, say with equal propriety that nothing whatever shall be allowed.

Now, my judgment is, Mr. Chairman, that this is a question that the House ought to be allowed to determine for itself, and that no previous House, no preceding Congress, can bind a succeeding House or Congress as to what shall be done with regard to the organization of that House or with regard to its membership, or whether anything shall be allowed in making contests or defending them.

The Senate of the United States acts upon this principle. I believe the custom of that body in matters of contest is to pay the expense, whatever it may be, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, just as was formerly done by the House, and therefore the Senate determines that for itself without asking anything of the House in regard to it. And according to the remarks made by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky this morning, even on an amendment to an appropriation bill, upon its right to fix the compensation of its own officers and employés, it does not concede to the House the right to restrict that body in fixing the salaries of its own officers. The gentleman from Kentucky admitted that. After all the only thing that can be said in support of the contrary proposition, and the only argument that is made in favor of restricting or limiting the amount to be paid in any case, is that it sometimes encourages parties to make contests where they have no merit. I cannot see, Mr. Chairman, that there is anything in that position from my own experience.

I see that my time has about expired, and I would like the consent of the committee to continue a little while longer.

The CHAIRMAN. On the point of order the Chair will indulge the gentleman further. The Chair only calls attention to the bill and the condition of the public business, and asks the gentleman to be as brief as possible.

Mr. LYNCH. I will be brief. I only desire to say in answer to the argument which has been presented here that, unless this limitation as to the amount to be paid in cases of contest shall be made, contests may be instituted by parties before they know the case is without merit is, from my experience, without foundation. There is nothing in that point, for I have had some experience in contested elections. If the House should determine in each case to allow the contestant and the contestee the exact amount which he personally will swear that he has paid out, and no more, then I cannot see why that presents an inducement to anybody to institute a contest. For when a man institutes a contest and it costs him from $1,000 to $2,000 in its prosecution, and at the expiration of twelve or fifteen months the House will vote him the exact amount paid out only, it seems to me that it is nothing more than equivalent to a business man investing that amount of money for twelve or fifteen months without interest, and that is what no prudent business man would do. Hence I cannot see any inducement or where the inducement comes in for a man to institute a contest, unless the House pays interest upon the money invested. Now, the House does not pay interest on money, and if it pays back only the exact amount which a man has expended, then I fail to see where the inducement exists to institute contests.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, there is this statute in force:

That hereafter no contestant or contestee for a seat in the House of Representatives shall be paid exceeding $2,000 for expenses in election cases.

The only question presented here is as to whether it was competent for Congress to pass that law and whether it is in conflict with the provisions of the Constitution. Upon that question it is only necessary for me to suggest that rules of practice for getting a question before a tribunal are not limitations upon the jurisdiction of the tribunal and that the amount of the costs that shall be paid by litigants in their contests before a judicial tribunal fixed by legislative power is no limitation upon that jurisdiction. The court takes its jurisdiction under the Constitution, if you please, broad and ample to dispose of all questions and all points involved in the questions that come before it. Yet the mode or practice as to the costs to be paid by litigants is a subject of legislation, and has never been held to be a limitation upon the jurisdiction or the power of the court.

This House has the right under the Constitution to try the question of the title of a member to his seat. Full jurisdiction is reserved to each House in reference to that matter, and it is perfectly competent for Congress—not the House, but Congress, the two bodies, the Senate and the House—to provide the mode of practice and to determine the costs which shall be paid in such cases. This is the distinction which obtains in all cases of this character where the Legislature provides the mode of practice by which the litigants can get into a tribunal for the determination of the matter at issue between them.

Mr. LYNCH. Before the gentleman takes his seat I want to say, if the Chair on the point I make or if the committee should consent—I would not offer an amendment or insist on any of these amounts being increased in this bill, so far as I am concerned, for the present Congress, but will let it go over until the next.

Mr. HISCOCK. I certainly hope the committee will make no such bargain as that. This matter is of altogether too much consequence to be disposed of in that way. If the position taken by the gentleman from Mississippi is good, then every statute that we have pointing out the practice that is to be pursued by the contestant and the contestee in getting their matters before the House is to be stricken out and the contestant and the contestee come here at the beginning of every Congress without any practice under which they previous to that day could have taken their testimony and been prepared to present their cases to Congress. One of the results of this would be the postponement of election cases. There would be no rule, no practice, until one might be established by Congress when it convened. I say to the gentlemen of this committee the questions involved in this are not inconsequential; they are serious; and we must hesitate before we strike down a statute upon a suggestion that it is unconstitutional.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to say one word on the point of order.

Mr. LYNCH. Before the gentleman from Illinois proceeds I desire to make a correction in the statement of the gentleman from New York. I want to say to the gentleman from New York I did not make the suggestion I did in the spirit of a bargain. My object was this: I think that all of these accounts should be passed upon by a committee before they are brought to the House for a vote, and it was for the purpose of allowing the committee to pass upon all the accounts they have not passed upon that I made the suggestion.

Mr. SPRINGER. The question of order arises under the rules of the House and is very simple. It does not involve any of those abstract questions which I have been discussing. The rule of the House is that no appropriation not authorized by law is in order on an appropriation bill unless it retrenches expenditures.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not want to interfere with the gentleman in his statement; but I wish to say the theory of gentlemen on the other side is that the Constitution is the paramount law and overrides the other; and therefore the provision would be in pursuance of existing law.

Mr. SPRINGER. The rule provides, as I was trying to state, that no provision in an appropriation bill shall be in order changing existing law unless it shall retrench expenditures. The existing law is that no greater sum than $2,000 shall be allowed to either the contestant or the contestee for his expenses in an election case. To that extent a proposition may be moved upon this appropriation bill, and to that extent the Appropriations Committee is limited and the Chair is required to rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Illinois if he is speaking in support of the point of order? If he is, the Chair will say further debate on that side is not necessary.

Mr. SPRINGER. I was speaking in support of the point of order. But I will say there is no reason a claimant should not present his private bill to go to the Committee on Claims, and it can go through the formalities of a private claim. There is nothing under our law to prevent that; but under our rules and by this statute we are confined to this particular amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The question involves the consideration of two or three provisions of law. By section 130 is prohibited the payment by the House of Representatives out of its contingent fund, or otherwise, to either party to a contested-election case for expenses incurred in prosecuting or defending the same. The later law contains the provision passed at the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress, that—

Hereafter no contestant or contestee for a seat in the House shall be paid exceeding $2,000 for expenses in election contests.

The Chair understands perfectly well that no law can bind the House so as to prevent it from originating in proper form a change of the law. This is simply a question of the form of changing the law. Our rules say it shall not be changed except in certain particulars on appropriation bills; and among those particulars is this: that an amendment to an appropriation bill changing existing law shall not be in order—

Except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Therefore it is simply a question whether this thing can be done under our rules by an amendment offered to an appropriation bill. The Chair, to settle his mind, makes it analogous to the question of appropriating money for any other purpose where by law the amount is limited as in the case of a salary; and inasmuch as in this case the law limits the amount to $2,000 when offered on an appropriation bill, the Chair must hold a proposition to enlarge that amount as not being for an appropriation in pursuance of existing law. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The committee rose informally, and Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio, took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SHOBER, its Acting Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 237) concerning an international fishery exhibition to be held at London in May, 1883.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. LYNCH. I now propose to offer something which I think will call forth no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] had risen to offer an amendment and the Chair had recognized that gentleman.

Mr. BRAGG. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after the words "Allen G. Campbell," the words "for enabling Congress to pass a law settling a great moral question."

Mr. BRAGG. The reason of my offering that amendment is that I think that all appropriations——

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman from New York state what the point of order is?

Mr. HISCOCK. My point of order is that the amendment is not germane to the bill and is frivolous.

Mr. HASKELL. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] that it is out of order for another reason; it alludes to great moral purposes, and they have nothing to do with appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The difficulty with the Chair in ruling out this amendment is that pro forma amendments are allowed, and this is specially pro forma. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRAGG. I have offered this amendment in perfect good faith. As I was about to say, the reason for offering it was the belief that I have always entertained that appropriations should state specifically the purposes for which they are made.

I am astonished to find the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HISCOCK] and the chairman of the Committee on Elections, [Mr. CALKINS,] who, in their respective spheres, represent the majority of this House, at loggerheads on the propriety of considering great moral questions in Congressional legislation. I am especially astonished at my friend from New York, and I think it must have been a lapsus linguæ with him when he gave utterance to the expression which he used.

By common consent Allen G. Campbell had no prima facie right, whether equitable or otherwise, to a seat in this House as Delegate from the Territory of Utah, because he did not claim to have received more than some 1,200 votes out of nearly 20,000 votes which were cast. He knew, as he was bound to know, what the law was, that no man receiving a minority vote shall be entitled to a seat, although the person receiving the majority vote may be incapacitated from taking the seat to which he was elected.

In that view, the chairman of the Committee on Elections, [Mr. CALKINS,] instead of urging that Allen G. Campbell was entitled to $2,000 because of any right which he had presented to this House showing that he was entitled to the seat, stated that he was entitled to that money and that the money should be paid to him—for what? Because he had come here and had prosecuted with energy a case which permitted this House to take action upon a great moral question which was festering in the body-politic, and enabled it to pass the law against polygamy.

Mr. CALKINS. I did not say that.

Mr. BRAGG. Then you will have to correct the notes taken by the stenographers, because I think I have stated substantially just what you did say.

Mr. CALKINS. I want to state so that the stenographer may take it down that I will not change my remarks, and I did not make that remark.

Mr. BRAGG. Which remark?

Mr. CALKINS. That it enabled us to pass the law to which the gentleman has referred.

Mr. BRAGG. Then I will take it back.

Mr. CALKINS. I said it enabled us to pass upon the question.

Mr. BRAGG. I will say, then, that it enabled us to pass upon a great moral question. Now, if a proposition comes from the Committee on Elections to pay a man who they have decided was not entitled to a seat and had no claim to a seat, and to pay him on the ground that he should receive the money because he brought a great moral question before the House, I want the appropriation bill so to show, so that when any other gentleman who has a great moral question that he wants to present to Congress and knows of no other way to get money by which to present it, he can contest some gentleman's seat and come here and present that great moral question and give us the benefit of it; and of course we should pay him for the light which we receive upon such great moral questions.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to say, in the first place, that whatever the gentleman may have said with reference to the great moral question with which he has been wrestling, it was entirely a matter of his imagination, and nothing that I said in my remarks could be tortured into any such question as that advocated by him.

What I did say was that it enabled this House to settle a question, not heretofore determined, which was and had been festering in the minds of the people for many years; the question whether a polygamist had the right under the laws of this country to a seat in this body.

Mr. BRAGG. And is not that a great moral question?

Mr. CALKINS. And if the gentleman will examine the report which I had the honor to draw, he will see that I did not place it on any moral ground, but upon the strictly legal ground which I stood upon all the way through.

Mr. BRAGG. I was not alluding to his report, but to his remarks made a few minutes since.

Mr. CALKINS. And the gentleman entirely misapprehended what I undertook to say. I tried to correct my colleague on the committee, [Mr. ATHERTON,] when he made remarks in the same line, by telling him that I had no reference to the law passed by Congress in my remarks on the election case. What I said was that Mr. Campbell had made it possible for this House to pass upon a question never heretofore passed upon by the House.

Mr. ATHERTON. How did he do that?

Mr. BRAGG. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. LYNCH. I move to amend by striking out the words "full of" and inserting in lieu the words "part for" in line 2047 of the bill; so that it will read:

That the parties named below be allowed the amount set opposite their names in part for expenses incurred by them respectively in contested-election cases, &c.

I have no speech to make.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now desire, as we have gone through the bill——

Mr. HISCOCK. We are not through with the bill yet.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an agreement to return to page 43, which the Chair will call attention to at the proper time.

Mr. CALKINS. I move to amend by striking out all of this paragraph after the words "M. E. Cutts, $1,000."

Mr. SPRINGER. These cases which the gentleman proposes to strike out have been provided for in the preceding paragraph?

Mr. CALKINS. Yes, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ATHERTON. I move to amend by adding after the pending paragraph the following:

M. D. Ball, applying to be admitted as a Delegate from Alaska, $1,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. ATHERTON. The gentleman had better withdraw the point of order and let us vote on this.

Mr. HISCOCK. I withdraw it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I renew it, but will reserve it till the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ATHERTON] makes his statement.

Mr. ATHERTON. I will state——

Mr. HISCOCK. I hold my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves the point, as the Chair understands, to enable the gentleman from Ohio to make an explanation.

Mr. ATHERTON. I wish to state that I am directed by the Committee on Elections to offer this amendment. The matter has been fully considered in that committee, and the members have—I do not know whether unanimously or not, but almost if not quite unanimously—concurred in authorizing the amendment to be offered.

The Territory of Alaska was acquired under a treaty——

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman will confine his remarks to the point of order.

Mr. ATHERTON. I thought I was permitted to make my statement.

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, I must insist now upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is that there is no law authorizing a Delegate from Alaska; there is no such territory as Alaska; and this proposition is simply to provide compensation for an officer not recognized by law. It is new legislation. It is, if you please, a donation of money.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ATHERTON] upon the point of order.

Mr. ATHERTON. There is such a territory as Alaska. It may not be an organized territory, but there is a territory of Alaska, and it is the property of the United States.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. And it is a disgrace to Congress that it is not organized.

Mr. ATHERTON. Upon the point of order I desire to say that the Government of the United States being under treaty obligation to give to the citizens of that territory all the rights, privileges, and immunities of citizens of the several States, and not having provided that territory with an organized form of government as the United States by solemn treaty agreed to do, the people of Alaska, taking the initiative themselves, elected a person to represent their interests before the Congress of the United States and sent Mr. Ball here for that purpose.

A MEMBER. There are only two hundred and fifty people there.

Mr. ATHERTON. Oh, no; 7,000.

A MEMBER. They are wild Indians.

Mr. ATHERTON. They are not "wild Indians" at all. They are Indians that have cultivated the arts of civilization to quite as great an extent as some white people that could be named.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. How many votes were cast at the election?

Mr. ATHERTON. Only about three or four hundred; I cannot give the exact number. But Mr. Ball came here; he has been recognized to a certain extent before the Committee on Elections and the Committee on Territories; he has made his appearance before the Committees of the House and Senate; he has been doing certain work here, assuming to represent the territory of Alaska and its people. This being so, the people of the United States having received from him these services, he having given to us information of value touching the population and resources of that territory, is it not in order in recognition of those services which have been to a certain extent rendered to allow him some pay for them; and whether his right to appear in the full character of a delegate has been recognized or not, have we not recognized a similar principle in regard to other parties who have been allowed certain sums by reason of the connection that they or persons of whom they were the representatives maintained to the Government? If in the case of a deceased member of this House we can not only allow pay for services rendered but in addition make allowance to his legal representatives for services never rendered, shall a provision be declared out of order which proposes simply that this man be paid a certain sum for services actually rendered?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the point of order does not perhaps require prolonged argument——

Mr. CALKINS. Before the point of order is decided——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. CALKINS. It is due to the Committee on Elections to state, in furtherance of what my colleague on the committee [Mr. ATHERTON] has said, that this whole subject was referred by the House to the Committee on Elections, who reported it back and asked that the determination of the question be deferred until the Committee on Territories should make a report upon the policy of organizing the territory of Alaska. The Committee on Territories, as I understand, has reported a bill for that purpose, which is now on the Calendar. This question as to the right to a seat was then reported back, and the proposition now lies on the Speaker's table, if I remember rightly, subject to be called up at any time when the Committee on Elections may decide to do so. The question as to the right to a seat carries with it as an incident under the rulings of this House the question of the right to expenses in conducting the contest. The Committee on Elections, therefore, being clothed with authority to investigate the matter, have through my colleague reported to the House this amendment.

It is not obnoxious to the point of order which the gentleman from New York makes against it any more than any other subject referred to the Committee on Elections and reported back from that committee. The House clothed the Committee on Elections with the power to investigate, and as an incident to the investigation of the title of this man to a seat upon this floor they reported back to this House that he should be allowed $1,000 for his expenses.

Mr. VALENTINE. Was the question of expense referred to your committee?

Mr. CALKINS. Yes; under the authority which the committee has as an incident to the main question, we have always, under that construction, been entitled and recognized by the House to the right to report back in reference to these expenses.

Mr. VALENTINE. That is in reference to cases of claimants coming from districts having a right to representation on this floor.

Mr. CALKINS. Under the treaty between Russia and the United States by which we acquired Alaska, this territory has as much right to representation as any other Territory of the United States. They are entitled to it under the terms of that treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. CALKINS. I say in my judgment, Mr. Chairman, this point of order is not well taken, for the reason that as incident to the right of this man to his seat as a Delegate from that territory he had a right to be paid his expenses, and the committee had the right as incidental to the investigation of the main question to report for reference to the Committee on Appropriations or to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether under the provisions of the treaty he has referred to there is any provision securing to that territory in terms the right to representation?

Mr. CALKINS. The terms are general, but the treaty puts that territory on exact equality and upon the same footing with all the other Territories of the United States. It declares that the United States will guarantee to the people of that territory the same rights guaranteed to all other Territories. Because Congress has refused to act, because Congress has been derelict in its duty, is no answer to the proposition that this Government by solemn treaty, by solemn law, promised to guarantee to the citizens of that territory all the rights citizens of other territories enjoy. And it is a shame and disgrace to our civilization as it is now. We have been enforcing laws under the authority of the Navy. It was said that one man was taken out and hung because they had no jail in which to confine him. Men go eight hundred and nine hundred miles for the purpose of determining suits.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. CALKINS. The amendment is not obnoxious to the point of order at all. As an incident to the power with which the Committee on Elections was clothed we had a right to pass on this question of expense. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. MOULTON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must ask the gentleman to be brief in discussing the point of order.

Mr. MOULTON. I desire to say only a word. I was not here when my friend from Ohio offered this amendment. But, sir, this is a case where this House has no jurisdiction, and a case where the Committee on Elections had no jurisdiction and never had by any action of this House. This is the case of a man voluntarily coming from a far-away country claiming to be a delegate from Alaska. He claims to have received by some means 160 votes, and that he has that number of voters behind him, and by that statement of his own, certified to by nobody this House can recognize in any shape or manner, asks to be admitted as a delegate. I say here, Mr. Chairman, that he has not a shadow of claim or right or equity. He stands upon the ground of a mere adventurer asking Congress to give him money he is not entitled to.

Under the treaty between Russia and the United States the Government of the United States was left entirely to its own discretion as to when it should be admitted, and how admitted, and how represented.

Not a precedent can be found from the foundation of the Government down to this time where a man has come to Congress under circumstances of this kind asking admission and it has been allowed. If you admit this claimant we will have from remote sections of the country crowds of adventurers with much better claims than this man has.

Mr. ATHERTON. What other country could a man come from?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Wrangel Land. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has reminded gentlemen repeatedly of the desire of the Chair that they would confine themselves to the point of order.

Mr. MOULTON. It is necessary for the committee to understand the facts in order to be able to determine as to the point of order.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS rose.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask for a ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York rise to oppose the point of order?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I rise in opposition to the point of order. I desire to say only a word in addition to what has been said by the chairman of the Committee on Elections. The people of this territory claim the right under the treaty with Russia to send a representative to this House and the right to demand his admission. He has come here under their instructions and as the result of their election. We have recognized their right in the premises so far as to refer the question to the Committee on Elections. That case is now pending before the Committee on Elections, and until the House shall decide it——

Mr. HISCOCK. I call the gentleman to order. He is not discussing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear how the gentleman applies his argument to the point of order.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I say, until the House decides the question, who is going to say we shall not admit Mr. Ball as a delegate? And if we do admit him upon the report of the Committee on Elections, who shall say that there is a law to prevent his being paid for coming here to represent his people and make his contest before this House?

The CHAIRMAN. Whenever the House shall have recognized his right to a seat, as the gentleman from New York suggests, that of course carries with it the question of compensation. There is a territory of Alaska, but it has not yet been organized. There is a treaty which in general terms secures to the people of that territory the general rights of citizens of the United States. There is no law authorizing an election upon which a delegate may come here and claim a seat upon this floor. The Chair knows of nothing which authorizes the gentleman to claim the right to come here excepting a voluntary election on the part of an unorganized territory. The point of order, therefore, is sustained, and the amendment ruled out.

Mr. ATHERTON. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. ATHERTON. Let me ask if I have any right to discuss the question further upon the appeal?

Mr. HISCOCK. I demand a vote upon the appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is willing to hear the gentleman unless objection be made.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on sustaining the decision of the Chair.

Mr. ATHERTON. I would like to make a remark or two. [Cries of "Regular order."]

The CHAIRMAN. Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 9.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. HISCOCK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, believing now that the text of the bill is complete, as an additional section.

The CHAIRMAN The Chair has been requested to recognize another gentleman, a member of the Committee on Elections, to offer an additional amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of line 2078 the word "one," after the word "Cook," and insert "two;" and in the same line, after the word "Cutts," strike out the word "one," and insert "two;" so that it will read: "To J. C. Cook, $2,000; M. E. Cutts, $2,000."

The question was taken; and the Chair decided by the sound that the noes had it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand a division, and would like to say a word in explanation which I think will remove any difficulty.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is dividing.

Mr. ATKINS. Nobody understands the amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. Regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think there will be no dispute if the committee will listen to a word of explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Illinois making a brief explanation?

Mr. RYAN. There is objection.

Mr. CALKINS. I trust the committee will hear the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman will be allowed to proceed for a brief explanation.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, this simply puts the contested case between Cook and Cutts upon the same footing that all of the other cases have been placed upon, and allows the full amount provided by the statute in such cases. This provision simply pays the total amount of the expenses in place of dividing it and paying one half now and the other half at some future time. We have obeyed the rule heretofore, and although the case is not fully completed the committee understand that these expenses have been incurred, and it is just as well to finish it all up now.

Mr. ATHERTON. I only want to suggest in reply to the gentleman from Illinois that, applying the same rule you have applied to the other case just decided upon one of these men certainly has never been admitted and may never be admitted to a seat.

Mr. SPRINGER. The papers and the vouchers in the case have all been filed with the Clerk.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand this is simply an effort to change the report of the Committee on Elections in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. A division has been called for upon this question.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I offer the provision which I send to the desk as an addition to the end of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the salaries and expenses of a commission to negotiate a commercial treaty with Mexico, a sum not exceeding $20,000, to be expended under the direction of the President of the United States.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will send up to the desk to be read in connection with that a letter from the Secretary of State.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is all right.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire that to go to the end of the bill, although it would be as well to have it inserted under the head of the State Department, where it properly belongs.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be so understood.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am willing the vote shall be taken. The paper will be printed in the RECORD.

The paper referred to by Mr. HISCOCK is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 5, 1882.

SIR: In 1831 a general treaty of amity and commerce was concluded between Mexico and the United States. This treaty having been abrogated by the war with Mexico, an article (No. 17) was inserted in the treaty of peace reviving it for eight years, so far as not incompatible with the new treaty, and giving to each party after the expiration of eight years the power to terminate it on one year's notice. This treaty is now terminated through notice given by Mexico.

This Government has reason to think that the appointment of a commission to negotiate a new treaty will be met by the appointment of a similar commission on the part of Mexico, and that the negotiations might result in a treaty of great benefit to both powers, and not only so, but the treaty would in all probability form a precedent for treaties with other South American republics, and thus the commercial and friendly relations of the republics of this hemisphere would be promoted. Such a treaty as is desirable cannot be properly adjusted and formulated without the intervention of a commission. The President therefore directs me to ask that a clause may be inserted in the sundry civil appropriation bill appropriating "for the salaries and expenses of a commission to negotiate a commercial treaty with Mexico, a sum not exceeding $20,000, to be expended under direction of the President."

It is proposed to appoint two commissioners who will be paid salaries, and will act with some officer of the Government who will not receive a salary. The appropriation should be sufficient for the two commissioners and possibly a secretary, and for the expenses of the commission. No accurate judgment can be formed of the probable expenses without knowing whether Mexico, in case the commission is agreed to, would wish it to sit in Mexico.

A recent precedent may aid the committee in forming a conclusion. On the 8th February, 1871, the then Secretary of State asked the Appropriations Committee for an appropriation of $25,000 for the American representation in the proposed joint high commission to confer upon the questions then pending between Great Britain and the United States. Two commissioners received each $6,000 as salary and for expenses. There were other expenses, such as furnishing the room in which the meetings were held, stationery, messenger, &c., but the whole expenses were decidedly within the appropriation, which will undoubtedly be the case with the proposed commission if the meetings are held in Washington.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

FREDK. T. FRELINGHUYSEN.

Hon. C. G. WILLIAMS,
Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Mr. HOLMAN. The whole amendment is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regards this as being in continuation of the public service—intercourse with foreign countries, treaty making, &c.—and as not creating new offices.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no such commission authorized by law.

A MEMBER. We are making a law for the purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. And I do not propose that we shall make such a law upon an appropriation bill. There is no law authorizing this commission.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the Chair allow me to say one word on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. After the offer of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] to send up a letter the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] rose and stated that in his opinion the amendment was subject to the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. The purpose of my sending up the letter was to inform the House as to the merits of the proposition. It does not bear on the point of order. On the point of order, I will remark that I suppose it is always competent for Congress to appropriate money to execute the treaty power of the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman speaks of the treaty power of the Government. I would like to know what treaty? This does not appropriate money to carry out a treaty or to pay the salaries of a commission already created.

Mr. SPRINGER. It seems to me this provision is not obnoxious to the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana. It is a continuation of the provisions for the enforcement of the laws already in existence, and for the carrying out of the treaty-making power. And a commercial treaty is like any other treaty. If we cannot originate treaties between this Government and foreign countries and appropriate money for that purpose it is the most remarkable thing I ever heard of. And I will say I know of no subject that is demanding our attention at this time more than a commercial treaty with Mexico. We are now building immense railroads to connect the two countries; and we have no adequate commercial laws for the purpose of facilitating future intercourse with that growing republic. I think it is one of the most important provisions that have been offered on this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. If that amendment is in order, there is nothing in the range of the legislative power of this Government that cannot go on that bill. There is no such treaty and no such commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hardly takes the view of the gentleman from Indiana, because we have appropriated for diplomatic intercourse with Mexico a certain sum; and we are always appropriating, more or less, sums for maintaining foreign intercourse and for specific expenses connected therewith. The Chair regards this as the continuation of a public object already in progress, that being the improvement of our commercial relations with Mexico under the diplomatic intercourse of our Government with that country. The Chair rules the amendment in order.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I offer the further amendment from the committee which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay to William T. Duff, carpenter to the House of Representatives, $1,000, to supply deficiencies in appropriations for making boxes in the years 1879 and 1880, being $500 for each year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. By direction of the Committee on Appropriations I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay George Q. Cannon salary, mileage, and allowance for newspapers and stationery for the Forty-seventh Congress, from December 4, 1881, up to and including April 19, 1882, the date the contest which deprived him of a seat in the House of Representatives was decided, deducting any sums he may have already received on account of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House or the Clerk of the House, a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated.

Mr. HASKELL. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In answer to the point of order, I will simply say the Committee on Appropriations have only obeyed the order of the House. In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the 15th day of June I find that the House passed the following resolution:

That the memorial of George Q. Cannon be reported back to the House for reference to the Committee on Appropriations, with the recommendation that he be allowed mileage and salary, and allowance for stationery and newspapers up to and including April 19, 1882, the date the contest was decided in the House, deducting any sum he may have already received from the Sergeant-at-Arms.

That resolution was reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] from the Committee on Elections, by order of the Committee on Elections, and was passed by this House. In obedience to that order of the House the Committee on Appropriations have directed me to report that amendment to this bill.

Mr. HASKELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HASKELL. Yes; on the point of order.

I asked distinctly the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MILLER,] who reported that resolution, as to what effect it would have, and other members on the floor did so, and it was stated it was a mere reference of it by the Committee on Elections to the Committee on Appropriations for their action and for their finding. That resolution went through the House to the Committee on Appropriations with the distinct understanding that the Committee on Appropriations was to determine the merits of the case.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman answer me this question? Did he not understand when the House passed that resolution on motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] who sits by me that it conferred special power on the Committee on Appropriations to make this recommendation?

Mr. MILLER. I so stated.

Mr. HASKELL. I am not objecting to the report of the Committee on Appropriations. I do not care to deny, Mr. Chairman, the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman from Kansas allow me——

Mr. HASKELL. I want to make my statement on the point of order first. I do not care to deny the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations on this subject; it is not necessary to my point that I should. I am willing to admit that they had jurisdiction; I am willing to admit that they had the right to report this amendment.

But I raise the point of order that there is no law—and it takes both Houses of Congress and the consent of the Executive to make a law—there is no law on the statute-book that permits this House to pay any man a sum of money for services which he never rendered, and to have a salary which was never due him.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Was he not in his seat up to that time?

Mr. HASKELL. He never was a member of this House on a prima facie case or any other case.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I quoted the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MILLER.]

Mr. HASKELL. Wait till I get through. He had no certificate of election; he never was sworn in; he was never a Delegate in this House from the Territory of Utah; he never had a right to sit here a moment. There is no authority of law for paying a man a salary who was not entitled to a seat.

I only desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that when the Committee on Elections reports as a fact and the House acts upon it that he is not entitled to a seat, then from the date of that action of the House to the end of Congress the man so reported against draws not a dollar of pay.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to make this inquiry? The proposed amendment speaks of the date of the contest "which deprived him of a seat in the House."

Mr. HASKELL. Ah, but he never had a seat in this House. In order to have a seat, even on a prima facie case, he must be sworn in, and he never was sworn in.

By the action of the Speaker of this House his name was stricken from the pay-roll at the beginning of this present session of Congress. I call the attention of the Chair to the record of the House. Under the law which gave the Clerk power to place his name on the roll he drew pay up to the time when by law the Speaker struck his name off the roll. From that time on down to the present time he has never been for a moment a member of this House, and is in no way entitled to pay as such.

Mr. ATHERTON. By what authority did the Speaker take his name off the roll? There was authority for the Clerk to put his name on the roll. What authority was there on the part of the Speaker of this House to take his name off the roll? Was it not an act of usurpation?

Mr. HASKELL. When the Speaker comes in possession of his place by vote of the House the House is then organized, and the power of the Clerk in that regard ends with the election of the Speaker of the House.

Mr. ATHERTON. What right had the Speaker to do that? That is the question.

Mr. HASKELL. The House concurred in the action of the Speaker; the House never ordered his name to be put on the roll again.

Mr. ATHERTON. By what action of the House was that concurrence had?

Mr. RANDALL. I guess the gentleman will find that the Speaker never did any such thing.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Speaker never did it.

Mr. HASKELL. Oh, but the Speaker did do it. When the Speaker decided the point of order which was raised, if there was any appeal taken it was voted down. When the Speaker made his decision that took his name off the roll, and the House failed to put his name back on the roll again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to have the gentleman from Kansas speak to the point of order touching the authority granted to the Committee on Appropriations by the resolution of the House.

Mr. HASKELL. Exactly. The point of order is that this amendment proposes to pay a man a sum of money when there is no warrant of law for the payment of it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is upon the propriety of adopting the amendment.

Mr. HASKELL. That is it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wants the gentleman to speak to the propriety of entertaining the amendment at all, of considering it.

Mr. HASKELL. I will raise the point of order against its consideration, because under the third clause of Rule XXI of the House it cannot come in here. There is no law for it.

And I want to call the attention of the Chair to this fact, that an order of this House is not a law. It does not matter what this House has ordered with reference to the disposition of a resolution; that confers no power to pay, except when there is a statute authorizing that payment.

Mr. ATHERTON. Did not the order of the House change the rule of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The point is whether it is right to entertain the proposed amendment. On that point the only ground upon which it is offered, as the Chair understands, is a resolution adopted by the House.

Mr. HASKELL. I raise the point of order covering the introduction of the amendment and covering the adoption of the amendment. I am perfectly willing if the Chair wants to make a decision upon the power of the Chair to entertain the proposition that the Chair shall rule upon that point.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all there is before the Chair.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Committee on Appropriations have simply come in here and made a report under the direct peremptory order of this House.

Mr. MILLER. By an overwhelming vote.

Mr. ATHERTON. I would like to state in that connection——

The CHAIRMAN. On the point of order?

Mr. ATHERTON. I simply want to make the suggestion that the rules of this House are not acts of Congress, and the order made by the House in reference to this case is to a certain extent a suspension of the general rules of the House; and the general rules of the House having been suspended as to this case, it is no longer obnoxious to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will settle the point of order. The only question that arises is under the order of the House which has been read and which the Chair has before him. The Chair observes a remark by the Speaker at the time the resolution was pending:

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the resolution if referred to the Committee on Appropriations without action by the House would be entirely inoperative.

Mr. MILLER. The only proper course is to adopt either the one or the other resolution.

In conclusion the RECORD shows:

The question recurring on the resolution reported by Mr. MILLER, it was agreed to.

There was thus formal action by the House; and that action embraced the language "mileage and salary and allowance for stationery and newspapers up to and including April 19, 1882."

The Chair thinks he is bound to recognize the amendment as in order, it being offered by the Committee on Appropriations, having jurisdiction of the subject-matter.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I ask a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment as it now stands will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay George Q. Cannon salary, mileage, and allowance for newspapers and stationery for the Forty-seventh Congress, from December 4, 1881, up to and including April 19, 1882, the date of the decision of his contest for a seat in the House of Representatives, deducting any sums he may have already received on account from the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House or the Clerk of the House, a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to, there being—ayes 76, noes 10.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to give notice that there will be a vote by yeas and nays on this amendment in the House.

Mr. RYAN. On behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, I move to amend by inserting, after line 1547, the provision I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Where two or more Indian agencies have been or hereafter may be consolidated the expenditures at such a consolidated agency for employés, exclusive of the agent's salary, shall not exceed $15,000; and in no case shall money be expended for such purpose at any such agency beyond the actual needs of the service.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HISCOCK. On behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, I move to amend by striking out the words "and Saint Croix," where they occur in line 363; by inserting after the word "rivers," in the same line, the words "the Saint Croix River, in the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, and the Chippewa River, in the State of Wisconsin;" by striking out the word "river," in line 374, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "and Chippewa Rivers."

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe this amendment applies to a part of the bill which has been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. It cannot be entertained if there is an objection.

Mr. HISCOCK. In the printing of the bill an error occurred, to which my attention was not called until after we had commenced the consideration of the bill. The Chippewa River was dropped out; it was intended to be inserted following the Saint Croix River. The amendment I now propose does not increase the amount of the appropriation at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning to a preceding part of the bill that this amendment may be offered?

There was no objection.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, it was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to offer an amendment making simply a change in phraseology, to which the Committee on Appropriations have consented. It is to strike out, in line 126, the words "constructing sewer to river," and insert in lieu thereof "drainage and water supply."

There being no objection, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move to amend by inserting as an additional paragraph the following:

That no indefinite appropriation made by this act shall exceed the sum of $5,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make a point of order on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair inquires to what this amendment is germane?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It is offered as an additional section. It is certainly germane.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are indefinite appropriations in the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL. It is practically a reconsideration of provisions of the bill already adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call the attention of the Chair to one indefinite appropriation, on page 81, beginning at line 1985:

And the Attorney-General is hereby authorized, should it be necessary, to cause the reports of the Supreme Court of the United States upon which the copyright has expired to be republished, and cause the same to be annotated under the act of March 3, 1881.

Mr. HISCOCK. My point of order is that this is virtually a change in provisions of the bill which have already been passed upon, and I make the point of order that we cannot go back in this way to those provisions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think that it is a proviso affecting the whole bill——

Mr. HISCOCK. It is in effect an amendment of every indefinite appropriation in the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It is offered as an additional section, and puts a limitation on all indefinite appropriations in the bill.

Mr. CASWELL. One of which would be deposits of moneys for surveys.

Mr. HISCOCK. As I remember it, the amendment for the payment of an additional month's salary to the employés of the House would also be nullified by this amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. No; that is a definite appropriation.

Mr. HISCOCK. No; it is indefinite.

Mr. SPRINGER. The law fixes the salary of every one, and therefore it is a definite appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. While the amendment is blind in its application to the bill, that is not the fault of the Chair, and he thinks it to be a legitimate amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that it is bad policy to leave discretionary power with the heads of Departments to incur expenditures exceeding $5,000. My amendment is directed particularly to the provision adopted yesterday authorizing the Attorney-General to republish or reprint certain volumes of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States for the purpose of furnishing sets to the different Federal judges.

A statement was made at the time the provision was pending in the House that the Attorney-General had already entered into a contract for reprinting these reports, having, as alleged, authority to do so under the sundry civil bill passed at the last Congress.

I feel satisfied the gentleman from New York was misinformed. I am informed reliably that the Attorney-General takes the same view I do of this matter, and that every legal mind must take of it who reads it with care and deliberation. The Attorney-General, as well as those who have sought to get the contract to print these reports, was of the opinion there was no authority under that sundry civil appropriation bill of last session for the reprinting of these reports, or else they would not come here and ask for authority under this bill. I understand no contract has been made, and that none is contemplated unless this bill shall pass.

The remark made yesterday undoubtedly encouraged the committee to adopt the amendment, and to put into the hands and power of the Attorney-General what was not there before. It seems to me that if he had authority under the sundry civil bill of the last session this committee would not have come in at this session to ask for it. It would have been useless and ridiculous to come here and ask for authority already conferred by the sundry civil appropriation bill of last session.

It was said by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] yesterday if this is permitted to stand with unlimited authority to the Attorney-General to enter into contract for the reprinting of these reports, it may result in the expenditure of nearly $100,000 out of the Treasury of the United States. As the bill stands there may not be more than seventy copies of the volumes needed to be reprinted. It would not be a saving to reprint that small number, for to do so—that is to reprint seventy copies of a volume—would cost $100 a volume, whereas they can now be purchased for $3 or $4 a volume. It would be a saving, therefore, to purchase them rather than to reprint them.

Mr. VALENTINE. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, which is offered to reach one item in this bill, would, in my judgment, reach many others.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It only applies to proper cases.

Mr. VALENTINE. It was offered to meet one case; but it strikes down provisions which he himself has voted to put in. I refer specially to the one giving the employés of this House a month's extra pay.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. No; this refers only to indefinite appropriations.

Mr. VALENTINE. There is no amount stated in that appropriation. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. I move an amendment to the amendment that it shall only apply to the clause of the bill supplying certain volumes of the decisions of the Supreme Court to Federal judges. A word on that amendment. The argument made on the other side last evening was that these volumes cost $1.50 and are sold for $5 a volume, and therefore it would be cheaper to reprint them than to buy them in the open market. That perhaps would be true if we were going to reprint 5,000 copies; but as we only need fifty or sixty copies at most of any one volume, which would cost only $3 or $4 each, perhaps we had better purchase them at that price than authorize a republication for which you will have to pay $4,000 to get your stereotype plates ready to publish one single book. I think the amendment of my colleague with the amendment I have suggested is a fair limit to this appropriation, which is now unlimited.

Mr. SPRINGER's amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let us have a division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 40, noes 66.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the following amendment:

To enable the President to carry out the provisions of section 1753 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to promote civil-service reform and official accountability, $15,000.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order upon that amendment, that it has been once offered in this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; I withdraw it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know that this committee will consider no subject of equal magnitude during this Congress in comparison with the one that is now pending. I know further that if there is any one measure which the public service demands and which the public voice of this country requires it is that this House shall do what they can do to reform the civil service of this Government. This proposition was offered by my friend from Pennsylvania the other day, and under a misapprehension, as I believe and hope, was disagreed to; and I trust that the committee will now consent to appropriate this comparatively small sum of money, only $15,000, to see what the President will do and can do through the proper commission to suggest reforms upon which Congress can act. All men, sir, who are watching the course of government are watching it with solicitude in connection with the question of our own civil service; and I cannot be astonished that gentlemen who are willing to levy assessments upon the salaries of the employés of the Government should sneer at the efforts made upon this floor by any man who may suggest a provision as to reform in the civil service. If there is a refusal to appropriate this small sum, I trust gentlemen will state some reasons which will be satisfactory to the committee and to this country for that action.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to strike out the last word. I wish to call the attention of gentlemen on this side of the House and of the committee to the fact that the President of the United States in his message to Congress in December last asked for an appropriation of this character for the purpose of carrying out this section of the Revised Statutes. Let me read the section:

The President is authorized to prescribe such regulations for the admission of persons into the civil service of the United States as may best promote the efficiency thereof and ascertain the fitness of each candidate, in respect to age, health, character, knowledge, and ability, for the branch of service into which he seeks to enter; and for this purpose he may employ suitable persons to conduct such inquiries, and may prescribe their duties and establish regulations for the conduct of persons who may receive appointments in the civil service.

If there were no other reason, the fact that the President asks for means to carry on this inquiry ought to lead Congress to respond to his wishes.

But there is a reason outside of this recommendation for adopting the proposed amendment. Without reference to various methods of civil-service reform which have been suggested, every member of the House knows that the subject is one of great importance. The civil service of the country is composed of about 100,000 persons, and is increasing with the growth of the country. Such a vast amount of patronage dependent on the success of this or that political party will soon put altogether too great a strain on our institutions. It is the duty of statesmen, therefore, to investigate this question and see if remedies for admitted dangers cannot be devised.

I trust, therefore, that this side of the House especially will support the amendment looking to an investigation of this subject.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word to the committee on this civil-service reform question. I do not believe we had better put into this bill any appropriation for the purpose named in this amendment. I am on the Civil-Service Reform Committee of this House, as my friend from Kentucky was kind enough to inform us the other day, and I trust I may be permitted to say that if there is any humbug that is greater than another in this country it is this competitive examination business for clerkships in the Departments. If there is any one thing that will demoralize the service of the country and result in the poorest selections, it certainly is that system. Why, I almost prefer the plan of my friend from Kentucky, although I do not know in just what manner the question of his candidacy was determined, whether it was by a game of draw-poker or by throwing coppers. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIS. I suppose it must have been the first, as I take it for granted the gentleman is more familiar with that than the other.

Mr. HORR. Not exactly. I recollect the gentleman said that it was by lot, and he proved it from Scripture that they used to determine such important matters by lot, and he cited the case of Jonah. Now I have never had any good reason shown heretofore why the whale threw Jonah up——

Mr. WILLIS. I do not like to interrupt a prospective good point, but I said nothing about Jonah.

Mr. HORR. I beg the gentleman's pardon; he said they cast lots when they proposed to throw Jonah overboard, and the lot fell upon Jonah; and what I was about to say was this, I never heard before of so good a reason why the fish got rid of Jonah as the one stated by the gentleman from Kentucky. [Laughter.] If Jonah was one of these modern civil-service reformers my sympathies are all with the whale. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, a civil-service reform which would enable us to appoint only good men to office, that would save this country from trouble and the members of this House from endless importunities, would meet my approval. I would, notwithstanding it would put some Democrats in office, divide the whole clerical force of this country among the Congressional districts; I would make every Congressman responsible for the appointment of these men; I would have the member know when a vacancy is to be filled, and let him fill it, and put a stop to this eternal clattering and chasing around after men to get positions.

Mr. SPRINGER. That would make it worse.

Mr. COX, of New York. How would that apply in the case of the stenographers?

Mr. HORR. I would turn out the stenographers when they ought to be turned out, and put good men in their places when there ought to be other men put in their places. That is all we have done or that our Speaker has done; and it is what Speakers before him have done.

As to this amendment I am opposed to keeping up a board for the purpose of ascertaining whether a man can answer technical questions in geography as a test as to whether he can examine pension claims or not. I would put a man in office who gave a test of his fitness for the duties he had to perform, and if he turned out a bad officer I would turn him out and put another in his place until I got a good one. And I would not keep him in for life.

Mr. ATHERTON. You would keep him in as long as he continues to pay his assessments.

Mr. HORR. What would soonest ruin the civil service of this country would be to keep men in for life, retaining their offices till they are fit for nothing else. There has been nothing worse for the civil service of this country than that in the whole history of this Government. More men have been ruined by keeping them too long in these clerkships than have ever been injured by removals.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CURTIN. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to be recognized, and yield my time to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. HORR.]

Mr. CURTIN. I have but a few words to say on this subject. I am in favor of an appropriation to pay the expenses of a commission of citizens appointed by the President to reform if possible the civil service of this country. I had the honor of introducing a bill into this House early in the session in which I indicated precisely what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] has advocated, the selection by Congressional districts, by the member of Congress. I desire that this Government shall be freed from the importunities of these higher officials in the appointment of officers.

In the appointments to offices of a subordinate character members of Congress do not seem to be of much account, if we form an opinion from the reports of appointments in the Departments where the expense is audited and stated. The appointments are generally made through the influence of Senators of the United States, who are a part of the appointing power; and through judges—oh, save the mark!—the influence of judges of the Supreme Court of the United States! Think of Marshall, with his thirty-three years of judicial service, with his great opinions and constructions of the Constitution so interwoven with it that to the people they are as part of that matchless instrument itself; think of the great Chief-Justice of the United States, in his spotless ermine, standing before a subordinate official of this Government and asking him for the appointment of a clerk or a messenger!

I must not be understood as in the least depreciating the character of the justices of our august judicial tribunal for learning or integrity. They do but yield to a custom which has grown and spread over all official influences, and they, too, are subjected to the importunities of applicants for office which no one seems to have the fortitude or dignity to resist.

This is not a political question, nor is it born of the recent assessment on officials for the promotion of party success. It has engaged the attention of wise, patriotic, and judicious men of all parties. The subordinate civil service as now administered and procured is a festering sore on the body-politic, which independent men desire to cure and neither ridicule, wit, nor denunciation will deter them from the assertion and determined advocacy of their convictions of duty.

If there is any need for civil-service reform when will that period come? And if this body does not take it upon itself to reform the civil service so that it shall not be debauched and degraded, let us allow the President to appoint a commission of citizens who have turned their attention to that important subject and report to this Congress some reform which will give to this Government efficiency in its official channels, and save us from the disgrace of seeing high officials join in such importunities. [Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. WILLIS. I renew it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman will allow my colleague [Mr. WILLIS] to reply.

The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, Mr. KASSON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and pending that motion I move that all debate upon the pending amendments and all amendments to the bill be limited to twenty minutes.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was also agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. KASSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill; and under the order of the House all debate upon amendments to the bill is to be closed in twenty minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to say by way of explanation there are two matters that perhaps need some discussion; the amendment providing for an appropriation of a certain sum of money to be put at the disposal of the President of the United States, and another amendment which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] proposes to offer to the clause of the bill appropriating for the printing of the records of the rebellion. I propose that ten minutes be devoted to the first amendment I have alluded to, and ten minutes to the latter. Of the ten minutes allowed for the first amendment I propose that five shall be given to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] and five to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. HORR.]

The CHAIRMAN. That disposition of the time may be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. BAYNE. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now pending is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. WILLIS. I move to strike out the last word.

I am very glad the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] who honors the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service by his membership has at last had an opportunity to unburden himself upon that important question. I saw him the other day, when an amendment similar to this was pending, treading this aisle up and down like some elephant when his jungle had been invaded. [Laughter.] And now when his time has at length come he has delivered himself with a force, a beauty of expression, and an innate genius that will embalm his memory in the hearts of the civil-service reformers of the country.

The gentleman, imitating the very bad example of one of my colleagues, [Mr. WHITE,] has gone out of his way to make an allusion to my last canvass. I take it that the gentleman did not mean to be understood as seriously attacking me for simply settling my candidature with a brother Democrat by lot instead of precipitating upon a community of mutual friends the scenes of crime and political debauchery which are the usual attendants of nominating conventions. If the gentleman now or at any time hereafter wishes to be serious in this matter, if he desire to institute an investigation of the method of my canvass, I say to him in all frankness that I am ready, and he will find perhaps that there are blows to give as well as to receive.

Assured, however, that he meant only a bit of pleasantry, I will pause only to say that no allusion he can make here to the method of settling my election controversy will meet with the slightest feeling or objection. He is mistaken if he presumed that the feeling which I in part expressed upon this floor the other day was caused by the simple reference to the act of casting lots. It was because newspaper comments, disproportionate in their vehemence to my act, comments which have been long since forgotten by all concerned, were placed in the RECORD without explanation, without statement that they rested upon that single transaction. If I am not mistaken I could put not only my friend from Michigan but probably every member of this House under a temporary cloud of dishonor and suspicion by gathering up the floating newspaper charges circulated during an excited canvass. Does my worthy friend see the point of this observation? If so, let him "govern himself accordingly."

Now, as regards Jonah and the whale, I did not in my remarks the other day allude to either of them. I am sorry I did not, as the whole force and appropriateness of the gentleman's facetious reply are thus, like Jonah, knocked overboard. If my friend had given me due warning of his intended and very witty reference to Jonah I surely would have said something to have enabled him to have made it. Such brilliant scintillations of wit are too rare upon this floor and in the country to be suppressed for want of facts to inspire them.

But as the honorable gentleman has got in his work on Jonah and the whale, I hope before I take my seat to show him that his reference to that little sea story was most unfortunate both for himself and for his party.

The very humorous comment my worthy brother made touching that distinguished mariner reminds me, as Mr. Lincoln would say, of a "little story," which I will tell in connection with the amendment now pending, and as illustrating the position of the Republican party upon this whole question of a reform of the civil service. Prior to telling it, however, I desire to call the attention of this committee to the fact that this section, 1753, creating a civil-service commission, was put upon the statute-books as far back as 1871, and that, too, by a Republican Congress. Year after year has passed and this commission, appointed under Republican auspices, has been unable to operate because of the refusal on the part of Congress to give the money necessary for its purposes.

And not only that, Mr. Chairman, but that refusal of Congress, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] tells you, has been in the face of the deliberate appeal made by your President in two messages that this appropriation be made. It has been in the face of your solemn declarations in national conventions, that civil-service reform should be immediately secured to the people of this country.

This course of conduct on the part of the Republican party, this quadrennial outburst for reform when a Presidential canvass is in progress, brings me in the most natural way to my story, which is about another mariner who was not a Jonah. I refer to old Captain Cross, who lived down on the raging Ohio, and was the gallant commander of a first-class mud-scow; not, therefore, quite as distinguished as the quondam prophet of Nineveh. Even among the boatmen of the Ohio River, where sanctity is the exception rather than the rule, he was regarded as the most profane man that ever walked the deck of a boat. His profanity was notorious.

Upon one occasion he landed at the town of Owensborough, which has the honor now, and I hope will long so continue, of being represented on this floor by my friend and colleague, Mr. MCKENZIE, and his boat got stuck fast in the mud. Here was a crisis. How could he get out of it? He called his first mate and told him to go up into town and ring a bell and tell the people that he was converted, that he had got religion, that he intended to reform, to change his life, to lay aside his evil ways and become a pious and devoted Christian. His mate went up in town and rung the bell and made proclamation according to orders. Moved by curiosity, piety, and sympathy, a vast crowd of men, women, and children poured down to the river bank where this other Jonah and his craft was in danger. He said to them, "A prayer-meeting will be held in the rear of this boat." They all went on the boat, and in that direction, and as soon as they got there the bow of the boat rose out of the mud, and he told them that that prayer-meeting was ended, that he had no further use for them, and they could go home, ashore, or to Halifax. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBESON. Is that the attitude of the Democratic party?

Mr. WILLIS. That is the attitude of the gentleman who interrupts me, and the party to which he belongs. Every four years the Republican ship gets stuck in the mud. A Presidential election is coming on and they make a great many professions of reform; they tell the good people of the country they intend to change their evil courses. But when they get them, when they have induced the good people of the United States to come on board their political craft and join in the great prayer-meeting for reform, when through their aid and prayers and votes the Republican ship is out of the mud, they tell them, in language probably not so profane as that of the captain on the Ohio, but equally as emphatic, as they will do by their votes to-day, that the prayer-meeting is ended, they have no further use for them; they are put ashore or are thrown overboard like Jonah was and the ship moves on its way.

Mr. ATHERTON. Their ships are of such a kind that they never will get out of the mud.

Mr. HORR. I sympathize very deeply with the effort of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] or any man on the Democratic side of the House who starts out on a genuine mission of reform.

I had not quite finished the question which I was intending to call the attention of my friend from Kentucky to when I was stricken down on account of lack of time. I fear from the speech which he made a few days ago that he fails to apprehend the exact position in which he placed the people of Kentucky when he decided such an important contest, which he tells us was done by the flip of a copper—heads up, the other fellow runs; tails up, WILLIS runs. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman is entirely mistaken; it was a dime.

Mr. HORR. Well, call it a dime which they flipped; the great principle is the same, I take it. Now, the thing I object to is that any man should be so dull in reference to a great moral question. The rights of the people in selecting a great statesman of this country were involved. Only think that he should permit for a moment the destinies of a people to hang upon such a trifle as that—the selection of statesmen, the good of the country, perhaps the salvation of Kentucky hanging on the mere accident as to which side of that ten-cent piece turned up. It is too serious a matter to be decided in that way.

Kentucky has always been noted for its fast horses and its lotteries and some other things. But this is the first time I ever heard that she decided the caliber of her statesmen by heading and tailing ten-cent pieces. [Laughter.]

When I was trying to give you a simple statement of what would end this whole trouble about civil-service reform, my friend from Ohio, [Mr. ATHERTON,] if I remember aright, slipped in a word, which I did not catch very distinctly. I think he wanted to know if I would not have these men kept in their places until we could get 2 per cent. out of them. Was not that the question?

Mr. ATHERTON. That will do, anyhow. [Laughter.]

Mr. HORR. That will do, anyhow. It is wonderful how these Democratic souls are moved over that 2 per cent. business. My friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] usually heads that business. I know he does not do it with any seriousness. I know he always has a sort of Heathen-Chinee look on his face every time he makes his regular civil-service reform motion. [Laughter.]

But, pray, is he so much troubled about that question as he pretends to be? Brother SPRINGER, how much money did you pay to get your present seat? Did I not hear you say the other day that it cost you over $2,000?

Mr. SPRINGER. I made no statement on the subject, I think. I have never been assessed by any committee of the Democratic party; I have never paid anything but legitimate expenses.

Mr. HORR. When we were trying to raise the salary of a man who was getting $3,000 and gentlemen on the other side were trying to cut it down, the gentleman from Illinois said: "That is more than I get now, after I pay my bills." I heard him say so myself. I do not find any fault with it. You have a right to pay such expenses. But pray tell me is it any more honorable for a man to contribute of his own money in order to get a seat on this floor than it is to contribute to the getting of a friend here? Has not a man just as good a right to subscribe voluntarily and freely for the purpose of sending his friend here as you and I have to pay the expenses which fall to the lot of us all? When did the Democratic party cease to use money for either legitimate or illegitimate purposes in connection with elections to this House?

I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that it does not take as much money to run their elections as it does ours. Where you can use tissue ballots and capture 20,000 votes in a State by the mere expense of a $5 bill, the business is easy and cheap. Shot-guns are cheap. It is easy enough to carry elections when you can do it as you are now trying to do by redistricting the State of South Carolina—running a district up and down that State its entire length, dividing even townships and making such a looking map as would disgrace a set of ordinary villains. No man who lives in that State has a face with brass enough in it to look at that map as the State is now redistricted and not hang his head in shame.

A MEMBER. How about Michigan?

Mr. HORR. I am willing to put Michigan right by the side of South Carolina.

Mr. MCMILLIN. How about the State of Maine, where one district covered the entire coast under the last districting?

Mr. HORR. The State of Maine is all being run "at large." There is no redistricting there at all. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX, of New York, obtained the floor.

Mr. REED. Nobody has ever charged any gerrymandering in districting the State of Maine.

Mr. McMILLIN. And how about Pennsylvania, where even counties have been divided by the Republicans to carry out gerrymandering schemes.

Mr. MILLER. I challenge the gentleman to name the district in Pennsylvania gerrymandered by a Republican Legislature in the manner he states.

Mr. WILLIS. I would like to know what has become of civil-service reform?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is not in order. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] has been recognized and is entitled to proceed.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to voting a reasonable sum, and even to place it in the hands of our President for the purpose, if it be possible, of purifying and elevating the public service. I do not believe any man of either party, if he would reflect for one moment, would oppose an appropriation looking toward the purification and elevation of our civil service. We are reproached all over the country to-day because of the frauds that exist throughout this service. It rests with Congress to purify it. I know that General Grant, when President, made some efforts in this direction; and we voted him money for the purpose; but it seems there was some difficulty in carrying out the measure. Perhaps the difficulty was with his Cabinet. I see my friend fom New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] looking at me. His Cabinet may have been a "bad partner" in that business. We had all our hopes disenchanted.

> Our very hopes belied our fears;
> Our fears our hopes belied;
> We thought her dying when she slept,
> And sleeping when she died.

I hope the Republican side of the House will sing that in their next election campaign. I would like the people of the country to have two issues before them: in the first place, the elevation and purification of our civil service; and in the next place the question of taxation, its amelioration and eradication. Gentlemen on the other side cannot undertake to mislead the people. Since your Senate has begun upon the tariff and internal-revenue business, in spite of all your conduct here, in spite of all your commissions, those two issues will be made before the people; a reduction of taxation, so that the burdens upon the people shall be lightened; and reform in our public service, a substantial reform in spite of all the language used here, to the end that no such article shall be sent out as I now read from the Boston Herald, an independent paper:

> Fraud, fraud, fraud everywhere, and nobody punished. This is about the way matters seem to be going under our beautiful system of government by spoilsmen. Frauds in the mail service; frauds in Indian supplies, frauds in naval contracts, frauds in the signal service, and Howgate walking out of jail, to the delight of Washington society, and now the old story of frauds in connection with the land office.

Did not somebody in President Grant's time remark about the whisky and other frauds that reform was necessary? If ever reform was necessary it is necessary to-day in regard to this attempt now bolstered up by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. HORR,] to levy this 2 per cent. assessment on every office-holder, even on employés in the Life-Saving Service, even on laborers, even on the teachers in our Indian schools. You command all these people, irrespective of age or sex or condition or color, to assist in bringing you back to Congress by paying 2 per cent. on the little salaries that are vouchsafed to them. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I will divide my time between the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON.]

Mr. ROBESON. You take three and I will take two minutes.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, it is difficult to do justice in three minutes to a topic I have been desirous of discussing, and that is the little arrangements which the Democratic party indulge themselves in over every appropriation bill. It is surprising to see what little mouse-traps they are always trying to set. It seems as if every appropriation bill goes through to the music of the explosion of a series of mouse-traps, set by the gentleman from Illinois and sprung with re-echoes by the gentleman from New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX, of New York. Why do you not take off your political assessments?

Mr. REED. They are utterly unable to rise to the dignity of any question of importance, but they are eternally striking attitudes before a set of people who have been dead and buried for five and forty years. [Laughter.] They are struggling to catch the ignorant, but the American people have ceased to be ignorant since the days of Andrew Jackson. [Applause.] And if these gentlemen could only see themselves as others see them they would find themselves in a cemetery appealing to graves under which lie what has long ago ceased to be even remains. [Laughter and applause.]

Why, look at them. Look at them on the Chinese bill. Why, two-thirds of them wanted to vote for ten years, and they so expressed themselves in private, but all of a sudden a bright idea struck them and they said, winking one unto the other, "Go to, now; we will catch this Republican President and make a great Democratic issue with which we will sweep the whole Pacific coast." So, man by man, men who had declared they were going to oppose the twenty years and be in favor of the ten, swung up solid and the bill passed. And it was vetoed. They said, "Blessings on us. Here is statesmanship, Democratic statesmanship, real and genuine." [Laughter and applause.] When the bill was vetoed we passed a sensible bill and the President signed it, and our majority in Oregon went up from 1,500 to 3,000. [Applause on the Republican side.] That Democratic mouse-trap exploded and no one was in it.

Gentlemen, do not go on setting mouse-traps for elephants; that is the trouble with you. You cannot rise to the dignity of any occasion. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. You are the Jumbo. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; that gentleman always rises to the dignity of an occasion suitable to himself. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, yes; Jumbo is now talking. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. Why, the gentleman from Illinois actually got his lungs exhausted the other day and requested permission to print. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. You never exhausted your lungs.

Mr. REED. If they were never exhausted before, they were exhausted that time.

Mr. SPRINGER. You never exhausted your lungs.

Mr. REED. The time and patience of the House had been exhausted long before. He puts in an appearance now not for the purpose of presenting this question, but to get into the RECORD for the fifty-seventh time to-day. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let Jumbo now retire to the rear and let the real genuine white elephant come forward. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Chairman, it is easy to find fault with great principles or the movements of great organizations; and when I find a party or a man who devotes his time and his talents to merely finding fault, then I begin to sink my dislike for the party or the man into a sentiment of sympathy. He is made for no affirmative purpose, and nothing remains but the negative character of obstruction.

Now, then, the Democratic party has seen a new light within the last thirty days. They are for civil-service reform, that is, so far as they can utilize it for the purpose of injury to the Republican party and other people.

Let me ask them a question or two in order to see if they are for anything that is practical? First, in its crusade for civil-service reform, does the Democratic party mean to say that it is a crime for a man who takes an interest in the welfare of his country and believes that welfare is to be perpetuated by the maintenance of a particular set of principles to contribute voluntarily of his substance to the support of that party?

Mr. RANDALL. Voluntarily is good. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBESON. And then, if that is so, is it a crime to do it when asked to do so by the organization of the party which represents those principles?

The CHAIRMAN. The time to which the debate has been limited has expired.

Mr. ROBESON. I would like to ask the Democratic party one other question, and it is this, [cries of "Regular order!"] whether or not they are in favor——

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to answer the gentleman if his time is to be extended.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, and the only question now before the committee is that offered by the gentleman from Indiana, which the Clerk will again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> To enable the President to carry out the provisions of section 1753 of the Revised Statutes, to promote civil-service reform and official accountability, $15,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. Can I not have a few minutes?

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask that the gentleman from New Jersey shall have 2 per cent. of the time allowed to the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no time left for debate. The question is on the adoption of the amendment just read.

The amendment was agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. DEUSTER. I move to strike out after the word "soldiers," in line 1228, page 51, to line 1234 inclusive.

Mr. HISCOCK. I must reserve the point of order upon that amendment. It is going back to another part of the bill, but I will say that I have stated to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I would consent that he might have two minutes to offer a proposition and discuss the same upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The trouble is that the committee has no time.

Mr. ROBESON. Can it not be done by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. Not even by unanimous consent. The Chair, however, will recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin to proceed for two minutes, unless some gentleman shall demand the regular order, after which the gentleman will without objection print the remainder of his remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. DEUSTER. Mr. Chairman, the section sought to be repealed is as follows:

> SEC. 2. All pensions payable, or to be paid under this act, to pensioners who are inmates of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall be paid to the treasurer or treasurers of said home, upon security given to the satisfaction of the managers, to be disbursed for the benefit of the pensioners, without deduction for fines or penalties, under regulations to be established by the managers of the home; said payment to be made by the pension agent upon a certificate of the proper officer of the home that the pensioner is an inmate thereof and is still living. Any balance of the pension which may remain at the date of the pensioner's discharge shall be paid over to him; and in case of his death at the home, the same shall be paid to the widow or children, or in default of either to his legal representatives.

It prohibits the collection of fines and penalties from the inmates of soldiers' homes out of any pension money granted them by the Government. This section was substituted for a bill to that effect introduced by me in March, 1880, (bill 3577, second session, Forty-sixth Congress,) and which I thought at the time, and still consider, a measure calculated to restrain and obviate abuses which had grown to be unbearably unjust to the poor men who, for want of a better home or a home at all, must give up their independence and subject themselves to the restrictions of a public institution.

It is a notorious fact, and one reflecting little credit upon us, that those having the greatest claim upon the exercise of all the noble impulses of human nature, I mean the unfortunate inmates of public institutions, as a general rule are first made to suffer from its worst traits. Inhumanity and brutality seem to find a sort of shelter, a place of refuge, under the delusive cover of "management" at our benevolent, reformatory, or penal institutions, where the will of but one individual or a few is allowed to reign supreme. Protected in its little brief authority by what we are pleased to call "rules and regulations" for the government of inmates, this individual will, thus unrestrained, grows and thrives like a well-nurtured plant, until its bitter fruits are harvested and we are nauseated by sickening reports of brutality, violence, oppression, and ill-treatment.

Like some rotten fruit that may fall from overreaching branches to the ground beyond the high inclosure of a garden, these reports then reach the outside world in spite of the "rules and regulations" by which such institutions are usually walled in. What then follows is too well known to need recital here. In the usual order there are outbursts of public indignation, exposures, and charges, denials, investigations, whitewashing reports, or suggestions for "reform," perhaps followed by wrangles over new appointments, and the subject relapses into its wonted silence until the next case of the kind occurs.

But we never think of curbing this unlimited authority, this unrestrained assertion of will which generally make our bad laws still worse, and oppressive acts still more unbearable; they are permitted to continue their tests of the extent to which human subjection to individual will, passion, and supremacy in power is possible, with the aid of the degrading shackles called "rules and regulations."

Owing to this tendency some of our public institutions are gradually drifting away from their intended purpose, and some, originally creations of purest benevolence, have changed into hot-beds of tyranny and misery to the unfortunates remaining there from dire necessity or confined for reformatory purposes. The evil is constantly spreading, and no time should be lost in correcting it wherever such abuses exist.

Now, one would expect the national military homes to be the last places in the country where abuses of power would ever be practiced; for are their inmates not the honored defenders of the country, the brave men for whom a grateful nation has prepared, in their age, their infirmity, and their time of need, this shelter against a cold, indifferent world? Are they not the homeless wards of the nation who were to be provided with a home and cared for in their age, their infirmities, when they lost a limb, or, worst of all misfortunes, were shut out forever from the light, the beauties, and pleasures of the world by the loss of eyesight? And are they not a part of the men, the armies, whose gallant deeds will live in a thousand songs in the history and the hearts of our people so long as the praise of valor and heroism will re-echo in the warm hearts of our youth?

Yes, they are the same men; their shattered limbs and disfigured forms speak a language of their own; they need no words to tell of the dangers, the storms, the battles they have braved; and they are the men who for these very reasons were to be permitted to enjoy at these homes for the rest of their lives freedom from those cares and troubles which the bustling, crowding outside world will thrust upon all those who cannot well take care of themselves.

But, alas! Hearts that did not tremble before the bullets of the enemy cower before an oppressive authority armed with "rules and regulations;" eyes that did not wink before the attack of a furious foe are humbly cast down before the insulting mien of a "superior," who fattens upon their own substance taken from them neither by open honest force nor by due process of law, but by the equally efficient means of "rules and regulations." These homes, by their very existence, were to prove the desire of the country that the men who had given their limbs and their health to its service should not become objects of public charity; those who failed to provide or lost their own homes in the great struggle to preserve those of others were here to be cared for, not as mere objects of charity, but entitled to our fullest respect and warmest sympathy. In offering them "homes" we assumed all the sacred obligations which the act implied.

And how have we performed this duty? I am ashamed to admit the fact; we have permitted these very men to be robbed. For years a systematic robbery had been practiced at these "homes," plundering these poor men under the guise of fines and penalties, (imposed, of course, by virtue of "rules and regulations,") often of the very last dollar they had in the world. In some instances occurring at the Milwaukee home the entire amount of the pittance granted some of these veterans as pension had thus been confiscated month after month, and in some cases this robbery had been carried to an extent and under pretexts which would place the whole proceedings in the light of a most ridiculous farce were it not too painful a subject to contemplate. As a case in point I might state the case of an invalid, almost totally blind, who was victimized in this manner by the skillful handling of those "rules and regulations" to the extent of four years and a half's pension money; and, as he stated to me in a letter, he could not get a postage-stamp until this fine is all paid in. And for what offense, pray? What had this man done? He had been guilty of the grave offense of leaving this attractive home to seek medical aid elsewhere, and failing in this, he had returned to ask for readmission, and the latter was then made conditional upon the payment of that fine.

I am somewhat curious to know whether in the event of the death of such a victim of the "rules and regulations" the board of managers would present a claim as his legal heirs to the Government for a continuance of the dead man's pension until his fine is paid; or would they sell his body to some medical college, in order that the bones may still yield after death what they failed to obtain by the process of "skinning" during life?

My astonishment when first informed of these systematic robberies was only equaled by my indignation. I had always been under the impression that pension moneys by special provisions were exempt from all interference; that they were the sole and exclusive property of the soldier to whom the country gave the pension. What a great mistake that was! Or rather how shamelessly had the good faith of the country been violated by the boards of managers of these institutions. Under pretext of self-created "rules and regulations" they had placed themselves above courts, law, all and everything, and have robbed these poor fellows, by imposing unjust and unreasonably high "fines," of their little savings, often of their pittance of a pension altogether—of their only possessions in life save what they carry upon their backs.

Thousands of pensioners are to-day in the employ of the Government, some in very high positions; but no one is so unreasonable or unjust to demand that they should give up their pensions because they are salaried employés of the Government. On the contrary, the law provides that they shall have, when honorably discharged soldiers, a preference over others. Yet these crippled, often hopelessly diseased invalids, who are, one and all, slowly tottering toward the grave, are permitted to be robbed of their pension-money under pretense of "fines" in the homes (!) we so generously (!) provided for them! Truly, the spectacle is one which does credit neither to the dignity nor to the fairness of our paternal Government.

It was claimed that the rules and "regulations" aforesaid, by which these extortions were legalized, had the sanction of the highest official authority before they could be carried into effect; and again, that these "homes" were not self-sustaining, and depended to some extent upon incomes from these "fines," and so on. The latter statement seems to me a preposterous one. If they cannot exist without material assistance, let that support be asked for out of the national exchequer, and it will be given, but do not rob the pensioned invalid! Moreover, if there is any good authority for such proceedings I have failed to find it. The power vested in such a board can only be supervisory, not absolute; the inmates of the homes are not prisoners restrained of their liberty, and subject to increased or lessened punishment, but honorable, free citizens, entitled to fullest liberty of action compatible with maintenance of good order and to respectful treatment. While there must necessarily be some little restraint wherever a large body of men is formed into one common household in order to secure its benefits to all alike, still the widest scope possible under the circumstances must be allowed to each one, and such individual privileges especially, like the control of financial affairs, must never be interfered with.

Indeed I will go so far as to say if such abuses cannot be avoided without doing away with all "rules and regulations," why, abolish them altogether and depend on the good sense of the men for order; and if the boards of managers cannot get along without them, abolish the boards along with them too; and if these "homes" cannot exist without either, abolish them also; and let us own up, frankly and honestly, that we cannot take care of these poor men. But away with this hypocrisy, this false mask of an assumed national generosity, which pretends to "care" for them and then steals with the one hand back again what an "open-handed," "grateful" country professed to give them with the other.

Instead of tempering generosity by injustice, let us rather temper discipline by sympathy, necessary authority by personal kindness. If we promised bread, let us not give a stone instead; if we would profess to honor the dead, let us do it by showing kindness to the living.

I cannot close without placing a large share of the responsibility for the injustice and ill-treatment complained of in this instance where it properly belongs, to the reprehensible "class-spirit" generated in those from among whom the commanding officers of these "homes" are selected. I mean the class which by training from early boyhood, by habits and associations, gradually becomes estranged from the mass of the people from whom they are taken to be educated at the country's expense at a military academy, and which thus loses that feeling of a common equality which is so wholesome a restraint upon the humble citizen.

After years of almost unlimited and unconditional reign over a greater or lesser portion of those most submissive mortals, the soldiers of the regular Army, they are delegated to rule at these "homes." How natural that some of them forget that they are no longer to terrorize poor "regulars," but simply to superintend men and citizens who may not be their equals socially, but who surely are their equals before the law.

Not only do I strongly object to the repeal of the section prohibiting this great wrong, but I intend to introduce shortly a proposition to refund all fines heretofore thus unjustly taken from the pensioners of the Government, and thereby make restitution, so far as can be done at this late day, to these recruits for the grand silent army of death. Their stay among us is shortening with every day, every hour, and before long they will have gone to that home which is governed by a Merciful Father who needs no "rules and regulations" save mercy and justice for its inmates.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments to the text of the bill——

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay D. W. Johnson, of Minnesota, for one month's service as a clerk in the Pension Office, the sum of $118.

Mr. DUNNELL. I have here the evidence of the service——

The CHAIRMAN. No debate can be permitted under the order of the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further amendment, the Chair will direct the Clerk to turn to page 43 and read the paragraph to which the amendment was offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] the right to offer it having been reserved to him.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the publication of the official records, and printing and binding, under direction of the Secretary of War, of 10,000 copies of a compilation of the official records, Union and confederate, of the war of the rebellion, so far as the same may be ready for publication during the fiscal year, to be distributed as provided in the act approved June 16, 1880, $33,000.

The CHAIRMAN. To which the gentleman from Illinois offers the amendment which the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 1041 and 1042, the words "to be distributed as provided in the act approved June 16, 1880," and insert at the end of line 1043 the following:

"The volumes of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion shall be distributed as follows:

"One thousand copies to the Executive Departments, as now provided by law. Eighty-three hundred copies shall be sent by the Secretary of War to such libraries, organizations, and individuals as may be designated by the Senators, Representatives, and Delegates of the Forty-seventh Congress. Each Senator shall designate not exceeding twenty-six, and each Representative and Delegate not exceeding twenty-one of such addresses, and the volumes shall be sent thereto, from time to time, as they are published, until the publication is completed. Senators, Representatives, and Delegates shall inform the Secretary of War in each case how many volumes of those heretofore published they have forwarded to such addresses. The remaining copies of the ten thousand to be published, and all sets that may not be ordered to be distributed as provided herein, shall be sold by the Secretary of War at cost of publication with 10 per cent. added thereto, and the proceeds of such sale shall be covered into the Treasury.

"If two or more sets of said volumes are ordered to the same address, the Secretary of War shall send but one set and designate other libraries, organizations, or individuals to whom the surplus may be sent by him.

"The Secretary of War shall report to the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress what volumes of the series heretofore published have not been furnished to such libraries, organizations, and individuals.

"He shall also inform distributees at whose instance the volumes are sent."

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order upon that amendment that it changes existing law and does not accomplish any of the purposes contemplated by the twenty-first rule to retrench expenditures and warrant its introduction as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understood that no point of order was to be made on this amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I must beg the gentleman's pardon; I have not conceded that it was not subject to the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then the gentleman certainly deceived me, for I showed him the amendment and understood him to say distinctly that he would not make the point of order upon it.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman has deceived himself, I certainly have not deceived him.

Mr. SPRINGER. I so understood the gentleman.

Mr. McCOOK. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois if this is the same amendment which has been published in the RECORD?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is of the same purport exactly.

Mr. McCOOK. It seems as if these were some modifications of it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Not in the substance of it. It is the same amendment, only that I have grouped some of the paragraphs.

Mr HISCOCK. I make the further point that it is the substance of a bill pending in the House.

Mr. McCOOK. I am not expressing an opinion as to the propriety of adopting the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire whether there is a bill pending before the House covering this amendment?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir; there is no bill of which this amendment is the substance. There was another bill making a different distribution by the Interior Department, but it did not cover the matter in this shape at all. By this proposition every member will distribute precisely the number he is entitled to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I insist the gentleman shall confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I shall do so. I understand the point of order to be that this changes existing law, and does not retrench expenditures. The existing law was for the distribution of the publications made at that time, and not for these. There is no law providing for the distribution of the volumes authorized by this law to be published. The volumes are now being distributed under a law which provided for the previous publication. And I call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that he has been compelled in this very act to say how they shall be distributed; otherwise there would be no law for their distribution. I say it is not a change of existing law. There is no law that provides for the distribution of the volumes authorized in this bill to be published. And if there is no law authorizing these particular volumes to be distributed, and if it is necessary to put it in the bill that they shall be distributed in a particular way as other volumes have been, I submit that it is competent for us to say when we authorize the publication of these volumes in what manner they shall be distributed.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman say that the mode of distribution is not provided by law?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do. Here in this very paragraph of the bill is a provision that on its face shows there is no law for the distribution, because it directs how the distribution is to be made.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is simply a reference to the appropriation law which provides how these publications are to be distributed.

Mr. SPRINGER. The paragraph says "to be distributed as provided in the act approved June 16, 1880." Why is this necessary if the law provides for the distribution of all these volumes?

Mr. McCOOK. The original law which authorizes the publication of the volumes passed in the year 1879 or 1880—I do not remember which—provided for the publication of 10,000 copies, 1,000 to be distributed to the Executive Departments, 7,000 to the House of Representatives, and 2,000 to the Senate. That was the original law, and the volumes have since been distributed on that basis. Whether the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is an improvement on that or not I am not at present prepared to say, because it appears to me, as I suggested a moment ago, the amendment as read by the Clerk has been modified materially from the amendment which the gentleman offered, and which was published in the RECORD of the 11th of July.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is precisely the same in substance.

Mr. McCOOK. I think it provides for a distribution of 8,300 copies, where the amendment originally offered provided for a distribution of 6,300.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no real change. The difference is that the 2,000 copies for distribution by the Senators are included in the same clause as those to be distributed by members, instead of being in a separate clause.

Mr. HISCOCK. I submit that the gentlemen are wandering from the discussion of the point of order.

Mr. ATKINS. I think the point of order does not lie, because the law is exhausted in the distribution of volumes from year to year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has looked for the law of June 16, referred to in the paragraph, and cannot find it in the supplement before him. He remarks that the clause of the text of the bill provides a mode of distribution by reference to a certain law; and although the Chair has not that law before him he presumes it does provide some mode of distribution, and the text of the paragraph intends to give the same distribution to the volumes still to be published. To that proposition the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] proposes an amendment providing another mode of distribution. It seems to the Chair that the amendment is germane to the text, which provides a mode of distribution, and that it must be submitted to the committee to determine whether they prefer the mode suggested by the amendment or the mode suggested by the bill.

The question being taken on agreeing to Mr. SPRINGER's amendment, there were—ayes 66, noes 10.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was adopted.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. KASSON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, the adoption of which was recommended.

Mr. HISCOCK. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question will first be on agreeing to the amendments reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move concurrence in all the amendments save the one increasing the appropriation for the geological survey. On that I ask a separate vote.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want a separate vote on some other amendments.

Mr. HISCOCK. I want a separate vote on that alone.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire that we shall have a separate vote also on the amendment providing a month's extra pay to the employés of the House.

The SPEAKER. With these exceptions the Chair will put the question on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to ask a separate vote on the amendment giving his salary to the contesting Delegate from Utah, Mr. Cannon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not hear distinctly the statement of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK.] Did he make any reservation as to the three paragraphs of the bill on which it was agreed there should be a separate vote?

Mr. HISCOCK. We have not yet reached that. When the amendments reported by the committee have been acted on I will call the attention of the Speaker to the three paragraphs as to which it was agreed in the committee that motions might be made in the House to strike them out.

The SPEAKER. Then the question will be taken upon agreeing to all the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole, with the exception of those indicated.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question will now be taken upon the first amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole, upon which a separate vote is demanded.

The amendment was to increase the appropriation for the United States Geological Survey from $122,000 to $222,000.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 88, noes 66.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. BLACKBURN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being but 18 in the affirmative, not one-fifth of the last vote.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment, upon which a separate vote was demanded, was to insert, after line 2031, the following:

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay to the officers and employés of the House of Representatives borne on the annual and session rolls on the 15th day of June, 1882, one month's extra pay at the compensation then paid them by law, which sum shall be immediately available.

The question was taken upon agreeing to the amendment; and upon a division there were—ayes 109, noes 15.

So (no further count being called for) the amendment was agreed to.

The last amendment, upon which a separate vote was demanded, was to insert the following:

To pay George Q. Cannon for salary, mileage, and allowances for newspapers and stationery for the Forty-seventh Congress, from December 4, 1881, up to and including April 19, 1882, the date of the decision of his contest for a seat in the House of Representatives, deducting any sums he may have already received on account from the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House or the Clerk of the House, a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry right there.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HASKELL. If I understand the amendment correctly, it provides for the payment of salary from the 1st of December up to and including a certain date.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; less any amount he may have received.

Mr. HASKELL. The amendment provides——

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order on the amendment.

Mr. HASKELL. I am not debating it. The amendment provides that it shall be less the sum already received.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HASKELL. The amendment, as it reads, provides for the payment of salary between two fixed dates.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The amendment is all right.

Mr. ATHERTON. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HASKELL. I am making a parliamentary inquiry, which I have a right to do.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HASKELL. That provides for deducting from the gross sum the amount paid——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment as read.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 96, noes 15.

So (no further count being called for) the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. All the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole have been acted upon.

Mr. HISCOCK. By an arrangement made in the Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] or any other gentleman is entitled to move to strike out of this bill any one or all of the three clauses appropriating money for the families of Mr. O'Connor, Mr. Wood, and Mr. Farr.

Mr. RANDALL. They are all in now; no discrimination is made.

Mr. HISCOCK. I want the gentleman to have the opportunity to move to strike out, as was agreed upon in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no motion to strike out.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was understood that the vote should be taken on striking out those paragraphs.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman submit that motion?

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the three paragraphs indicated, and ask for a separate vote on striking out each paragraph.

The SPEAKER. The first paragraph will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the widow and children of Hon. M. P. O'Connor, deceased, $4,637.13.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope that paragraph will be retained.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

The motion to strike out the paragraph was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay to the legal representatives of the late Hon. Fernando Wood, a member elected to the Forty-seventh Congress, but who died before the time of its organization, $6,000.

The motion to strike out was not agreed to.

The last paragraph proposed to be stricken out was as follows:

To pay the widow and children of the late Hon. Evarts W. Farr, a member-elect to the Forty-seventh Congress, but who died before its organization, $6,000.

The motion to strike out was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now ask unanimous consent that the order of the House providing for a recess to be taken from five o'clock to eight o'clock be vacated for to-day.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the passage of the bill, and under the rule it must be taken by a yea-and-nay vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 138, nays 49, not voting 103; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. DWIGHT with Mr. MULDROW.

Mr. SHERWIN with Mr. KING.

Mr. W. A. WOOD with Mr. NOLAN.

Mr. CORNELL with Mr. BLACK.

Mr. LOWE with Mr. HERNDON.

Mr. MCCLURE with Mr. LEEDOM.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey, with Mr. HERBERT.

Mr. FARWELL, of Illinois, with Mr. SPARKS.

Mr. HEILMAN with Mr. BLAND.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York, with Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina.

Mr. MCCOID with Mr. CLARK.

Mr. LINDSEY with Mr. MURCH.

Mr. WATSON with Mr. TALBOTT.

Mr. HUMPHREY with Mr. BRAGG.

Mr. HALL with Mr. WISE, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SKINNER with Mr. FLOWER.

Mr. THOMAS with Mr. CURTIN.

Mr. HUBBS with Mr. SHACKELFORD.

Mr. DEZENDORF with Mr. GARRISON.

Mr. JOYCE with Mr. STOCKSLAGER.

Mr. BARR with Mr. DAVIDSON.

Mr. MILES with Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois.

Mr. MOREY with Mr. COLERICK.

Mr. URNER with Mr. MCLANE.

Mr. TYLER with Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama.

Mr. CALKINS with Mr. MILLS.

Mr. WARD with Mr. AIKEN.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. HOBLITZELL.

Mr. YOUNG with Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, with Mr. HOUSE.

Mr. WEST with Mr. HEWITT of Alabama.

Mr. HAMMOND, of New York, with Mr. STEPHENS.

Mr. BRUMM with Mr. SPRINGER.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey, with Mr. WELLBORN.

Mr. CROWLEY with Mr. HEWITT of New York.

Mr. HOBLITZELL. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HARMER;] but as I am informed he would vote for the passage of this bill I have felt at liberty to vote in the affirmative.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back, with a recommendation that the Senate amendments be non-concurred in, the bill (H. R. No. 6243) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes. I will ask that the amendments be non-concurred in in gross, or that they be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. In behalf of my colleagues upon the committee to audit the expenses attending the illness and burial of the late President, I desire to ask that these amendments of the Senate be either committed to the Committee of the Whole, to which they would go under a point of order, or be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. If the latter course be agreed to, I will not make a point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is what I ask, that the amendments be considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. As to all the Senate amendments?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to enter upon the consideration of the report now?

Mr. HISCOCK. As I understand it, there is no desire to debate any amendment of the bill or consider any but one of them, and I move, therefore, that all amendments to the bill, only the one making appropriations for the payment of the physicians attending the late President, be non-concurred in.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have them read.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have them voted upon separately?

Mr. RANDALL. I do.

Mr. TOWNSHEND of Illinois. I suggest that the amendments be printed in the RECORD, and that the House adjourn.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask for the reading of the Senate amendments.

Amendments numbered 1 and 2 were severally read and non-concurred in.

The Clerk read as follows:

(3) For printing and distributing the publications by the Department of State of the consular and other commercial reports, including circular letters to chambers of commerce, $3,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I move concurrence in that amendment.

The motion to concur was not agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND of Illinois. Had we not better have these amendments all printed in the RECORD, so that we may have an opportunity of examining them?

The SPEAKER. They have already been printed.

Amendments numbered 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10 were severally read and non-concurred in.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it will not be quite as well to let a motion to non-concur be made with reference to all of these amendments?

Mr. RANDALL. I think we are doing no great harm when we are transacting the public business in this manner.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HISCOCK. And I hope that motion will be voted down.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I appeal to gentlemen on the other side of the House that they ought to let us run the appropriation bills.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, you are running them, and you have run them very extravagantly.

Amendments numbered 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16 were severally read and non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 17 was read, as follows:

(17) That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit Francis E. Spinner, late Treasurer of the United States, with the sum of $47,097.65, amount of the deficiency of June 2, 1875, carried to his debit on the books of the Register of the Treasury, per Auditor's report No. 200925; and he is further authorized and directed to pay to the Treasurer of the United States, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $650.61, to reimburse said Treasurer for an amount appearing on his books as a deficiency and known as the deficiency of February 18, 1875.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move concurrence in that amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 11.

Mr. ATKINS. No quorum has voted.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ATKINS. I will yield for that motion and withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let this amendment be non-concurred in before we adjourn.

Mr. HISCOCK. This amendment went out on the point of order in the House, and I thought it should be submitted to the judgment of the House before it went out in committee of conference. I wanted an expression of opinion of the House, and am now entirely willing that it shall be non-concurred in.

Mr. COX, of New York. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will permit a vote to be taken on this, and withdraw the point of no quorum. I ask consent that the Chair submit the question again.

Mr. ATKINS. I have no objection to that, but the gentleman from New York has moved to adjourn.

Mr. HISCOCK. I withdraw that motion.

Mr. ATKINS. Then I do not give unanimous consent, if that is required, to withdrawing the point of no quorum. I am willing that the question shall be taken again if desired, however.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to non-concur in this amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendments numbered 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22 were severally read and non-concurred in.

The Clerk read amendment numbered 23, as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be paid, out of any unexpended balance of the appropriation for incidental expenses of the Quartermaster's Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, to twenty agents of the Quartermaster's Department employed by Major J. J. Dana, quartermaster, United States Army, the amounts deducted from their salary during the last quarter of said fiscal year, not to exceed $4,700.

Mr. SPRINGER. If we are to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and be responsible for making these appropriations, I would like to understand them as we go along. I ask the gentleman from New York to explain why these salaries were incurred, or why these persons were employed?

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say to the gentleman that I have moved to non-concur in all of these amendments mainly for the purpose of investigating the same question and get from the Senate the information the gentleman seeks to obtain from me.

Mr. RANDALL. I have been appealed to to withdraw my objection to having all of these amendments read and acted upon separately. The reason I made the objection was because I consider that every character of new legislation put on the bill by the Senate should have a hearing and be read in this House. If we do make law it should be read in both Houses; and that is the reason of my objection, which I feel compelled to continue. We have yielded our right to consider these amendments of the Senate in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and therefore there is all the more necessity of having them read at least in open House.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House do now adjourn.

BUREAU OF EDUCATION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in receipt of a telegram received to-day, which he thinks should properly be laid before the House. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

SARATOGA, NEW YORK, July 13, 1882.

General KEIFER,
Speaker House of Representatives:

At a joint meeting of the American Institute of Instruction and National Educational Association, held this day, the following resolution was unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

Resolved, That the following communication, signed by the presidents of the two associations, be sent to the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the chairmen of the Committees on Appropriations of both branches of Congress: "The National Educational Association and the American Institute of Instruction, now in joint session at Saratoga Springs, strongly commend to the care of Congress the Bureau of Education, and respectfully urge the importance of an appropriation not less in amount than that last granted."

WM. A. MOWRY,
President American Institute of Instruction.
GUSTAVUS J. ORR,
President National Educational Association.

The SPEAKER. The telegram will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BRAGG. It ought to be referred to the tariff commission.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DAVIDSON, indefinitely after to-morrow.

To Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. JOYCE, for the remainder of the present session, on account of important business.

To Mr. BARR, for three weeks, on account of illness.

To Mr. HEWITT, of New York, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The regular order is called for, which is the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] for the presentation of a conference report.

IOWA JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I present the report of a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4166) to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House concur in the amendments of the Senate from 1 to 17, inclusive; and in lieu of Senate amendment No. 18 they have agreed to recommend and do recommend the following:

"That all prosecutions for crimes or offenses hereafter committed in either of said districts shall be cognizable within such district, and all prosecutions for crimes or offenses heretofore committed in the district of Iowa shall be commenced and proceeded with as if this act had not been passed."

GEORGE D. ROBINSON,
GEO. L. CONVERSE,
Managers on the part of the House.
A. H. GARLAND,
JOHN J. INGALLS,
GEORGE F. HOAR,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is there a statement explaining this report?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. There is. I have sent it to the desk with the report.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Statement of reasons for conference report on House bill No. 4166.

The report of the committee recommends concurrence by the House in the first seventeen amendments made by the Senate. The effect of these amendments is to reduce the number of places of holding court from eight to six.

Amendment No. 18, as recommended, makes more certain the necessary provisions for the prosecutions for crimes and offenses.

GEO. D. ROBINSON,
GEO. L. CONVERSE,
Conferees on part of House.

Mr. SPRINGER. That complies with the rule. But I would have preferred four places instead of six for holding courts.

The report of the committee of conference was concurred in.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMILLIN. I call for the regular order.

The question being taken on Mr. HISCOCK's motion to adjourn, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McLANE: The petition of J. M. Parr, president of the board of trade, Henry C. Smith, and others, business men of Baltimore, Maryland, for the speedy passage of Senate bill to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WHITTHORNE: Papers relating to the claim of Walter Aiken, administrator of the estate of James Aiken, deceased, of Maury County, Tennessee—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 14, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1170) granting a pension to Jane S. Taplin, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 92) to print 25,000 copies of each of the second and third annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, to report it with amendments. I ask for the consideration of the resolution now.

Mr. HOAR. Let that stand over. I object to taking it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6008) to restore the name of Eliza M. Bass to the pension-roll, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3599) granting a pension to David T. Stephenson, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1925) granting a pension to Ann Elizabeth Rodgers, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3582) to reinstate Cornelius Fitzgerald on the pension-roll, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Electa W. Jacobs, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. VAN WYCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1577) for the relief of Hardie H. Helper, reported it with amendments; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of William C. Pennington, praying that a pension be granted to Mrs. Mary F. McKeever, widow of the late Commodore Israel McKeever, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No 1332) granting a pension to Elizabeth Bauer, to report it unfavorably.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that that be put on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 924) granting a pension to James Kitchen, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2040) repealing section 3961 of the Revised Statutes and the proviso of section 2 of the act providing for a deficiency in the appropriation for the transportation of the mails on the star routes, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2129) to punish postmasters for making false certificates of the arrivals and departures of mails, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 96) relative to schools of medical practice in the United States and the graduates thereof; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. GEORGE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2144) to aid in improving the navigation of the Mississippi River and in preventing interruption to commerce and postal service by the overflow of the Yazoo Delta; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries.

HOUR OF MEETING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no "concurrent or other resolutions," the morning hour is closed.

Mr. ROLLINS. Would it be in order to call up the resolution fixing the hour of daily meeting?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was postponed until Monday by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. ROLLINS. A resolution was subsequently introduced by me, which was not postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair begs the Senator's pardon. The Senator from New Hampshire desires to have the resolution called up fixing the hour of meeting, which can be done, and the resolution can be proceeded with under the Anthony rule. The resolution will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. ROLLINS on the 12th instant:

Resolved, That on and after Thursday, the 13th instant, the hour of meeting of the Senate during the present session shall be eleven o'clock a. m.

Mr. ROLLINS. I move to strike out "Thursday, the 13th," and insert "Monday, the 17th."

Mr. PENDLETON. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ROLLINS. I do not see any necessity for the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations at this time of the session. There is no occasion for it whatever. I think the Senate is fully competent to determine what hour we shall meet without that reference, and I hope the Senate will pass judgment upon it. This is a proposition to meet at eleven o'clock, commencing on Monday next, and if there is any purpose to close up this session and get away it seems to me that it is high time we should change the hour of meeting and meet at eleven o'clock in the forenoon. The objections which were urged by the Committee on Appropriations a few days since, it seems to me, have substantially passed away. The appropriation bills have all been reported, I think, except the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will suspend while the Chair receives a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 4166) to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the sundry civil appropriation bill be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I think he will yield for that purpose.

Mr. ROLLINS. Certainly.

The bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

HOUR OF MEETING.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution of Mr. ROLLINS, to fix the hour of meeting at eleven o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from Iowa if the sundry civil is the last of the regular appropriation bills?

Mr. ALLISON. It is the last of the regular appropriation bills from the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is there any objection now on the part of that committee to agreeing to the resolution fixing the hour of meeting at eleven o'clock?

Mr. ALLISON. I shall interpose no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think myself the time has arrived when we can meet at eleven. I was very willing before to defer to the Committee on Appropriations, because they did not then have possession of all the regular appropriation bills.

Mr. INGALLS. How many appropriation bills remain unacted upon?

Mr. ALLISON. All the bills before the committee have been reported except the pension appropriation bill, which will be reported this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio is not heard on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say I see no objection now to meeting at eleven o'clock, because the Committee on Appropriations now have possession of all the regular appropriation bills. The other day, when they had not possession of all the bills, I thought it was proper enough to defer to them. It seems to me that now, having possession of all the bills likely to pass, we had better adopt as early an hour as eleven o'clock for our meeting, perhaps earlier still.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to my friend from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] that he change his motion to refer to the Committee on Appropriations to a motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance. Ordinarily I grant the Committee on Appropriations would be the proper committee, but the most important matter now before the Senate, and the one that promises to consume the greatest amount of time, is in charge of the Committee on Finance. For that reason I suggest to my friend from Ohio that he modify his motion so as to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance instead of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

Mr. ROLLINS. I merely wish to suggest, if there is no occasion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations, that there can possibly be no reason for referring it to the Committee on Finance, because they have reported the last important bill referred to them, and the only one. I think there is nothing of importance before that committee at this time. The other day we were told by the Senator from Kentucky that it was absolutely necessary that the Committee on Appropriations should be present at all the sessions of the Senate; that they desired very much to be present. The force of that suggestion had its weight with the Senate, but I thought I would take notice of their movements. I think within fifteen minutes after the resolution was disposed of by postponement until Monday there was no member of the Appropriations Committee present in the Chamber. I find no fault with them by any means; I only call attention to the fact that whether we meet at eleven o'clock in the forenoon or at twelve o'clock it matters not to the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Finance; if there is any occasion for meeting in their committee-rooms, if there is any business for them to do, they will attend to that business.

I see no reason why we should postpone action upon this resolution any longer. I do not want to press it unreasonably on the Senate. I do not want the Senate to do anything that will interfere with the orderly conduct of the business of the Senate; but it does seem to me that with the large Calendar which has been accumulated here, with the very large number of bills upon it, it would be quite proper for the Senate to meet at eleven o'clock and undertake to act upon some of the bills which have been pending for a long time.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Hampshire had waited a moment before he commenced the speech which he has just concluded, I should have saved him that trouble by announcing, as far as I am concerned, that now, since the last appropriation bill has come from the House, I care nothing about the time of meeting; and I was going to say that I make no objection to meeting at ten o'clock or nine o'clock, or as early as he wanted. That is all I cared about saying; but when the Senator from New Hampshire announced that I had assumed it was indispensable that either I or any other member of the Committee on Appropriations should be always present in the Senate he did not state what I said. I said we had a right to be present during the sessions of the Senate, and there are measures brought up sometimes when it is very important that we should be present. Very likely we went out the other day in fifteen minutes afterward, because we have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate, and when any subject is up that we think renders it safe for us to leave we go, subject to call by the Doorkeeper of the Senate; and we go in order to utilize the time.

Since we agreed yesterday that the tax bill shall suspend all other public business for a week, and I am willing to suspend all other public business for a month until we get through with it, I do not think we are going to be hastened any longer, and I do not think the Committee on Appropriations will find it necessary to absent themselves during the sessions of the Senate to attend to the sundry civil bill. I think we shall have the month of July, the month of August, and also the month of September to perfect that bill, for I surely will never vote to lay aside the tax bill until there has been a yea-and-nay vote on every item of taxation that I think ought to be reduced. We are going in to make a record now as to who wants the taxes reduced and who wants them kept up, and I want the record made complete. I expect to begin, if you please, with harness, trace-chains, horse shoes, Bessemer steel, woolen goods, tobacco, whisky, and plenty of other things, and we shall have a record that will satisfy the gentlemen on the other side if it takes until December. We shall have plenty of time now without absenting ourselves from the Senate to attend to the sundry civil bill. I expect to be in the Senate and I expect the committee to have ample time during the next two or three months to perfect that appropriation bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] what is the occasion of the delay in reporting the pension appropriation bill? It passed the House several weeks since. It is a matter about which there is no possible question between the two Houses, and it is very strange to me that that matter, which affects the rights of so many of our citizens, has not been acted on before this time.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to my friend that the pension appropriation bill will be reported this morning.

Mr. INGALLS. I asked why it had not been reported. It has been before the committee for two weeks.

Mr. ALLISON. Not quite two weeks.

Mr. INGALLS. Very nearly two weeks; there is no possible objection to it from any quarter, and there is great necessity on the part of thousands of indigent pensioners that it should be reported.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course it is to be presumed there will be no objection to the pension appropriation bill, but that, like other bills, must be considered in committee; and the committee have had under consideration a great many amendments to it. I do not know of any pensioner who is suffering because that bill has not been reported. It is time now that it should be reported and considered, and I hope it will be considered within a day or two.

Mr. INGALLS. I have been informed at the Treasury that very serious embarrassment has resulted, and they have been obliged to transfer funds under the joint resolution continuing appropriations, thus requiring delay, inconvenience, and trouble to pensioners.

Mr. ALLISON. It may have inconvenienced one or two clerks in the Treasury for a few moments, but my opinion is that no detriment will occur if the bill shall be passed within a few days.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like also to inquire why the naval appropriation bill is not taken up.

Mr. ALLISON. As far as the naval appropriation bill is concerned, I will say to my friend that it was reported yesterday. I have not had time this morning, having other matters on my hands, to ascertain whether it has been printed as reported.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is on our desks.

Mr. INGALLS. It is printed and on the table, and I ask the Senator when it is to be taken up?

Mr. ALLISON. It will be taken up at the earliest practicable moment.

Mr. INGALLS. When will that probably be?

Mr. ALLISON. On consultation with other Senators as to the condition of business.

Mr. INGALLS. Is there anything in the way of taking it up immediately?

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose the Senator from Vermont wants to take up the tax bill to-day.

Mr. MORRILL. I shall insist on the consideration of the tax bill, which was up yesterday.

Mr. INGALLS. It has always been the rule that appropriation bills had the right of way. It has always been the practice of the Senate, always understood, that appropriation bills were to be considered when they were ready, and it appears to me to be unjustifiable and invidious that this delay should occur in these great measures which affect the welfare of so many people.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will allow me to interrupt him by stating that there certainly has been no delay so far as the Committee on Appropriations is concerned with reference to these bills. We have been sitting upon the naval appropriation bill for the last week, every day and every night except one or two.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator from Iowa if we shall not have to rescind the Republican caucus resolution before we can take up the naval appropriation bill? That seems to be in the way.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inform the Senator from Iowa and also the Senator from Alabama that all this is irregular, because the motion is now pending to refer the resolution.

Mr. ROLLINS. Let action be taken on that.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to be advised how it is irregular. When a resolution is pending a Senator has a right to speak to it, and it is not proper for the Chair to say that discussion is not in order. The question is whether we shall meet hereafter at eleven o'clock, and it is legitimate and germane to ask what business is pending in order that we may vote intelligently upon that question. The rebuke of the Chair is not in place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not take the speech of the Senator from Kansas as any great rebuke; neither did he intend to rebuke the Senator. The Chair thought the catechism of the Senator from Iowa was not in order. The Senator from Kansas did not address the Chair to speak to the resolution, but was catechising the Senator from Iowa upon the appropriation bills.

Mr. INGALLS. Did the Chair refer to me as catechising any person?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir; as catechising the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. INGALLS. The Chair I suppose is not bound by the ordinary rules of criticism. If the Chair means to assume by using the term "catechism" that I have no right to interrogate the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations as to the condition of the public business when we are discussing a resolution as to whether we shall meet at an earlier hour in order to enable us to adjourn, I beg to say that I differ with the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator did not address the Chair. He commenced interrogating the Senator from Iowa, and the Chair has no apology to make in the matter.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Something has been said as to the delay of the appropriation bills. That inquiry would be more proper if addressed to the other end of the Capitol. The Senate Committee on Appropriations has worked diligently to get the bills reported to the Senate. I will say to my friend from Kansas that I agree with him that they ought to have been reported and passed long ago, but the fault lies at the other end of the Capitol. Those bills ought to have come here much earlier. The 1st of July was allowed to come, when the bills ought to have taken effect, before they were sent here, and then it is expected that they will be got through the Senate without proper examination. I can say that the fault is not here.

I have happened to belong to the sub-committee on each of the bills which has been inquired about, the naval and the pension appropriation bills; and I say to the Senator from Kansas that I agree with him that they ought to have been taken up and passed long ago. The committee of the Senate has acted diligently and faithfully and has done all that was possible in order to get the bills before the Senate. For one week has the pension appropriation bill been inquired into, and the Commissioner of Pensions more than once has appeared before the committee to give information. The Senator will find when the bill is presented, which will be to-day, that there are considerable amendments made by the committee, and some very important ones both to the pensioner and to the taxpayer; and I hope when he sees the bill he will not complain of the committee on this side, but let his voice go to the other end of the Capitol, as it ought to do. As to the naval bill, it is before the Senate; and it is for the Senate to say whether they will take it up this morning or when they choose to consider it.

Mr. PENDLETON. I have no desire to refer to either the Appropriations Committee or the Committee on Finance a resolution which neither desires to consider. Therefore I withdraw my motion to refer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to refer is withdrawn. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to the resolution striking out "Thursday, the 13th," and inserting "Monday, the 17th."

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend by inserting the "20th" instead of the "17th." I do that because there are a number of committees which meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, and they ought to have that hour in which to act. I know the Committee on Military Affairs has its regular meeting on Tuesday, and there are many important matters that we ought to be able to report on that day. If the Senate meets at eleven o'clock we shall have no time to consider them. We have been meeting regularly and the time has been consumed up to the hour of the meeting of the Senate, and I think it would be best, in the interest of the business of the Senate, in the interest of the Calendar, if we should defer the time until Thursday the 20th instant.

Mr. ROLLINS. If we concede this to the Committee on Military Affairs we shall be obliged to concede the same extension to other committees, and we shall not meet before twelve o'clock at any day of this session. The time has come when we ought to meet at eleven o'clock, and I submit no more courtesy should be extended to the Committee on Military Affairs than to other committees of this body.

I hope the amendment of the Senator from Missouri will not be agreed to, and that Monday, the 17th, will be fixed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri fixing Thursday, the 20th instant, in place of Monday, the 17th instant, as the time when the Senate shall begin to meet at eleven o'clock.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected, there being on a division—ayes 22, noes 30.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to insert "Monday, the 17th instant."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That on and after Monday, the 17th instant, the hour of meeting of the Senate during the present session shall be eleven o'clock a. m.

DOUBLE PENSIONS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I propose to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 94) directing the Secretary of the Interior to withhold action in payment of double pension to General Ward B. Burnett, of which I gave notice yesterday afternoon. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to withhold action upon the opinion of the Attorney-General until the action of Congress upon the bill reported from the Committee on Pensions on the same day the joint resolution was reported.

Mr. VOORHEES. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will allow that to go over until to-morrow. I have some views on the subject, and in the mean time I desire to look a little more carefully into the case.

Mr. VAN WYCK. At the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana I will consent that the joint resolution go over until to-morrow, and I shall call it up in the morning hour to-morrow.

IOWA JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. GARLAND submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4166) to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House concur in the amendments of the Senate from 1 to 17, inclusive; and in lieu of Senate amendment No. 18 they have agreed to recommend and do recommend the following:

"That all prosecutions for crimes or offenses hereafter committed in either of said districts shall be cognizable within said district, and all prosecutions for crimes or offenses heretofore committed in the district of Iowa shall be commenced and proceeded with as if this act had not been passed."

A. H. GARLAND,
JOHN J. INGALLS,
GEORGE F. HOAR,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
GEORGE D. ROBINSON,
GEO. L. CONVERSE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator from Arkansas state the substance of the report so that we may understand the effect upon the bill?

Mr. GARLAND. The House of Representatives passed a bill dividing the State of Iowa into two judicial districts, and fixed eight places for holding courts. When the bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate that committee changed the bill, and instead of giving eight places gave six. The present law gives four, and the Senate committee gave two in addition to what the present law gives, and changed, as a matter of course, the distribution of the counties in the bill as it passed the House so as to meet at six places instead of eight. To make that change required seventeen amendments, but that is the aggregate of what is done in the bill. Then the eighteenth amendment was simply putting in the clause we always do under the sixth amendment to the Constitution, saving the places of trial and hearing of crimes which have been already committed in the district ascertained by law. That is now what the House has agreed upon in this report of the committee of conference, which I ask the Senate to concur in at this time.

The report was concurred in.

GEORGE W. MORSE.

Mr. HOAR. In the case of George W. Morse, relative to breech-loading fire-arms and ammunition, reported adversely by the Committee on Patents by the chairman, the petitioner has made some suggestions which seem proper to be considered by the Senator who made the report, and with his consent I ask unanimous consent that the vote of the Senate discharging the committee from the further consideration of the petition be reconsidered, and that the report be put upon the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT, pro tempore. There being no objection, it will be so ordered.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOGAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6514) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and I give notice that as soon as it is printed I shall ask for the consideration of the bill.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. PLATT. I ask the Senate to consider at this time the pension cases upon the Calendar, the unobjected cases, I suppose.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are some cases where there are a majority and a minority report, and I think they ought to be considered; at least one case I have in my mind.

Mr. PLATT. I will suggest that as there is a large number of cases on the Calendar in which majority and minority reports have been made, and also in which adverse reports have been made which have been reconsidered and placed on the Calendar, I think the first thing we ought to do is to go through the unobjected cases, and then if time remains, if Senators desire to consider cases in which majority and minority reports are presented, very well; but if we take up, for instance, the first case on which there is a majority and a minority report, it may lead to a discussion which will take all the morning. It seems to me that the unobjected cases should be acted on first, so that there may be opportunity to pass such as have been reported in the Senate and not yet acted upon by the House. I have no objection to taking up the others, but I think the order should be that the unobjected cases be taken up first.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will make a suggestion that I think the Senator will probably agree to; that is that we take up the House bills and act upon them first, whether there be minority reports or not. The House bills ought to have preference because the action of the Senate on them will be final; but if we pass new bills they will have to go to the House and may be delayed.

Mr. VOORHEES. I heartily sympathize with the purpose of the Senator from Connecticut. I wish simply to say that there is perhaps one case on the Calendar which has been reported adversely on which I have procured additional testimony which I hope may be considered. If I could present that testimony and obviate the objections which the chairman of the committee may have, and with that modification of his statement, I should be very glad to agree to his suggestion.

Mr. PLATT. What case does the Senator refer to?

Mr. VOORHEES. The case of Amanda J. McFadden, growing out of the Black Hawk war.

Mr. HARRIS. I suppose, of course, the Senator from Connecticut proposes to take up pension cases under the Anthony rule, in which event they are all subject to objection, but I suppose there will be no objection to the consideration of any case favorably reported. The Senator does not propose to take them up independent of the Anthony rule?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly not.

Mr. HARRIS. Then they are all subject to objection.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I wish to say with reference to the pension cases that those upon which there have been adverse reports and minority reports have many of them been pending since early in the session, and have been postponed from time to time. Not a single one of them has received attention; many of them are pressing severely for it and ought to have been discussed and disposed of long ago. But the unobjected cases have been called up from time to time, and there are now upon the Calendar but comparatively few which do not excite controversy. I think, as the chairman suggests, that it is a proper thing to pass over the Calendar disposing of the unobjected cases first, but in justice to these other parties we ought immediately to follow and to press as strongly as we can do as a committee the consideration of the others immediately after.

Mr. PLATT. I am perfectly willing that the Senate shall devote just as much time as it will devote to the consideration of pension cases about which there is a difference, but I do insist upon it that first we ought to pass the unobjected cases, whether they are House bills or Senate bills. If they are Senate bills, there is the more reason why they should be passed in order that they may go to the House.

Mr. HARRIS. If it is the intention to take up the pension cases under the Anthony rule, I have no objection. If it is the purpose to take them up under any other rule, I object, and demand the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate consent to take up pension cases?

Mr. SHERMAN. Under the Anthony rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the Anthony rule.

Mr. BLAIR. Does that leave us better as to any right of way, or any preference over any other cases?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir; they have preference over everything else.

Mr. BLAIR. I was not aware that pension cases had a preference under the Anthony rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have not, but it is proposed to take them up under the Anthony rule.

Mr. BLAIR. That is, they are to be considered under the five-minute rule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. I ask for a vote on the motion to take up the pension cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to taking up the pension cases under the Anthony rule? ["No!" "No!"] The Chair hears none. The first pension case will be called.

JACOB NIX.

The bill (S. No. 1201) granting a pension to Jacob Nix was announced as first in order, and was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, after the word "pension-roll," to strike out "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws" and insert "with the rank of captain, at the rate of one-third disability;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Jacob Nix, who served as a captain in the Brown County (Minnesota) Militia during the attack upon New Ulm, Minnesota, in August, 1862, by the Indians, upon the pension-roll, with the rank of captain, at the rate of one-third disability.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JACOB HUMBLE.

The bill (H. R. No. 5809) for the relief of Jacob Humble was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the adjudication of the pension claim of Jacob Humble, late a private in Company F, Sixth Indiana Calvary, (Seventy-first Volunteers,) as if the same had been duly filed in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions on the 5th day of August, 1879.

The bill was reported without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. MORGAN.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to order of business No. 704, being the bill (S. No. 473) for the relief of William H. Morgan, substantially a pension bill, but reported from the Committee on Military Affairs by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HARRISON.] I ask that he consent that that be included.

Mr. HARRISON. That is a case which ought to be considered. It is to give bounty to a soldier. He served his whole term and was mustered out thirty days before his regiment. By reason of that muster-out he loses technically his right to $300 bounty. He was simply discharged thirty days beforehand.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to its being taken up now if it will lead to no discussion and is of a similar nature to pensions.

Mr. PLUMB. It is of the same nature.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 473) for the relief of William H. Morgan.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "infantry," to strike out "the sum of $215 for arrears of bounty" and insert:

The full amount of the arrears of bounty that would have been due to him if he had remained in the service and been mustered out with his regiment.

So as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to William H. Morgan, late of the Ninth Regiment Volunteer Indiana Infantry, the full amount of the arrears of bounty that would have been due to him if he had remained in the service and been mustered out with his regiment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELECTA L. BALDWIN.

The bill (H. R. No. 2104) granting a pension to Mrs. Electa L. Baldwin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Electa L. Baldwin, widow of Charles Baldwin, late a private in Company B, Seventh Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, at the rate of $8 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLEN GILLESPIE.

The bill (H. R. No. 4082) granting a pension to Ellen Gillespie was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll Ellen Gillespie, widow of John W. Gillespie, late a private in Company F, Twenty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMOS CHAPMAN.

The bill (S. No. 1437) granting a pension to Amos Chapman, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Amos Chapman, of the Indian Territory, late a scout under the immediate command of Colonel Nelson A. Miles, United States Army, he to be allowed the same pension as a private soldier for the loss of a leg.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH H. SPOTTS.

The bill (S. No. 1796) for the relief of Elizabeth H. Spotts was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out lines 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, in the following words:

The 9th day of March, A. D. 1882, the date of the death of said James H. Spotts; the said sum of $50 per month to be in lieu of any pension the said widow may be entitled to under the general pension laws.

And to insert "passage of this act;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth H. Spotts, widow of Rear-Admiral James H. Spotts, deceased, and pay her a pension of $50 per month from the passage of this act.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the chairman of the committee, had there not better be some restriction in that bill in regard to its being in lieu and satisfaction of all former pensions?

Mr. PLATT. I do not think we had better assume in the passage of bills to-day that a person will be entitled to a pension by special act and also by general law. I suppose that is the point of the inquiry made by the Senator from Missouri. I do not think we had better assume that. There is no difficulty, if it is not already provided for by law, in passing an act which shall settle it; but I do not think it is necessary to incorporate that language into every bill.

Mr. LOGAN. One inquiry I should like to make, not in opposition to the bill, but I want to ask for the purpose of governing myself about a statute that exists, whether this pension is granted to the widow of a rear-admiral who was retired as a rear-admiral or who died when he was a rear-admiral in fact, or whether he was one promoted on the retired list?

Mr. PLATT. Let the report be read.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. PLATT June 5:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1796) for the relief of Elizabeth H. Spotts, having considered the same, make the following report:

Rear-Admiral James H. Spotts died in service March 9, 1882, from disease traceable to his service, after forty-five years' active and faithful service. The claimant is his widow, and is left without adequate means of support for herself and son.

Congress has by special act granted pensions at the rate of $50 per month to widows of naval officers of high rank where the services of the deceased had been long and faithful and where the widow's circumstances were necessitous. This case being similar to those in which such pensions have been granted, the passage of the bill is recommended, with an amendment, striking out all after the word "the," in line 7, and inserting the words "passage of this act."

Mr. LOGAN. I merely wished to know whether the officer died in the service.

Mr. PLATT. He died in the service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. GROOME. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri was very well taken, and the words ought to be added to this bill "in lieu of the pension which she is now receiving under the general law." I move that amendment.

Mr. PLATT. This language which the Senator from Maryland proposes is the precise language which made trouble in the case referred to. We had the matter up this morning in committee, and we are of opinion that we had better not assume by adopting any such clause in a bill at the present time that the decision referred to is correct and affects other cases than the one in which it was made. If the bill introduced by the Senator from Maryland passes the general act will settle the whole matter, and we had better not try to settle it in each particular case.

Mr. GROOME. I do not assume that that opinion is correct, and I do not believe that any considerable number of the members of the Senate can be induced to believe it is correct, notwithstanding the respect that ought to be paid to the opinion of an Attorney-General of the United States after they have heard this matter fully discussed. But this woman is now on the pension-roll under the general law; she is drawing a pension, and this bill does not purport to be a bill to increase her pension, but it purports to be a bill placing her name upon the pension-roll. It has always been customary in such cases as that to be very careful in guarding them, in order that there may not be misconstruction. I think, therefore, that it is clear that in this particular case the amendment which I have suggested ought to be made.

Mr. PLATT. This lady is not drawing any pension under the general law. This is an original pension granted by the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. If it is an original pension, of course the amendment is not applicable.

Mr. GROOME. If that statement is correct, and of course I know it must be when the chairman of the Committee on Pensions makes it, the remarks I made were under a misapprehension of facts. If this lady is not now on the pension-roll the language I have moved is not necessary.

Mr. PLATT. Mrs. Spotts is the widow of Rear-Admiral Spotts, who died March 9, 1882. As widows of rear-admirals are pensioned by special act at $50, she made no application to the Pension Office, but came here directly to get the pension which is allowed and has been universally by special act to the widows of rear-admirals, major-generals, &c. She is drawing no pension and has made no application to the Pension Office.

Mr. GROOME. Under the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, which presents a state of facts of which I was not aware at the time I introduced the amendment, I withdraw the amendment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT O. MILLER.

The bill (H. R. No. 1543) granting a pension to Albert O. Miller, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Albert O. Miller, late a seaman on board the United States steamship Bienville.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer the following amendment to be added to the bill, and hope it will be agreed to.

And no person who is now receiving or shall hereafter receive a pension under a special act shall be entitled to receive in addition thereto a pension under the general law, unless the special act expressly states that the pension granted thereby is in addition to the pension which said person is entitled to receive under the general law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the title be changed by adding "and for other purposes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title will be so amended.

JOSEPH N. ABBEY.

The bill (S. No. 1264) to increase the pension of Joseph N. Abbey, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-two" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Joseph N. Abbey, late captain of Battery H, One hundred and twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Artillery, from $24 to $50 per month, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOEL R. CARTER.

The bill (H. R. No. 1997) granting a pension to Joel R. Carter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Joel R. Carter, late a private in Company D, Eighty-second Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEWTON BOUTWELL.

The bill (H. R. No. 5684) granting a pension to Newton Boutwell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Newton Boutwell, of Morrisville, Vermont, as a dependent father.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS W. ROTHROCK.

The bill (H. R. No. 1451) granting a pension to Thomas W. Rothrock was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas U. Rothrock, late of Company G, Eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, on account of disabilities incurred while in the service and in line of duty.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES HAWTHORNE.

The bill (H. R. No. 2872) to increase the pension of James Hawthorne was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Hawthorne, late a private in Company H of the Twentieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act at the rate of $50 a month, in lieu of his present pension.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE J. WEBB.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to take up the next case on the Calendar. It has been passed and reconsidered.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2349) granting an increase of pension to George J. Webb.

Mr. JACKSON. Let the report in that case be read.

Mr. PLATT. I will make a statement in regard to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. PLATT. That bill was passed some time ago, and after it was passed an anonymous letter was addressed to a Senator saying that it was a fraudulent case, and at the request of the Senator I asked the Commissioner of Pensions to investigate it. The Commissioner sent a special agent to investigate it. Webb was then in the Government Printing Office, and it was very easy to determine whether he was entitled to the increase or not. The result of the special agent's investigation and of my own investigation is that we think the letter was malicious and that the bill ought to pass.

Mr. JACKSON. I waive the call for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

WILSON W. BROWN AND OTHERS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like the bill (H. R. No. 4444) granting pensions to Wilson W. Brown and others taken up.

Mr. PLATT. I desire that that bill should not be taken up now. I do not want to object to it and put it over for the day if it can be taken up after we get through the unobjected cases. I am willing it shall come up then.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall move to take it up this morning if there is time after the unobjected cases are disposed of.

JOHN H. JACKSON.

The bill (H. R. No. 2278) for the relief of John H. Jackson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John H. Jackson, formerly of Company G, One hundred and forty-ninth Regiment Indiana State Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY E. MATTHEWS.

The bill (S. No. 2026) granting a pension to Mary E. Matthews was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary E. Matthews, widow of Edward S. Matthews, late a surgeon in the United States Navy having the rank of lieutenant-commander.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANN LEDDY.

The bill (S. No. 1680) granting a pension to Ann Leddy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to grant a pension to Ann Leddy, widow of Thomas Leddy, late of Company B, Sixty-ninth New York Volunteers, United States Army, subject to the rules of the office of the Commissioner of Pensions adopted in conformity with the laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMELINE PINK.

The bill (H. R. No. 4914) granting a pension to Emeline Pink was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Emeline Pink, widow of Charles Pink, late of Company B, New York State Heavy Artillery, who served as a soldier in the Union Army during the rebellion.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIZZIE M. MITCHELL.

The bill (H. R. No. 3581) granting a pension to Mrs. Lizzie M. Mitchell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Lizzie M. Mitchell, widow of John Mitchell, deceased, late a captain in the United States Army, who died of wounds received and disease contracted while in the service.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH C. CUSTER.

The bill (S. No. 1819) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth B. Custer, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out, after the word "to," in line 4, the words "place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Elizabeth B. Custer, widow of George A. Custer, late lieutenant-colonel of the Seventh United States Cavalry, at the rate of $50 per month," and insert "increase the pension of $30 now received by Mrs. Elizabeth C. Custer, widow of General George A. Custer, to $50 per month, to take effect from and after the passage of this act;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of $30 now received by Mrs. Elizabeth C. Custer, widow of General George A. Custer, to $50 per month, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth C. Custer."

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask the chairman of the Pensions Committee whether it is proper to be passing these bills for the increase of pensions under what is said to have been the opinion of the Attorney-General as to their effect, until there has been some legislation to correct that matter.

Mr. GROOME. The Senate has passed it this morning.

Mr. SAULSBURY. But it has not passed through the House, and I suggest whether the committee had not better withhold those bills which propose an increase until some definite action is taken by Congress to correct what is supposed to be an evil which has been mentioned here several times. It occurs to me that while it may be proper to pass such bills, we ought not to do so until there has been some legislation to prevent those parties who get an increase from drawing double pension.

Mr. PLATT. I stated—I presume the Senator from Delaware was not in—that we had had that matter under consideration in the committee and had concluded that it was not necessary to put the clause in each bill. It would be in some sense an assumption that the opinion of the Attorney-General was correct; and we supposed a bill would undoubtedly pass which would settle the matter if there was any doubt about it. The amendment has already been attached to one of the House bills and has passed the Senate directing that in no instance shall a person draw a pension by special act and also by general law. There is no doubt that will pass the House to-day or to-morrow, and the whole matter will be settled.

Mr. BLAIR. I think in regard to this matter, so much talked about, that it is well enough to state that the Attorney-General says in his opinion that the Burnett case is a peculiar case. He decides it as a peculiar case. I do not think that that decision subjects the Treasury to the slightest danger as to the payment of double pensions; but if that were so, the general law which was attached to a special bill passed this morning will protect the Treasury and the Government to the utmost extent that it is possible to do it. If vested rights have already accrued, they must be settled by the judicial power, and it is impossible for us by an act of legislation to deprive any pensioner of rights he already has; but we have done the utmost that can be done to save the Government from any double payment arising from any misapprehension as to the state of the law. I do not think we are in the slightest danger. The universe is all right; so are we.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It may be, notwithstanding the Senate has passed this provision, that the House will not concur in it. My suggestion is simply to postpone these bills for an increase of pension until some definite action has been had upon the bill which was sent from the Senate to the House. It may be that we may assume that the House will concur, it is very likely that they will, but it is always best to be on the safe side. Therefore I suggest to the committee that we reserve these measures providing an increase until there has been definite action taken by the House.

CAROLINE FRENCH.

The bill (S. No. 2089) granting a pension to Caroline French was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Caroline French, widow of Brevet Major-General William H. French, at $50 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

E. G. HOFFMAN.

The bill (S. No. 547) granting a pension to E. G. Hoffman, late a captain in the One hundred and sixty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to add the words "to commence from the passage of this act, and to be in lieu of the pension he is now receiving;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of E. G. Hoffman, late a captain in the One hundred and sixty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month, to commence from the passage of this act, and to be in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BERNARD BRADY.

The bill (H. R. No. 1048) granting an increase of pension to Bernard Brady was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Bernard Brady, formerly a private in Company I, Fourth Regiment United States Infantry, to the sum of $50 per month, for the loss of left leg and part of right foot.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LABAN CONNOR.

The bill (H. R. No. 803) granting a pension to Laban Connor was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Laban Connor, late of Company E, Eighth Michigan Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETER J. WELSHBILLIG.

The bill (H. R. No. 5382) granting a pension to Peter J. Welshbillig was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Peter J. Welshbillig, late captain of company G, Thirty-second Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIJAH W. PENNY.

The bill (H. R. No. 2005) to increase the pension of Elijah W. Penny was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Elijah W. Penny, late lieutenant-colonel of the One hundred and thirtieth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, to the sum of $36 per month.

Mr. PLATT. I move to amend the bill by adding:

Said increase to take effect from the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH VERNOR HENRY.

The bill (H. R. No. 1147) granting a pension to Elizabeth Vernor Henry was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth Vernor Henry, orphan sister of the late Commander Edmund W. Henry, of the United States Navy, at the rate of $25 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH HAYNE.

The bill (S. No. 70) granting a pension to Sarah Hayne was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to add:

And to pay her a pension at the rate of $16 per month, to date from his death.

So as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah Hayne, widow of Michael Hayne, who was a seaman on board the United States ships Ontario, Allegheny, and Brandywine, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $16 per month, to date from his death.

Mr. PLATT. Let that be passed over for the present. I wish to examine it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over.

BETTY TAYLOR DANDRIDGE.

The bill (H. R. No. 4719) granting a pension to Betty Taylor Dandridge was announced as next in order.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to have that bill go over.

Mr. HALE. I appeal to the Senator from Michigan to let the bill pass. It is a very meritorious case. The committee has examined it fully. The bill came with a unanimous vote from the House. The lady is infirm and in need, and I hope the Senator from Michigan will not obstruct the bill, but will let it go through. It is the case of the daughter of General Taylor, the widow of Colonel Bliss.

Mr. CONGER. My desire to have this bill go over was upon information which has been communicated to me—I am not certain about it—relative to some conduct of the person named during the war, some alleged conduct toward Union soldiers during the war. I dislike very much to object to a bill of this kind, and do not wish to make any statement which shall be definite. I am not very particular about it.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will allow it to go. I am sure it is a worthy case.

Mr. CONGER. Not being certain that my information is correct—and if I were I should oppose the bill more strenuously than I do—I withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which proposes to place on the pension-roll at $50 per month Betty Taylor Dandridge, daughter of the late General Zachary Taylor, and widow of William W. S. Bliss, late a lieutenant-colonel in the Army of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMELIA ANN WILSON.

The bill (H. R. No. 6401) granting a pension to Amelia Ann Wilson and her minor children was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "the," where it occurs the second time, to strike out:

Names of Amelia Ann Wilson and her minor children, widow and orphans of the late Marcellus Wilson, a private soldier in the war with Mexico.

And insert:

Name of Amelia Ann Wilson, widow of the late Marcellus Wilson, who was a private in the war with Mexico, and pay her a pension of $8 per month, and $2 per month for her daughter, Alice A. Wilson, until she arrives at the age of sixteen years.

So as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Amelia Ann Wilson, widow of the late Marcellus Wilson, who was a private in the war with Mexico, and pay her a pension of $8 per month, and $2 per month for her daughter, Alice A. Wilson, until she arrives at the age of sixteen years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended, so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Amelia Ann Wilson and her minor child."

ROBERT P. WALKER.

The bill (H. R. No. 4372) for the relief of Robert P. Walker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to restore to the pension-roll the name of Robert P. Walker, late of Company H, Ninety-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KATE L. USHER.

The bill (H. R. No. 1206) granting a pension to Mrs. Kate L. Usher was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Kate L. Usher, who is the widow of the late Captain James D. Usher, of the United States Revenue Marine Service, at the rate now paid the widows of officers of corresponding rank in the United States Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY WADE.

The bill (H. R. No. 1422) granting a pension to Mary Wade was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Mary Wade, of Gettysburgh, Pennsylvania, who was the mother of Jennie Wade, who was killed while baking bread for the Union soldiers, and for paying Mary Wade a pension at the rate of $8 per month, to continue during her widowhood, she having been dependent for support on her daughter.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any report in that case?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. The case is all right.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the report be read.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MITCHELL on the 8th instant:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1422) granting a pension to Mary Wade, mother of Jennie Wade, who was killed at Gettysburgh, Pennsylvania, while in the act of baking bread for the Union soldiers, having carefully examined the same, submit the following report:

That it appears from the evidence filed in this case that Mary Wade was the mother of the said Jennie Wade, a resident of Gettysburgh, on Friday, the 3d day of July, 1863, the day of the battle at that place; that long prior to this time, to wit, ten years, the husband of said Mary Wade was confined as a lunatic in Adams County poor-house, where he continued up to the time of his death; that the family of the said Mary Wade consisted of three boys, a married daughter, and the said Jennie Wade; that the said mother received nothing toward the support of the family from the boys or the married daughter, but was dependent upon the help and assistance of the said Jennie Wade to a very great extent.

The mother, in an affidavit under date April 4, 1878, makes oath—

"That seven days previous to the death of the said Jennie Wade she, the said Mary A. Wade, had gone to nurse, take care of, and stay with her eldest daughter, George Anna, intermarried with John Lewis McClellan, for her said daughter George Anna was confined in childbirth, and her said husband, John Lewis, was away in the nine months' service; that she remained there till after the battle, but on the 1st day of July, 1863, (being the first day of the battle,) becoming anxious and concerned about the safety of her said daughter Jennie, sent home for her and had her come out to where she was staying; that from that time, namely, the 1st day of July, A. D. 1863, to the 3d day of July, A. D. 1863, she, the said Mary A. Wade, and her two daughters, the said George Anna and the said Jennie, staid in the same house, and that said house was situate near the extreme south end of Baltimore street, in the said borough of Gettysburgh, on the east side of the street, near the top of Cemetery Hill, and was just within the Union lines, and was occupied during the battle by Union sharpshooters; that on Thursday, the 2d day of July, A. D. 1863, all the bread in the house had been given away to and eaten by Union soldiers; that on Friday, the 3d day of July, 1863, the said Jennie Wade was making up a large batch of bread for the Union soldiers and the family; that she had just finished making the bread, and was standing in the kitchen with her back to the door opening from the kitchen into the yard on the south side of the house; that she had just taken out some more flour and turning to her mother, the said Mary Wade, had said, "Mother, I am going to make some biscuit now; won't they be nice for the boys?"—meaning by the term "boys" the Union soldiers—when she was shot. The ball passed through the outside kitchen door and a door leading from the kitchen to the dining-room, which door was standing open, and entered the small of the back just below the left shoulder blade. She expired instantly.

"That upon hearing the shot the said Mary A. Wade turned and saw her daughter, the said Jennie, sinking to the floor. On running to her and lifting her up, she found that her daughter was already dead. That finding her dead, she, the said Mary A. Wade, with the assistance of some Union soldiers, put a quilt over the dead body, and put it on a lounge in the room, but afterward removed it to the cellar. That her said daughter Jennie was killed about eight o'clock on the morning of the 3d day of July, 1863, and was buried in a hole in the garden back of the house, about three o'clock in the afternoon of the 4th day of July, 1863, but was afterward removed to the cemetery.

"She further states that at this time, in the month of July, 1863, her husband John Wade, was living, but that for ten years previous to this time, and at this time, and ever after till the time of his death, he, the said John Wade, was and continued so to be, an inmate of the Adams County poor-house, being confined there as a lunatic; that at this time and for many years previous the support of her family and the partial support of the said Mary A. Wade's mother depended upon the labor of the said Mary A. Wade and her daughter Jennie; * * * that she and her daughter, the said Jennie, supported the family by taking in sewing; that the said Jennie was a stout, healthy girl of twenty years of age, and was at the time of her death, and had for some years previous thereto contributed materially to the support of the family; that the said Jennie was very faithful, steady, and expert with the needle, and was of great aid to the mother, the said Mary A. Wade, and in her death the said Mary A. Wade lost her main support; that since the death of her said daughter Jennie she has been thrown upon her own labor for support; that she is now fifty-six years of age, and has no family or relations to support or maintain her; that she is dependent for her living upon the labor of her own hands and the charity of her friends; and that in addition there has of late years been thrown upon her hands the support of her now aged mother."

The said Mary A. Wade in a subsequent affidavit says:

"She is poor, and owns no property whatever, real or personal, except a little furniture, not exceeding in value $40. She further states under oath that her daughter, who was killed as above stated, was a tailoress by trade, and with her assistance your affiant was barely able to make a living."

In a later affidavit the said Mary A. Wade swears as follows:

"She says further that the making of the bread was begun at the request of the soldiers there, who at that time were unable to go out of the house for fear of being shot by rebel sharpshooters who were not over three hundred or four hundred yards away. * * * That she had not before furnished any during that day, and had not received any pay or demanded any within her hearing or to her knowledge for anything done by her for Union soldiers. * * * We gave them nearly all we had to eat, without asking or thinking of reward."

Mrs. Catharine Bushman makes affidavit substantially as follows: That she has known Mary A. Wade and her daughter, the former for forty years; that Jennie was a tailoress, and supported the family by working at her trade. That for about thirty years Mary A. Wade has been generally broken down; and for several years prior to Jennie's death Mrs. Wade could not have supported herself and her children without Jennie's assistance.

A. W. Fleming swears:

"I know Mrs. Mary A. Wade, and knew her daughter Jennie, who was killed during the battle of Gettysburgh by a bullet. I saw where the bullet came out. It came out on the left side in front, about the heart or just below it. She was buried just as she fell. I saw the dough on her hands, and flour and blood on her clothes. I took her body up from the garden where she was buried by the soldiers, and I buried her in the cemetery in this place. I knew her before she was killed, and identified the body as that of Jennie, Mrs. Mary Wade's daughter."

Julia Ann Fleming, in an affidavit, corroborates the general facts in the case.

Emanuel P. Bushman, Catharine A. Bushman, Annie R. Feistel, John M. Reilding, and Samuel Bushman, who were neighbors, living on the same street with Mrs. Mary A. Wade at the time of her daughter's death, make oath as to the general facts in the case.

Edward Meuchly and Peter Warren make oath as to the facts alleged, and that Mrs. Mary A. Wade is in destitute circumstances.

J. H. Skelly and W. T. King make oath "that they have been residents of Gettysburgh, respectively, forty-five and thirty-seven years." They swear that during that time they have been merchant tailors; that both Mary A. Wade and her daughter Jennie worked for them at tailoring; that they don't believe, from their acquaintance with Mrs. Wade and their knowledge of the amount of tailoring done by her, that she could have supported herself and family without the assistance of Jennie.

The evidence in this case proving the facts to have been as alleged is unquestionably conclusive. The House of Representatives have, at the present session, passed the bill giving Mrs. Mary A. Wade a pension of $8 per month from and after the passage of the act. And your committee concur in the belief that Mrs. Wade should receive this pension, and accordingly report the bill (H. R. No. 1422) back with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to know of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions if it is pretended that Jennie Wade was in any sense in the military service of the country? I had supposed that pensions were granted to persons who were injured either in the military or naval service of the country, that they were confined to persons or the dependents of such persons as were employed in the military or naval service and were injured by reason of that service. This seems to me to be an entirely new departure, an opening of the doors of the Pension Office to a new class of persons that includes the whole community, whether in the service or not. I should be glad to hear from the chairman of the committee as to whether or not it is pretended that this lady who unfortunately fell at Gettysburgh was in any sense in the military service of the country?

Mr. PLATT. The report says the precise facts. She of course was not an enlisted soldier. She was perhaps as much in the military service as a teamster in the Quartermaster's Department, and Congress has pensioned at some time—although I thought when the pensions were first granted to that class of people they ought not to have been granted—persons of that character. This is a peculiar case. I suppose no case ever occurred like it or ever can occur like it. It is a case where at the battle of Gettysburgh a girl, upon whom her mother was dependent, while engaged in the business of baking bread for the soldiers, was killed by a gunshot. It is true that the girl was not serving with a musket on her shoulder, she was not in the ranks, but she was aiding and assisting and in a certain sense taking part in that engagement. She was helping others to fight if she was not fighting herself. While it is a case about which in a previous Congress I had some doubt and caused the fullest investigation to be made as to the facts, I have no doubt whatever that the facts set out in the report are correctly stated both as to the circumstances of the death of the girl and as to her mother's dependence.

I think that sometimes Congress may, outside of any law, grant pensions; indeed, I think it would be very much better if the attention of Congress was engaged in the granting of pensions which are entirely outside of the law rather than as we do, grant pensions under the law, assuming that the Pension Office has not correctly passed upon the applications. It seems to me that really the only province of Congress is to pass those pensions which are outside of the law, and that we are doing very great injustice often when we undertake to regulate pensions under the law.

It seems to me that this is peculiarly a case for the action of Congress. You may call it a gratuity pension if you please. Call it what you choose; but the circumstances surrounding the case are such that I believe every person or almost every person will say that that poor dependent mother who lost her daughter at the battle of Gettysburgh under these circumstances ought to have a pension.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask my friend from Connecticut how he distinguishes in principle this case from a case, which his committee reported adversely, of a woman whose husband was a mechanic in the Mexican war, going with the army, and they were obliged to impress non-combatants and he was actually enlisted; I do not mean enlisted in the technical sense, but he was impressed, and being exposed to military danger, marching some distance from Vera Cruz I think, where he got the yellow fever and died, and the committee refused to allow a pension in that case? It is on the docket now with the adverse report. What is the distinction between this case and that?

Mr. PLATT. I can hardly stop to draw distinctions now. I think there are distinctions, however, between the two cases, but I do not want to argue two cases at the same time. I do not remember precisely the circumstances of the case to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers. The man, however, was in the Quartermaster's Department, I suppose.

Mr. MITCHELL. Under a contract for pay.

Mr. PLATT. Under a contract for pay.

Mr. HOAR. Under a contract to make wagons for pay, not under a contract to march as a soldier for pay.

Mr. PLATT. Perhaps the committee may have decided wrongly in that case. I do not know about that.

Mr. HOAR. That is what I want to get the chairman to admit.

Mr. PLATT. I do not admit it; but for the purpose of not mixing up the two cases and not defeating this case, which it seems to me the inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts is very likely to do if persisted in, I will not argue at this time the question as to whether the cases are similar or whether the committee acted wrongly in relation to his case.

Mr. HOAR. At present the Senator does not see any distinction.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like also to ask the Senator from Connecticut if he can draw any distinction between this case and the case of Mrs. Emma A. Porch, which has passed the House and is now and has been for some time before the Committee on Pensions. She was a scout, doing military duty, and contracted disability in the line of duty, and the committee has not reported that bill favorably to the Senate. If you can report a pension to the mother of somebody who was not in the service at all, it does seem to me you ought to pay some attention to those who were in it.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator from Missouri say that the Pensions Committee have reported upon the Porch case?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; I say they have not reported upon it.

Mr. PLATT. It will be quite time for us to draw distinctions, I think, when the case comes up for action.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not see from the statement made by the chairman of the committee that this case differs in any degree from the thousand other ladies at Gettysburgh who were devoting themselves to contributing to the comforts of the one or the other of the armies. There is no pretense that she was employed by the Commissary Department to furnish bread; it seems to have been a mere voluntary act; and while she was engaged in baking the bread that she said was for the Union soldiers a stray bullet struck her down. It is opening an entirely new class; at least I know of no precedent. I know of no single case in which a pension has been granted under the facts of this case, and I cannot consent, so far as my vote goes, to opening a new class of pensions, especially in view of the fact that our pension-roll now amounts to about $100,000,000 a year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of two o'clock has arrived.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I hope this bill will be disposed of.

Mr. MORRILL. I shall not give way if there is going to be any more debate. If there can be a vote, I do not object.

Mr. BLAIR. We cannot have a vote now, of course.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Let us have a vote without debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are several additional pension cases which will occupy fifteen or twenty minutes, the Secretary says.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Let us have a vote on this bill.

Mr. PLATT. We may as well dispose of it.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed on this call this morning House bill No. 4719.

Mr. PLATT. Does the pending bill lose its place by the call for the regular order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. As a member of the Committee on Pensions, I prefer that this case should not be disposed of unless it can be debated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Mr. MORRILL. I call for the regular order.

BETTY TAYLOR DANDRIDGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 4719) granting a pension to Betty Taylor Dandridge was passed. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. HALE. May I ask the Senator from Alabama why it is that he desires to obstruct this bill which gives a pension to the daughter of ex-President Taylor, and the widow of Colonel Bliss, a case against which I have heard no objection whatever?

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator from Maine why he assumes that I desire to obstruct any case by making a motion to reconsider it?

Mr. HALE. The answer to that is that no more effectual way of obstructing a case which has passed the Senate and which will speedily become a law presumably exists than to move to arrest it by reconsidering it.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to amend it.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask whether he deems it a fair and just thing to a case that has come from the House, a good and worthy case in itself, and has passed the Senate, to move to reconsider in order to amend it by adding, as I know he wants to add, another case that has not passed the House, thus sending the bill back at this stage to the House with the risk of losing it entirely.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from Maine understands exactly what I mean to do he has no authority for saying that I am trying to obstruct the passage of this bill. I desire its passage, but I desire its passage with an amendment, which the Senator seems to comprehend, and which has just as much claim upon the consideration of this country, if not a higher claim, than the case embraced in the bill.

Mr. HALE. I know the case the Senator refers to. It is in no respect such a case as that of Mrs. Dandridge; it does not stand on the same ground; and yet it is so good a case that of itself I could vote for it if duly reported and submitted; but, I repeat, it is not fair to submit this good case, that everybody wants to go through now, to delay for the sake of putting a new case on and sending the bill back to the House. I hope the Senator will bring the matter up now and let the Senate, while it is considering this case, pass upon it.

Mr. HOAR. What is the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no question before the Senate. The Senator from Alabama moved to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill referred to.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator does not want to hear any explanation of it. I thought he had challenged me for an explanation, and then he cuts it off by moving to lay my motion on the table, cutting off debate. I trust the Senate will not dispose of this matter in quite so summary a way as that.

Mr. HALE. I do not desire that.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator knew that I desired to put this amendment on the bill, but unfortunately I was not in the Chamber at the time the bill was called. I was called out on a matter of business by a gentleman of the House.

Mr. HALE. I certainly did not know the Senator wanted to put the amendment on this bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I offered the amendment the other day when the bill was reported.

Mr. HALE. The Senator offered it at that time, but after conversation with him I got the impression that he would not push it, knowing it would delay this bill. I do not say the Senator told me that.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator has no authority in the world from any utterance or intimation of mine to suppose that I would in any respect relax my effort to get this amendment on the bill.

Mr. HALE. I have not intimated that. I got the impression that that would be the result.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not mean it, say it, or intimate it.

Mr. HALE. I have no disposition to shut off discussion, but I want the case ended, if possible, now, and I am sure the Senate when it hears the whole case briefly will not decide to obstruct this good case of Mrs. Dandridge, the widow of Colonel Bliss and the daughter of President Taylor.

Mr. MORGAN. It is no better case than the other.

Mr. MORRILL. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for.

Mr. MORGAN. Is my motion entered?

Mr. HALE. If the Senator insists on his motion, if I have the right I shall move to lay it on the table, rather than let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order, being the unfinished business, is called for.

Mr. HALE. I am afraid this bill will never come up unless it is settled now. Therefore if the Senator from Alabama insists on making the motion to reconsider to delay this bill, I will move to lay his motion on the table and I will not ask to debate it a moment.

Mr. MORGAN. When is the subject up for consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hardly be able to tell. The Pensions Committee can bring it up to-morrow.

Mr. PLATT. I was going to inquire whether we can go forward to-morrow morning and get through with the remaining pension bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will have to settle that to-morrow.

Mr. PLATT. I then give notice that I will ask the Senate to-morrow to consider the pension bills until at least we conclude the unobjected cases, and then leave it for the Senate to say whether they will go further with the pension cases.

Mr. HALE. What becomes of the case of Mrs. Dandridge?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a motion to reconsider, and the motion to lay it on the table attaches, but the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] calls for the regular order.

Mr. PLATT. I will bring that case up to-morrow morning, if I can get the attention of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider is entered.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to its going over if it is to come up the first thing in the morning and be settled, and I wish to say here that so good is the case that I am speaking for, that I do not desire to inflict any talk upon it on the Senate, but I do want to insist that it shall be disposed of, and not go over and be lost.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama enters a motion to reconsider. When that motion comes up the Senator from Maine can move to lay it on the table.

Mr. HALE. But when will that come up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At the pleasure of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I ask to call it up now, and then I will consent that it go over till to-morrow morning, and the chairman of the Committee on Pensions may bring it up at that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Senator from Alabama does not desire to have his motion to reconsider acted upon now.

Mr. HALE. Has he a right to enter a motion to reconsider and postpone it indefinitely, and prevent the passage of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly not; but he has a right to enter a motion to reconsider the vote. The bill has been passed to-day. The motion to reconsider may be called up.

Mr. HALE. I move to take it up now.

Mr. MORRILL. It can be called up to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. Is this not precisely the ordinary case of a matter which any Senator desires to bring to the attention of the Senate? He must first move to lay aside the pending order. When that is done then a motion to take it up becomes in order, just as with the bill introduced yesterday. That requires another vote of the Senate. The chairman of the committee has given notice that he will call it up to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. I am entirely content.

Mr. PLATT. I will make an effort to-morrow morning to have the consideration of pension cases continued, and I think it will be fair and right that they should be continued just exactly where we have left off to-day.

Mr. HALE. That satisfies me, but I do not mean that this case shall go over and be lost, if I can help it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut proposes to consider all the pension cases, not only those reported favorably, but those where there has been a difference of opinion between the majority and minority of the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I insist on the regular order.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in some and nonconcurred in other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6243) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 1095) to provide for the erection of a public building at Poughkeepsie, New York; and

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 237) concerning an international fishery exhibition to be held at London in May, 1883.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CALL, Mr. COCKRELL, Mr. HOAR, Mr. JONES of Florida, and Mr. WINDOM submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARRIS and Mr. MORGAN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation; which were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. VAN WYCK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 2997) granting right of way to the Fremont, Elk Horn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company across the Niobrara military reservation, in the State of Nebraska, and authorizing the sale of a portion of said reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INTERNAL-REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I congratulate the country that, even at this late hour and in this unprecedented way, Congress is approaching the question of reducing the heavy burdens of taxation upon the people, of emancipating American industries, commercial and manufacturing, from the incubus of an indiscriminate and excessive taxation laid in time of war, and only because of war, and improperly and unwisely maintained in time of peace. Any approach, however indirect, to the great question of giving to American labor relief and to American industry more extensive fields for the disposal of its products than the home market to which it is now confined, and, as I believe, chiefly because of the system of tariff taxation imposed, is a matter of public congratulation.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] dealt summarily and confidently with the bill under consideration. He was backed by the order and assurance of his party caucus. He presented to the Senate their decree and was naturally impatient for a vote which should ratify it. In the short speech which pro forma he read to us yesterday he denounced in advance any amendments which might be offered or speeches which might be made in opposition as "buncombe" amendments and buncombe speeches. His party associate from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] in the same key said the sun need not set before this bill should pass the Senate. This is certainly hot haste in dealing with the great interests and complicated questions embraced in this bill, a bill "reducing taxation," as it is strangely miscalled.

Upon what principle has the Republican caucus proceeded? A principle that should reduce the great body of tariff taxes as has been done in the prior laws of 1870, changed again in 1874, by what is termed a horizontal reduction? There, at least, it is shown that the fact being admitted that taxation was excessive, you were safe to make a general horizontal reduction. But nothing of the kind is suggested here. The bill is petty, delusive, and abnormal; it is unprecedented. This is the first time in the history of the United States that the Senate have originated a bill to change the tariff; but party exigency causes it. It is true there is a tariff commission deliberately appointed who, by those who controlled it, were to have charge of the general subject, and after a revision of the whole body of existing tariff laws were to report a judicious, wise, and just system of tariff legislation that should be based upon a spirit of justice and equity to all interests and parts of the country and all that goes by the name of American industry.

There is, however, at least one feature in the present bill that is satisfactory. By combining the internal-revenue taxes and the tariff taxes in the same bill an important admission is obtained, and that is, we are dealing with a TAX question, and whether it is laid at the exterior ports of entry or in the interior of the country it is in either case a tax imposed by law:

> A tax is a rate or sum of money assessed on the person or property of a citizen by government for the use of the nation or state.—Webster's Dictionary.

Said Judge Cooley:

> Taxes are burdens or charges imposed by the Legislature upon persons or property to raise money for public purposes.

Judge Coulter, cited approvingly by Mr. Justice Miller in the Supreme Court in the case of Loan Association vs. Topeka, said:

> I think the common mind has everywhere taken in the understanding that taxes are a public imposition, levied by authority of the Government for the purpose of carrying on the Government in all its machinery and operations; that they are imposed for a public purpose.

I am glad to read this definition, and to have now a bill which by its very title recognizes that the internal revenue and the external revenue are alike and equally exercises of the taxing power of the Government. My reason for feeling satisfied with this is the progress made in the last twenty years in the minds of a large number of the advocates of a protective tariff, until they have reasoned themselves into such a state of mind that they declare the imposition of a tariff duty is no longer a tax, and that it is not subjected either to the reasons or the constitutional limitations upon the taxing power and the objects for which taxation was suffered to be imposed; that it is not to be viewed, as a practical fact, as a burden in any shape; but that giving it a different name it changes its nature, and by changing its name you change the whole relation of the subject to the public interest. I am glad that the minds of the people of this country are brought to the consideration of this question undisturbed by the excitement of war and by the equal perturbations of the revolutionary period styled reconstruction, free from all the fires of sectional animosity which have so darkened the minds of our countrymen and which have prevented the calm consideration of economic questions. I am glad now and here to emphasize especially the principles upon which we are to proceed in order to test what justification there may be for taking any portion of the property of a citizen against his will for other than a really public purpose.

We are told by the title of this bill it is a reduction, and I ask the Senate now to consider whether it is such a reasonable and equivalent measure of relief to the masses of the American people as now is admittedly their right to receive. I will state the subjects of the bill. It proposes to repeal the tax on bank deposits, which amounted to $7,987,851 last year, and upon banking capital, to $1,242,329. Let me discuss those two.

I never believed that a banking deposit was properly subject to taxation in the hands of the depositee. The deposits in a bank are not permanently even if they are held to be technically the property of the bank; they are rather evidences of its debt to the depositor. I have never held it wise that upon a property so floating in ownership a tax should have been imposed. I have voted heretofore for its repeal. Under the instruction of the Finance Committee I presented a year ago in the Senate a bill for the repeal of that tax, which was passed without a division, and so far as it appears, by the unanimous voice of the Senate. As it should have been repealed long ago, it should now be repealed. It is not a tax upon the banks; it is a tax upon those who employ the banks; it is in effect a tax upon the business of those who are dealing with the banks. The tax upon banking capital falls three-fourths upon State institutions and banks other than national banks, about $200,000 upon national banks and $600,000 upon the State banks. I am perfectly willing to see that tax abolished, as I hold it to be a useless burden upon the general business of the country.

The tax upon bank checks is one of those taxes that cannot be transferred. The imposition of the check-stamp tax is of itself a formality in business which I am by no means sure is not of value, to those whose money is passed to and fro by checks. One thing is certain, it costs nothing to collect. It is troublesome to bank officers, and I believe from them, chiefly, the cry for its repeal comes. It is not a distressing tax. It is one that is paid easily, and affords, as I have said, by the very formality of its affixing some degree of protection to those who use it. There are so many other taxes that are oppressive and which should be sooner repealed, that I am in doubt as to whether the repeal of the stamp tax upon bank checks is a wise means of relief, or that it would form any appreciable relief to the mass of American people.

Another thing is that the whole of this tax without cost to the Government reaches the Treasury. It does not involve the employment of a single extra clerk in any of the Departments; it is a thing that is very easily settled, cheaply and certainly collected. It may be said, and I may refer to that hereafter, it leads to a certain amount of inquisition that is always objectionable, especially to a people like our own, and that I think is about the only objection to the check-stamp tax of which I know.

Then comes the tax upon friction matches, which is sought to be repealed. It brings a revenue remarkable in its proportion to the article subjected to tax. No less than $3,278,580 were paid into the Treasury last year by this stamp tax. It did not involve the employment of a single extra clerk; it cost the Government not one stiver for its collection; every dollar of that tax reached the Treasury; and can any one here say that there is a member of the great American family oppressed by it? If to have what is called a public burden universally and equally distributed upon every class and occupation, to have no man capable of saying that he is oppressed, injured or even inconvenienced by it, and that the tax is net, clean and clear in its profits to the Treasury—if this constitutes the definition of a wise tax, then I say it is unwise to repeal the tax upon matches. With a revenue so great, so easily and honestly paid, so cheaply and certainly collected, upon an article so universally used, if this be not wise taxation, it is difficult to imagine or to state an item of wise taxation; and yet by this bill it is proposed to repeal it.

There is another tax, upon patent medicines, &c. They paid a revenue of about $1,800,000 last year, a very acceptable contribution to the public Treasury. The ad valorem per cent. of that tax upon these medicines is far less than the tax upon matches. Upon matches the tax is not less than from 100 per cent. to 300 per cent. ad valorem. We have no coin so small as to express the value of what the difference will be to the public by taking the tax off of a bottle of a patent medicine that costs twenty-five cents and has now a penny stamp upon it. Is it supposable that that bottle will be any cheaper to the consumer because that penny stamp is removed from it? I do not know whether we will ever have statistics to prove it, but I feel perfectly satisfied as a practical man that this repeal of $1,800,000 is simply a gift to those engaged in the perfume and proprietary medicine business, and that the mass of the American people will never derive the slightest advantage from the repeal.

These are the features of relief to the American tax-payers which came to us from the beneficent Committee on Ways and Means of the House. They bear their birth-mark unmistakably. The Bureau of Internal Revenue of this Government costs in its machinery rather over $5,000,000 annually, and the estimate for the next year is about five millions and a quarter. I wish the Senate to note that there is not to be the diminution of one farthing in the expense of collecting the internal revenue by the abolition of any of the taxes proposed. There is not to be one clerk the less; there is not to be one dollar of cost the less. The cumbersome, inquisitorial, expensive machinery of the Bureau of Internal Revenue stands undiminished by the proposition now before the Senate. There is the fact; not one official the less, not one dollar the less salary, not a saving in any way, not an amendment, as I said, of those inquisitorial, un-American features of the excise law, which will be always standing objections to it—the right of the tax-gatherer to invade the place of business of the citizen whenever and wherever he pleases, by night or day. Of these excise taxes, which so often have had the history of their enforcement written in blood, which have frequently been executed at the cost of the lives of innocent men, not one of those features, not one of those objections is in any degree ameliorated or lessened by the bill now before us.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator allow me to state that in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill we took great pains to designate each man who was employed in the Departments of the Government and how much he should have, but we gave by the hundred thousand dollars to the Internal Revenue Department to employ whom they pleased, when they pleased, as they pleased, to send where they pleased in order to carry out these inquisitorial functions without any thought of curtailment? The trouble is that the effort is not made to give relief in that respect.

Mr. BAYARD. There are also some very unimportant diminutions in the tax for licenses for certain dealers in manufactured tobacco. There is no change whatever in the regulations or their stringency, but simply diminishing the cost of the annual license. That is all that is found there. That is small relief, and for such relief no doubt we will have the thanks of a very limited body of our citizens.

There is also a diminution in the tax on cigars from six to four dollars a thousand, a difference of two dollars a thousand. To the consumer of cigars, who buys them singly or in small numbers, I apprehend that the diminution will prove very immaterial, for, as I said before, there are reductions to the consumer which are so small that we have no coin to express their value, and this is one of them. Two dollars a thousand is the fifth of a cent apiece, and while there may be upon wholesale prices a result in a diminution equal to 33 per cent. of the present tax, it is so laid upon these articles that I doubt the relief to those who are the actual consumers of tobacco, and therefore we will have simply a diminution of the revenue without a practical diminution of the burden upon the consumers of the commodity.

I now pass from the internal tax to the external or tariff taxes, and will consider for a moment what that amounts to. The first of these is the reduction, as it is called, of the tariff on sugar. On the 3d of March, 1875, an increase of 25 per cent. ad valorem was enacted upon the descriptions of sugars, melada, molasses, and the like, embraced in this bill. It is now proposed to repeal that 25 per cent. advance, but while it nominally takes from the duty a subsequent clause restores it. The duties of our present tariff upon sugar are very high, complicated, and obscure. They are neither ad valorem, nor are they specific. They are nominally specific, but testing that specific duty by the Dutch standard of color, they virtually become ad valorem. It is an obscure, complicated, and impracticable tariff. It has led to litigation of a most disastrous character to importers, and ultimately to the public Treasury. It has led to an illegal imposition by the former Secretary of the Treasury of the test which is sought by this bill with his favor and influence now to make lawful, and that is, the test for obtaining the saccharine strength as the basis for taxation, virtually disregarding the standard of color which is specified in the present tariff law.

The bill proposes to give a discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury in the employment of the polariscopic test to ascertain the saccharine strength, which contains as I fear too wide a discretion for public safety. Every one knows that as a commercial fact the polariscope is used by buyers and sellers of sugar everywhere, but every one also knows that in determining the saccharine strength no two tests by the polariscope are found often to agree. It is perfectly easy for the examiner at the custom-house by using a polariscope in which his eye may detect crystals of certain saccharine strength to place sugar above or below a given number in the Dutch standard of color and consequent rate of duty. He may either make it pay 1¾ cents duty per pound or he may make it pay 2½ cents, and the difference is ruin to the owner or an enormous and unjust advantage to the purchaser.

As a practical fact merchants do employ the polariscope in their purchases and sales of sugar. As a practical fact those tests seldom agree, and then an accommodation takes place by way of bargain and arrangement between the buyer and seller, which enables something like justice, with certainly a voluntary bargain; but what is to become of the importer who can have no test of his own to set up against the Government examination and who is bound by it, although after he has paid that duty the polariscope in other hands may disclose a wholly inferior strength of the saccharine crystals, and he may have been taxed to death by the error or by the willful act of the Government agent over whose action he has no control and from whose decision he has practically no appeal.

Here is a commodity of universal consumption, that paid last year into the Treasury $47,000,000 revenue. Its proportions are vast. Every change in our sugar tariff has wrought a change in our trade with foreign countries. The examination of the subject has been most painstaking, able, and profound. Courts have sat upon these questions; experts have been examined under oath; everything has been done; and yet you find the question so filled with doubt, so surrounded by variant opinions, that the House of Representatives wrestling with the question in their Committee on Ways and Means for the last six years have been unable up to this time to present a measure acceptable and admittedly just upon all sides. The conflict of interests is violent; it has proven so far to be almost incapable of reconciliation; and here when we have not before the Senate or its committees one line of testimony, when we have not the word of a single witness, we are called upon by this bill, in July weather, suddenly to decide upon a question so fraught with importance to our native producers, to our importers and refiners, and to the Treasury of the country!

It so happens that I scarcely have the personal acquaintance of those who are engaged in the growth or the manufacture and refining of sugars, but I am conscious of the ruin which may be inflicted upon the grower, upon the importer, upon the manufacturer, by dealing hastily with such a question. Go over to the city of Baltimore and see there the sugar refineries on the most extensive and admirable scale once operated with abundance of capital, with ample intelligence, with long experience in the trade, and find those grand buildings empty and deserted, the business broken up and ruined, by the manner in which the present tariff has been dealt with by those having in charge the collection of duties, and then ask yourselves whether it is becoming and proper and right to throw here into the Senate, before a committee who, I say emphatically, have never examined a witness, have never had four hours of consultation on the subject, and ask the Senate to pass off-hand a measure like this? And by way of relief we are told, forsooth, it is only a "temporary" measure, and that the tariff commission, supposed to be charged with the consideration of the whole question of tariff duties, will at some time in the future report a "permanent" measure! Sir, I suppose if you were to thrust a man's head under water and keep it there for ten minutes it would be a temporary measure, but it would be death to him.

I cannot contemplate with equanimity this method of dealing with a subject so vast in its proportions, so important in its consequences to so many of my countrymen whom I may never see or know, but whose interests nevertheless I am here to vote upon—I say I cannot contemplate this reckless off-hand way of dealing with a subject of this kind without a feeling of absolute distress in being compelled to vote either "yea" or "nay" upon a proposition, in regard to which I do declare the Committee on Finance have not been prepared to present to the Senate reasons for their decision—because they have never had it under proper or I may say decent consideration.

The title of the bill says it is a reduction of taxation. I deny it. It takes off 25 per cent. ad valorem, but at the same time it substitutes a test that renders the color standard utterly nugatory. Grant that a dark discolored sugar under No. 7 of the Dutch standard is brought in, it would pay a cent and three-quarters duty. Subject the same sugar to the polariscopic test, and you may raise the duty to 2½ or 3 cents a pound; you may double the duty notwithstanding the color. Therefore it is idle to speak of a color test. No matter what shall be the color of the sugar, no matter how low in grade it may be, the polariscopic test can raise it to a tax double that which the tariff assigns to the lower grade of sugar according to the Dutch standard.

Therefore to say that this bill is a reduction of the sugar tariff is to speak inaccurately and erroneously. It will be rather an advance in the sugar tax, because any one who has had dealings with the Treasury Department and knows what its rulings have been, knows that they are almost invariably against the importer. I think to-day that there are some three thousand suits brought against the collectors at various ports taken under law by way of protest and appeal from the decisions of collectors and of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the law-books here before us show how constantly the courts have been called upon to rectify the errors of collectors and Secretaries of the Treasury. So that I say, judging as you must by probabilities, you cannot count upon this proposed amendment in the sugar tariff being a reduction in the duty. I believe it is about equivalent to those reductions of taxes whereby you diminish the rate and raise the assessment. That it seems to me is about what has been done in this case.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know that I ought to interrupt the Senator from Delaware in his remarks, but I desire to say that there is not the slightest question that the repeal of the 25 per cent. imposed by the act of 1875 will undoubtedly reduce the tax between nine and ten million dollars. In regard to the polariscopic test, the application of that test probably will raise the revenue from one to two millions, because we have had the actual experience for two years, and we know exactly what it will produce. Let me say another thing: that as to the accuracy of that test there have probably been thousands of importations to which it has been applied, and yet there has not been a single controversy growing out of the accuracy of the polariscopic test in all those importations.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not see how there could be a suit growing out of the accuracy of the polariscopic test, because that would be a question of fact. The appeal you can make is on a question of law. The court does not decide upon false grades of sugar, nor will it decide upon false colors of sugar, but the court would sit upon the question whether the Secretary of the Treasury had a right to apply a test which the law had not warranted, or whether a higher rate of duty had been collected than the law warranted. In other words, it must be a legal error that can be appealed from, not the question of fact.

Mr. SHERMAN. As to the question of law the Supreme Court undoubtedly did decide that owing to the neglect of Congress, the Department and the courts had no power to correct a rule that was shown to be an unjust rule. The fact is that the polariscopic test as applied to sugar was never doubted or questioned. On the contrary, merchants bought and sold by the polariscopic test applied by the custom-house officers.

Mr. BAYARD. The Supreme Court decided that a test had been used by the Treasury Department unwarranted by law. I have in my possession, and could have brought to the Senate, a copy of testimony taken by the other House on this subject, the statement of witnesses before the Committee on Ways and Means, and I believe I am warranted in saying, (I speak from memory, not having the book with me,) that many witnesses declared the polariscopic test to be so variant, that it depends wholly in whose hands the instrument is, and, to use the language of a sugar merchant who spoke to me here the other day, this bill is but handing over the sugar duties to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury and his agents. I am not in favor of having discretion as the basis of law. I believe with Lord Camden that the discretion of the judge is the law of tyrants. I do not believe that the business interests of this country ought to rest, nor do I think it is safe for the officer that they should rest, upon his discretion.

All this I say in a spirit of questioning, and endeavoring to ascertain what is true in regard to this matter so important to the pecuniary interests of so large a body of our people, and again to repeat my belief that while you lower with one hand in the shape of the reduction of the ad valorem duty you raise with the other in the shape of the polariscopic test. I therefore do not believe there is any serious amount of diminution in these duties.

So far as sugar is concerned, I submit to the Senate whether there would be any great reduction in the duty, and whether it is wise for us to adopt what is said by the author of this feature to be a temporary measure, which the tariff commission may hereafter set entirely aside at the end of three, six, nine, or twelve months. It seems to me that if I were engaged with my capital and exertions in business connected with this commodity, I should feel great embarrassment in having laws unshipped "temporarily," for the purpose of trying an experiment which might so soon be wholly done away with under the examination and recommendation of the board of tariff commissioners.

But the bill contains another feature. After changing the law in regard to sugar duties in the way that I have mentioned it proposes to diminish the tax upon Bessemer steel rails, to take off $8 per ton. What is that to be? Will not the duty of $20 that is left be in effect equally prohibitory? Does not every man here know that $20 per ton is a higher rate ad valorem compared with the present prices of rails, than $28 was when the rate was first established in 1870? If you mean reduction, effect it; but here you have $20 per ton upon this iron changed to steel by a simple pneumatic process almost without expense, and you have a proposed duty at a greater rate ad valorem upon the present prices than when your duty of $28 per ton was imposed in 1870; and you speak of that as a reduction.

Everything in price is comparative. Everything depends upon the results of invention and the facilities of manufacture. You are not reducing the relative rates of this commodity in the way of taxation, but you are simply adjusting them at the same rate or indeed a higher rate to existing trade and business. The tax of $20 per ton upon Bessemer-steel rails will be in effect a prohibitory tax. It cannot be said to be laid either to increase revenue or to diminish cost to the American consumer. The cost has been diminished, but diminished how? By progress in skill in manufacture, by the progress of invention, by the facilities which discovery has given to the production of this commodity. That is what has brought Bessemer steel to a lower price both in England and the United States.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Delaware if he states the fact to be that the duty of $28 a ton upon steel rails is a prohibitory tariff?

Mr. BAYARD. Virtually so.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the importations have been very large.

Mr. BAYARD. That was under the force of having no sufficient supply manufactured in the United States.

Mr. HOAR. I state the fact.

Mr. BAYARD. They were compelled to import, and even to pay any price.

Mr. HOAR. But the United States supply has largely increased; it has more than doubled.

Mr. BAYARD. There is no doubt about its having much more than doubled; it has been stimulated by an excessive tariff taxation, and I think any business would be that paid 77 per cent. per annum profit. No wonder the production is increased, no wonder the American supply is greater; but I repeat what I said, that $20 a ton is a higher rate ad valorem, according to the present prices of steel rails, than $28 per ton when the duty was originally laid.

Mr. HOAR. My question related to the statement of the Senator that it was a prohibitory duty, it being in fact a duty under which enormous importations are going on. Whether that importation is caused by extraordinary demand, it certainly is not a prohibitory duty at $28 a ton.

Mr. BAYARD. The demand may be so urgent, the demand may be so instant and pressing, that contractors for railways cannot avoid it; but the proof is that the prices which did obtain in 1870 have been lowered simply because of the increased skill and facilities and the extension of discovery in the manufacture of steel by this remarkable process——

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senator that the importations of the very article referred to by the Senator now this last year show figures that would astonish him. The foreign production of iron rails is now competing very severely with the manufacture of iron rails in this country. The amount of importations of steel rails last year was 334,085,026 pounds, so that the importation already under existing law is very large; and this reduction of $8 a ton will make a sharp competition between the manufacturers in this country and the manufacturers in Europe.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not think that the figures are fairly cited, or that they meet the real and full meaning of the facts of this case. Here was a discovery that ranks among the greatest of the age, the effects of which in the beneficence to the human family were most remarkable. Everybody could get the benefit of that, except the American people, who needed it almost more than any others. The European patents were possessed in this country by a very limited number of individuals, some of them, as I have been told, members of the House of Representatives, who voted for this increase of duty themselves, who dishonestly used the public trust of legislative power to enrich themselves, and doubled the tax upon steel rails when this English invention, so blessed in its results to mankind, was to be restricted and cut off by the imposition of an unjust tariff tax. Then, having possessed themselves of a monopoly first of the patents, they were unable to meet the great demand for steel rails. It was not a matter of choice whether a company could lay down an iron rail or a steel rail. No railroad man would dream of constructing a railroad of iron rails. Steel is no longer a matter of choice; its durability and strength make it a necessity. So under the necessity they had to import what our protected manufacturers were unable to supply. That is the reason why I say the duty was and is virtually prohibitory. The payment of a double price for steel rails was no more voluntary than the voluntary payment by the poor clerks of these political assessments to Mr. HUBBELL. It was involuntary, it had to be done or the railroads could not be built. That is the true history of the consequences of this abuse of the taxing power by Congress.

Is $8 per ton an equivalent reduction? Is that a reasonable reduction with the monopolies that exist in this country under the tariff, with the combinations that exist to manufacture Bessemer-steel rails? It was proved the other day by the records of the orphan's court of the city and county of Philadelphia that a yearly dividend of 77 per cent. profit had been declared by those who controlled the Bessemer patents and who are making these steel rails. What is fair and just among the American people? What is fair and just in legislation? Why were those dividends so high? Because you had a tariff tax of $28 a ton upon this commodity. Why should they not be satisfied with one-half of 77 per cent., that is 38 per cent? How many farmers are there in this country who have made upon their holdings a clear income and dividend in five years—not one year—of 38 per cent? Yet when the proposition is made to reduce this tax from $28 to $14 a ton it is voted down, and this proposition of $8 a ton is thrown in to lessen public indignation.

I do not deny that it is a reduction, but I do not consider it a reasonable or an equivalent reduction in the face of existing facts. I could repeat here to the Senate statements to me by men who have been compelled to build railroads in which the cost has been increased millions of dollars because of this excessive duty. Go to the Mexican frontier and see men building two miles of railroad at the cost of one built in Texas, and ask the reason why. Go to Canada and see two railroads running parallel down the Saint Lawrence River, and see two miles built on that side at the same cost as one mile on this side, and ask the reason why. Railroads are no longer luxuries; they are necessities, and their cost must be paid for. If they are more expensive of course their freights must be higher. They are no longer matters of choice as to their use; they are matters of necessity, and all that enters into the cost of the railway and increases its cost is a direct and immediate burden upon the producing classes of the American people, and mainly upon the agricultural classes. The problem of distribution and transportation is to-day more difficult in the United States than that of production, and the cost of railways controls the rates of transportation and affects every business interest.

But there is another amendment by way of alleged reduction. It proposes to amend section 2504 by adding—

That on and after the 1st day of October, 1882, on all manufactures, articles, vessels, and wares made from hoop, band, or scroll iron, or of which hoop, band, or scroll iron shall be the component material of chief value, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the same duty, or rate of duty, as that imposed on the hoop, band, or scroll iron from which they are made or which shall be the component material of chief value.

What does that mean? It is called manufactures of hoop-iron. It is simply to double the present duty of 35 per cent. ad valorem upon all the iron cotton-ties and all the iron hoops used throughout the United States. By a fair calculation it would add 12 cents cost on the hoops of every bale of cotton that shall be raised in this country. If we have, as probably there will be, 6,000,000 bales, there will be an increased tax upon every cotton-grower, black and white, of seven hundred and odd thousand dollars; and that is called a reduction of the tariff.

Thirty-five per cent. ad valorem is certainly a full measure of protection. Why should you change that to 1¼ cents a pound upon these pieces of hoop-iron? Is it fair or reasonable that a tax should be laid of 70 per cent. ad valorem to prevent coopers, cotton-packers and cotton-growers from fastening their wares, for use at home or for export? About three-fifths of this iron in cotton-ties goes out of the country with the cotton and no drawback is allowed upon it.

Mr. BECK. Seventy-one per cent. is exported.

Mr. BAYARD. That is about three-fourths. Every bale of cotton that is exported carries out of the country the iron ties which came into it, and no drawback whatever is allowed for duties paid. I submit, Senators, that when you consider the condition of the Southern country, and of that class of colored laborers for whom so much sympathy has been professed, and, under the pretense of lessening public burdens put an additional weight of $700,000 a year upon them, you are doing something that cannot be advocated on the score of sincerity, justice, morality, or right.

It is an abuse of the taxing power to do this thing. It is not laid for a revenue; it is not laid for a public use, but for a private advantage, and so it will stand that in this bill, on whose false face is written the word "reduction," there is a doubling of this duty, not only to every man who packs and grows cotton but to every cooper who shall make any cask, or keg, and everything requiring the use of hoop-iron in smaller pieces and cut into lengths, and he is to pay hereafter at the rate of $35 a ton duty. That is what it amounts to. Hoop-iron is worth about $50 a ton. Thirty-five per cent. the present duty upon that is about $16½ or $17. The duty proposed is one and a half cents per pound; that is very nearly $35 a ton.

When you lower the tax upon Bessemer-steel rails, as at last the ears of the majority are sufficiently penetrated by the demand for relief upon that subject to take off this small portion of a duty, in the same bill you raise the duty upon these fragments of hoop-iron to $35 a ton. What consistency or justice is there in such legislation?

That is all there is now in the bill. What may be done in the way of amendment hereafter I do not know, but that is the way the Republican party in Congress propose to "reduce" taxes. I think it would be a matter of easy arithmetic to figure up that taxes will be rather advanced so far as the tariff is concerned by the bill, and that the reductions of the internal-revenue taxes are really those that will give least relief to the great body of the industries of this country.

The tariff of 1861 was arranged with the avowed object of increasing the revenue to provide for the extraordinary and necessary expenses of war. Our present tariff system may be said to have its basis, its theory, in the tariff of August, 1861. Accompanying the demand for revenue was the accepted principle in laying the tariff taxes, to which I give my assent, of discriminating by those tariff duties in favor of our home industries. The doctrine was fully admitted in the tariff law of 1861, which, whether it was wisely laid as to the amounts and subjects, had for its professed real object the raising of revenue to maintain this Government in war, carrying with it the principle of discriminating in favor of our home industries wherever that could be done.

The principal object for which those taxes were imposed was revenue; the incident was protection. So long as those relations are maintained we have safety as the basis and the principle of laying taxes. Whenever you reverse them you are without warrant in the Constitution and you have started upon a course which I think can easily be shown will be pregnant with disaster and filled with injustice.

Gradually, however, those who were specially benefited by the tariff increased in boldness as they gathered strength and power and protection, and protected interests substituted themselves instead of the idea of public revenue. In that way that which was intended to be the incident became the principal. This was the gradual growth of the tariff. Taxation on imports had revenue for its principal and protection of American industries for its incident. Time has reversed all this, and doctrines which would have shocked and astonished the friends of the American system enough to make Henry Clay, the great advocate of the American system, turn in his coffin, are now laid down and calmly delivered as axioms in political economy. One distinguished gentleman still holding a high place in the other House has announced that no political economist worthy of respect any longer "pretends to consider a protective duty as a tax!"

In fact, a new political lexicon seems to have been adopted in certain circles, and the word "duty" to have lost its former significance, and to mean no longer an obligation or debt from a citizen to support his government, but rather an obligation of the Government to support the citizen—a "duty" to protect his private interests by taxing the public for his support and profit. They would have us believe that "a duty" is something to be paid out of and not into the public fund. Thus we have within the last year witnessed conventions of certain manufacturers applaud the announcement that "a tariff for protection with incidental revenue" is what is needed in the United States.

And the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has announced on the floor of the Senate that he is in favor of protection for its own sake, and were there no public debt and no demand in that way he still would lay tariff taxes for the sake of protection.

Mr. President, it seems to me that under such a course of thought the limitations of the Constitution upon our powers of legislation and of justice and safety are lost sight of. If the right exists to have a tax laid, not for a public but for a private purpose, a right per se, not as an incident but as a principal, who is entitled to it? Who shall adjudge such rights or dispense such favors? Do you say they belong to American industry? What is American industry? There is a definition I will read that perhaps at the present time may have some influence. It is in a speech of the late President Garfield, made in 1870, in which he described what "industry" was entitled to protection. He said:

We are limited in our tariff legislation by two things: first, the demands of the Treasury; and second, the wants and demands of American industry. The Treasury we understand, but what is "American industry?" I reject that narrow view which considers "industry" any one particular form of labor. I object to any theory that treats the industries of the country as they were treated in the last census, when we had one schedule for "agriculture" and another for "industry," as though agriculture were not an industry, as though commerce and trade and transportation were not industries. American industry is labor in any form which gives value to the raw materials or elements of nature, either by extracting them from the earth, the air, or the sea, or by modifying their forms, or transporting them through the channels of trade to the markets of the world, or in any way rendering them better fitted for the use of man. All these are parts of American industry, and deserve the careful and earnest attention of the legislature of the nation. Wherever a ship plows the sea, or a plow furrows the field; wherever a mine yields its treasure; wherever a ship or a railroad train carries frieght to market; wherever the smoke of a furnace rises, or the clang of the loom resounds; even in the lonely garret, where the seamstress plies here busy needle—there is industry.

Who has thus far obtained the favors of protection in the history of this country? Has it been the weak or the strong? Protection carries in its very name the suggestion of weakness to be protected, but we have seen in the history of tariff legislation that the strongest lobby and the most powerful interests have been the most successful in obtaining protection. I have never known a subsidy beggar who was not a millionaire.

Mr. President, one glance at the great departments of wool and iron will show that the duties in all those leading products have been carefully increased, harmonized, and adjusted in accordance with the views of the parties interested. Is it not a fact that in the first proposition introduced in the other House there was, originally, an item to double the duty on steel blooms? Steel blooms to-day pay 45 per cent. ad valorem. There was a proposition made that they should be put upon the steel list and taxed the same as steel railway bars. Why was not that pursued? Because, Senators, it awoke too strong an opposition among other strong and protected classes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator from Deleware does not mean to intimate that any such thing was in the bill in the Senate or before the Committee on Finance of the Senate?

Mr. BAYARD. I spoke of the original proposition. We know where it originated.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no knowledge of where it originated. No such proposition has been before the Committee on Finance or any committee of the Senate.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator is very innocent of information. I am only speaking of the published fact to be read and to be found in the records of the other House, published in every newspaper, that the proposition was made to double the duty on steel blooms I believe by Mr. MCKINLEY, of Ohio.

I ask why was it not insisted upon? I think I can tell you. Because instantly throughout the press all over the country there came protests from strong interests that were invaded by the proposed change. It was because it was not "an infant industry," a weak interest that was assaulted; and I say it was the strong influence of those who were interested in rolling steel blooms, which pay but 45 per cent., into the rails and other manufactures that are protected by a duty of 90 per cent. that prevented that amendment being in this bill to-day. The proposition was made, it cannot be denied. The Senator from Rhode Island will not venture to deny it. I did not say it was brought into the Committee on Finance; I did not say it was ever in the bill before the Senate; but I said that the proposition was made and it was abandoned. I can turn to the public press, and I can show the protests and the reasons given; they had waked up the wrong customer, a little bit too strong, and they were obliged to succumb and withdraw.

So I say we have come to this pass in this country, that the protection is not to the weak, the protection is to the strong, and to him who grows strong by what he feeds upon, which is the unequal and unjust exercise of the great public power of taxation.

I ask under what pretext was the tariff which began in 1861 advanced steadily until 1875? The war needed supplies, and it was a just exercise of the taxing power. The tariff taxation was not sufficient. It rose so high that importations under it greatly lessened. Then what was resorted to? In 1862 commenced the system of internal taxation. The excise tax and the excise system were then just essayed; both were declared to be temporary. The war tariff was to be temporary, but it was made dependent upon the continuance of the internal revenue, and the internal revenue was to be temporary.

I want to read some extracts in the presence of the gentlemen who uttered the words, many of whom were the fathers and friends of the present system. The honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and the honorable Senator from Iowa are two. Here was the doctrine laid down: the tariff does not supply sufficient revenue for the enormous expenses of the war; we will resort to an excise system, and we will tax our manufacturers and others by an internal system of taxation. Then the idea was evolved that by taxing a man under the internal-revenue system you destroyed the benefit and advantage of protection he had from the tariff system, and ergo the higher went the internal-revenue taxation the higher the tariff must go to correspond with it; they must move on pari passu. You had built your embankment to protect them against exterior assault. You then raise the plane by taxation on the interior; and at once were obliged again to raise your exterior embankment. That was the avowed principle of legislation. I propose to read a few extracts to show that I am justified in this statement. In 1864 the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] thus laid it down:

In adjusting the tariff upon iron the principle has been to give an increase upon the tariff of 1861 equal to the internal duties. With the enormous demand of the Government for iron, and with some protection against the influx of unlimited importations, the trade could not be otherwise than prosperous. We shall not now import as much iron under the present bill, but we shall, I think, get a little more revenue.

I estimate that the present bill will increase the revenue not less than fifteen millions, and probably more. This is intended as a war measure, a temporary measure, and it is needful that it should pass speedily.

* * * * * * *

The Treasury requires a larger supply of means, and such sources of revenue as have not already yielded their maximum contributions must now be sought, so that we may fill the measure of our wants. This has made an increase of internal duties necessary, and that increase, to a considerable extent, imposes upon us the duty, as well as affords us the power, of obtaining an increased revenue from duties on imports from abroad.

And when we impose a tax of 5 per cent. upon our manufactures and increase the tariff to the same extent upon foreign manufactures, we leave them upon the same relative footing they were at the start, and neither has cause of complaint.

I observe as usual nothing is said there about the consumer or the citizen. There is the proposition that because the want of revenue under the tariff necessitated the creation of the excise system, the advance in the excise tax necessitated the imposition of increased burdens by the tariff tax, and so they went on under that system, raising the internal-revenue taxes and raising the tariff taxes pari passu until 1868. In 1866 the internal-revenue tax was highest, and there was a tax of 6 per cent. upon the gross products of manufacturers, and there were other subsidiary taxes which made all that they used in manufacture much more expensive. There was a tax of 5 cents per ton upon coal that he paid; there was a tax upon almost everything under the excise system as there is now under the tariff system. Six per cent. upon the gross products of a manufacturer was probably equivalent to 12 per cent. tax upon the commodity which entered into his manufacture. At page 136 of Mr. Young's Customs-Tariff Legislation I find a statement from Mr. Fessenden, who afterward became Secretary of the Treasury:

The tariff is adjusted, and was adjusted before, upon that simple principle with reference to the internal-revenue taxation.

Which is, as you raise the internal-revenue tax you must correspondingly raise the tariff. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] again declared, in speaking of the tariff act of 1866:

No duty is needed for the protection of American cotton, but it is manifestly proper when we levy an internal tax upon any article that at least an equal amount of duty for revenue purposes should be levied upon any foreign importation of the article.

Then my friend from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] took the same view and adopted the same rule. He said:

At the close of the session yesterday afternoon I was endeavoring to show the rise and progress of the existing tariff and the causes therefor, originating in the internal-revenue laws that were passed from time to time from 1861 to 1865, for the purpose of raising revenue to maintain the Government in its struggle with the rebellion. I stated on the 30th of June, 1864, an ad valorem internal-revenue tax was imposed upon manufacturers in this country equivalent to 5 per cent. upon their gross products, and that tax of 5 per cent. was increased by an act passed in March, 1865, so that it became 6 per cent. upon the gross product of every article manufactured or consumed in this country in the way of internal-revenue tax. This large internal-revenue tax was made the excuse and the cause of the advance of the tariff of July 14, 1862, and June 30, 1864.

In 1866, when Mr. MORRILL introduced into the Thirty-ninth Congress a tariff measure as a temporary measure, the manufacturers of the country were groaning under a weight of (internal) taxation equivalent to $128,000,000 per annum.

It is admitted by all that the increase of the tariff was commenced and carried on upon the basis of the protective duties of the Morrill tariff of 1861, the increase of direct taxation, which, added to the price of domestic manufactures, rendered an increased tariff necessary, in order to prevent our country from being flooded with cheaper foreign productions. Certainly, then, upon the decrease of internal taxation, the tariff may be, and ought to be, decreased in proportion; the danger being no longer in existence which was sought to be averted by those increased duties.

But I may be asked how this reduction shall be made. I think it should be made upon nearly all leading articles; and for that purpose, when I can get an opportunity in the House, I shall move that the pending bill be recommitted to the Committee on Ways and Means, with instructions to report a reduction upon existing rates of duty, equivalent to 20 per cent upon the existing rates upon the leading articles, or one-fifth reduction. Even this will not be a full equivalent for the removal of all internal taxes upon manufactures. It will not be difficult to make a reduction upon this basis.

Mr. BUTLER. What year was that, may I inquire of the Senator?

Mr. BAYARD. In 1866. Here is another quotation from Mr. Garfield which I shall also read, and I would commend it to his fellow-countrymen both in and out of this Senate. Mr. Garfield said:

One of the most efficient methods of encouraging home industry is to secure extensive markets; and to do that, prices here must be so adjusted as to open to our trade more of the markets of the New World. I do not suppose that we shall for a quarter of a century reach the old level of prices; for, with $250,000,000 of taxes to be paid every year, prices cannot go down where they were when we paid but $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 a year. In 1866, when we reached the highest point of taxation, expenditures, and prices, Congress began the work of reduction. But while we have made heavy reductions in the taxes, and thus greatly relieved the burdens of the people, there has been no substantial reduction of the taxes on imported goods.

Here we have the history (short and simple) of how the tariff passed from being a tariff for revenue with incidental protection into being in fact a tariff for protection with incidental revenue, and how the principal object for which it was laid, revenue, was thus forgotten or overlooked. I will not say that but how it was found impossible to recall the special privileges and powers that had once been granted.

Where are your internal-revenue taxes now? There is no longer a tax upon a manufacturer; there is no longer an income tax; there is no longer a tax laid upon every subsidiary manufacture in the country that entered into the leading manufactures. These all were repealed long ago, most of them in 1868, and some prior to that.

Since the pretext and the avowed reason for these abnormal and excessive tariff taxes has passed away, why is it your promise has not been kept, and the tariff reduced to its only justification, and that is a measure of revenue to support the Government? Protection should be the incident and not the principal; but under this, I will not say stealthy, but under this gradual growth of privilege the owners of that privilege have waxed fat and they have kicked and they have kicked over the ladder by which they rose. The excise duties have gone, but the excessive tariff which was based on the pretext of those excise taxes still stands, and indeed has been greatly increased; because after the speeches were made which I have read, after Mr. ALLISON and Mr. MORRILL, Mr. Fessenden and many others had spoken, you had the tariff of 1867, which advanced the duty upon wool and woolens so immensely, and brought the woolen trade into the condition in which it now stands, which I hold to be utterly indefensible and unreasonable.

Why, sir, in 1861 and for some years after it was alleged, and with some show of truth, that our capitalists needed protection from the still richer and greater capitalists of Europe; that money and capital were cheaper there than here; and so it came that the rich were to be protected against those still richer, and then you turned to labor and said: "We will protect the poor man against him who is still poorer." The plea of protection was urged in either case.

Now, what is the fact about capital? Has that changed? Are money rates the same as when this tariff was instituted? I have in my hand a paper from the Government actuary at the Treasury Department, dated the 3d of July, 1882, showing the rates of interest received by a present investor in United States 4 per cent. bonds. An average interest of 2.9 per cent. per annum was realized during the month of June and 2.89 in the month of May. Is there any cheaper capital in Europe than that? That is not one-half of the rates when this tariff was formed. The cry then was that capital must be protected from greater capital abroad. That, at least, is put an end to by these figures and by the facts.

Then, as to the protection of the laboring-man, that idea has been pretty well exploded. As far as I know, every thingthat the incentive of patent laws can give to any invention of labor-saving machinery has been availed of; as far as I know the freest importation of laborers, black, white, or yellow, from any quarter of the world that can take the place of discontented workmen here has been allowed; transportation has been quickened and cheapened; immigration has been encouraged to the utmost, and by the million the laboring classes of Europe have been imported to this country and have taken their place in the ranks of labor in every branch of employment.

It is a rule in the courts that where the reason ceases the law ceases. When the reason for this excessive tariff taxation, which now, as far as the estimate may be intelligently made, is something over an average of 50 per cent. on our entire list, ceased, why is it that it is not reduced? Your general excise taxation was abolished long ago, and with the exception of the stamp tax now proposed to be repealed upon checks and deposits, it is confined to whisky and tobacco and beer.

If there is to be some relief to manufacturers, I could have suggested that which I think would be a very measurable service to all manufacturing chemists, and that is a reduction in the cost of alcohol. I believe to-day that the tax both upon tobacco and distilled spirits is far past the revenue point. I know that some years ago when we reduced the tax on tobacco from 24 to 16 cents it was declared by the then Secretary of the Treasury, now Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] that there would be a diminution of revenue of some ten or twelve millions of dollars. He turned out to be mistaken, and the increase of revenue was almost as great as his estimate of the supposed deficit. The same thing was said by my friend from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] and he was in error. The fact is 16 cents per pound on tobacco has produced very nearly $10,000,000 more than the tax of 20 cents; and so I believe that a tax of 10 cents upon this commodity would produce in the course of two years a revenue equal to that which we receive now, which reached the enormous amount of $43,000,000 per annum last year.

So I believe that by a duty of 600 per cent. ad valorem upon whisky you have passed the revenue point, and that you would receive more revenue if you lowered your tax to 60 or perhaps 50 cents per gallon; and there would be in that more saving, in my judgment, to the manufacturers of this country, if they could obtain alcohol 30 cents per gallon less than they now pay, than in all these proposed reductions of your internal revenue. I have not the figures to show the relative proportions of this commodity that are used in the arts and manufactures. I do know, however, that it is very essential in the manufacture of certain varnishes and also as a vehicle for nearly all medicines in fluid form. Nearly everything that is to be used in solution must employ alcohol. So I can well imagine that a reduction in the tax upon that article of 30 cents per gallon would cause no diminution of the revenue, but prove an assistance far greater than these proposed reductions which have been sent here by the Committee on Ways and Means and so trumpeted as important reductions of taxation.

Notwithstanding the war had ended and the revenues were not needed, yet the habit of advancing taxes for other purposes than revenue had grown so strong and so irresistible that the duty on wool and woolens was again advanced in 1867. The internal taxes having been repealed, the manufacturer having been relieved from them, still the increase of the tariff went on.

There is one little illustration of the practical working of this tariff that I want to lay before the Senate. I have in my hand a letter written to me last December by a very intelligent, upright man, who is a manufacturer. He has gone through every stage of manufacture, from being a mill-hand to being a mill-owner, and to-day carries on woolen mills with success in Delaware. He spent last summer in England, and he writes me, sending me a specimen of the cloth he refers to, as follows:

Our present tariff on wool and its substitutes is an outrage on the consumers of woolen goods of America. I herewith inclose a sample of woolen goods which was selling in Leeds, when I was over, by manufacturers at seven pence half penny per yard, or say 15 cents currency. It is fifty-four inches wide and weighs 18 ounces per yard. The specific duty of 40 cents per pound, which will be 45 cents per yard, and 40 per cent ad valorem will be 6 cents per yard or 51 cents per yard duty on goods selling by manufacturers at 15 cents per yard.

Here is the cloth. [Exhibiting.] Any gentleman can examine it. It is a plain, useful piece of goods, and the duty upon it under our tariff is very nearly 340 per cent. ad valorem. To such absurdities this tariff has come, building it up upon the pretext of internal taxation and letting it stand after the internal taxation has been removed. This is not the rich man's cloth, although I do not know but that any man would be glad to have clothing of it. There it is; let it speak for itself.

Can you justify a law that will allow the clothing of the poorer class of your countrymen to stand with such a tax upon it? I cite it because it is a fair and a practical expression of what this man says, whom I vouch for from my knowledge of his truth and honor, and if he is questioned I have no doubt he will be perfectly able to substantiate his facts before the tariff commission or anywhere else, and I should be glad to furnish his address.

Mr. HAWLEY. It struck me that the Senator from Delaware made a slip of the tongue in speaking of that matter. He referred to tariff duties built up on internal-revenue taxation in connection with the heavy duties on woolen goods. Now, it is our understanding in New England, where we manufacture a good deal of woolen goods, that the large duty upon those goods is due to the irresistible demand of the wool-growers in the West and Southwest and elsewhere, that they have protection on their wool. Certainly if the Senator can bring about a peaceable settlement with the wool-growers, the wool manufacturers would be very willing to have the former duty on woolen goods restored.

Mr. BAYARD. If the gentleman can furnish any satisfaction to the American purchaser of this cloth out of that argument, I should like to hear it. The poor man is crushed between the upper and nether millstones. You represent one, and the wool-grower may represent the other, but that does not make the consumer any happier, his fate is the same, and I propose to rescue him from both. I propose that there shall be a just and reasonable tax, that shall bring revenue, and at the same time, by discriminating, give a fair protection to home industry,—but not a tax that enhances the cost of nearly every article of living, that prohibits importation, and kills commerce.

But I want to go further than that. I want before I get through a speech that I am in no condition to make on such a day as this, and I am only making it perforce because this tariff question has been brought here and dumped down in the Senate without notice and without any of the ordinary regularities of proceeding——

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to ask a question. The Senator says that a pound and a half of woolen cloth of the fabric he exhibited is sold for 15 cents in England.

Mr. BAYARD. I said that the duty is 40 cents per pound——

Mr. SHERMAN. But I mean the cost of the article.

Mr. BAYARD. It cost 7½*d.* to the yard. It weighs eighteen ounces to the yard.

Mr. SHERMAN. I doubt very much whether raw wool is sold in England at those rates, of any grade whatever.

Mr. BAYARD. I suspect this cloth is chiefly made of woolen rags, which if brought to this country would pay a duty of 12 cents per pound. That is another feature of this tariff.

Mr. SHERMAN. Our duties are framed to exclude just that kind of shoddy manufactures, because we were covered with them before the war, and we had to pass severe laws really to exclude that kind of shoddy manufacture. As a matter of course, that amount of wool in England or anywhere else would cost more than 7½*d.*

Mr. BAYARD. I am not a skilled manufacturer. I do not know the arts and contrivances to which they resort. I have in my possession one or two letters relating to another species of alleged woolen manufacture which will show how very little wool there may be in an alleged woolen manufacture, but here is the cloth. [Exhibiting.] The man who bought this is a practical man. It can be examined by any Senator. I propose to let it speak for itself on these statements, and there is the fact that on woolen cloth that has intrinsic value, that is useful for the purpose of clothing mankind, there is a tariff duty to-day of 340 per cent. ad valorem. Is that a tariff for revenue or what? Is it not a tariff for prohibition "only?"

What is the result? There is not in the Senate or anywhere a man who means to deal more fairly by every interest in this country than I; but I do propose to consider them on an equal scale of justice to all. What is the result of the present system upon our manufactures? I ask you if they have not been unduly stimulated by this system of tariff taxes, and I ask you whether with all our great and varied productions, where have we any market except at home? Is there not to-day in this country, owing to the enterprise, the industry, the inventive genius, and the skill of our countrymen, a production ample for at least one hundred millions of people? We have fifty-five millions at the outside; and when they are supplied, where is our market for the surplus? Where are you to go? You cannot go abroad with these duties upon wool and duties which you lay upon everything. Your protection has been not only heavy but indiscriminate, and it seems to me that wherever you shall reach the point of prohibition in your duties you will find two-edged; it will kill your foreign market and glut your home market; and between the two where is the advantage to the American manufacturer?

Commerce is not and cannot be one-sided! Commerce means mutuality of exchange and mutuality of benefit; for, if there be not mutuality of benefit, it will soon come to an end by the ruin of one of the parties. Duties that prohibit imports put an end to commerce, and when you put an end to commerce what becomes of your shipping interest? We hear a great deal about it. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] brings in resolutions pointing to an amelioration of the condition of our foreign shipping. But, what is the use of talking of ships unless they are to have cargoes, and they cannot carry a cargo one way only; they must run full both ways or run at a loss. So that, I say, you begin with an excessive and indiscriminate tariff duty, you glut your home market, you utterly disable yourselves for a foreign market, and you have not the instrumentalities to carry your products, even if they were able to be sailed in competition with foreign vessels. Agriculture needs foreign markets for its surplus production; but if agriculture cannot buy in foreign markets with its proceeds those things its owner needs, because of excessive tariff duties it cannot bring them home, certainly there is great disadvantage and loss and we cannot expect to be paid for all our exports in cash. An examination of our list of exports, and the picture presented by our merchant marine, will tell the whole story, and explain the necessity of reform in our taxing system.

Look at the effects of overproduction of manufactures in this country. Here is a subject which I approach with a great deal of gravity and hesitancy. I mean the subject of the strikes of labor. If manufacturers are not prosperous they cannot pay the wages needed by labor for its support. If you have overproduction and consequently low prices, you will have greater supply than demand; and why? It is because your home market, which is your only market, is overstocked. What is your only remedy for an overstocked home market? Exportation. Can you export? The tariff forbids you. If you go abroad, you are handicapped by these indiscriminate and heavy tariff taxes that have increased the cost of your production, and you cannot sell in competition with those who have had no such taxes to pay. What then is your remedy? To stop production, shut down the mill, close the mine, until scarcity shall raise prices again; and in the meantime where is labor? Idle and suffering. What are the fruits of idleness? What are the natural results of idleness? Is there not a lesson of philosophy in this question that should check men in their heedless pursuit of gain irrespective of the laws of nature. Wise thoughts I have found are often best expressed by men who sit upon the serene heights of reflection and consider their fellow-creatures without the perturbations of selfish interest and ambition. In speaking of mechanical employment, Sir Henry Taylor says in an essay on Wordsworth:

> Mechanical employment has no doubt a tendency to alleviate suffering and subdue excitability, and this truth has a political as well as a moral bearing; for in seasons of commercial or agricultural difficulty, the political disturbances which arise amongst the lower orders of the people may be attributed, not to distress and destitution only—for it has often been observed that they extend to many who are under no immediate pressure of want—but also to the concurrent deprivation of that great sedative to the human mind which is found in the employment of the body. Neither hunger nor full feeding act alike upon all men—the one will not invariably produce irritability, still less will the other be unfailingly attended with contentment—but steady labor or manual employment will always promote composure of mind, a fact which may add one more to the many considerations which lead the politician, as well as the moralist, to insist that a high rate of wages is less to be desired for a country than work which is regular even though ill paid.

Was there ever in any country so many men idle and organized in a wages strike as we see to-day in the United States? Did not events connected with the discontents of the laboring classes shock and startle the country five years ago?

There are elements of danger in our political system, which it behooves us gravely to consider, and to remember that the very freedom which so marks our popular institutions places them in greater danger should that liberty be misunderstood or abused.

To prevent any pretext for such abuse, I now draw your attention to that system of unequal and excessive taxation, which I believe contributes more than any other single cause, to produce these periodical cessations and abandonment of regular and steady labor, the consequences of which fall most painfully upon the laboring classes.

I do not see how this evil can be expected to be lessened until we discover and remove the latent causes. Can the manufacturer continue his production in the face of a market which is unprofitable to him when overproduction has taken place, when his only market is glutted? Can he send the surplus to some foreign country and dispose of it? What is his first relief? He has purchased his materials as closely as he can and then he pays out as little as he can for its manufacture. He cuts down the wages of labor until they are so low that either the men are in revolt for want of sufficient wages to enable them and their families to live, or the employer is unable himself to pay at all, and his mill or workshop must be closed, and remain closed until the market is relieved by consumption, and a demand is again generated for his products.

Now, I say that if I am right in this, the change cannot come too soon in our tax system that shall give to the American manufacturer an outlet for his productions, more expansive markets for his commodities, and in that way enable him to give his laborers regular and steady employment. It is the glutted market that causes a cessation of production. It is the glutted market that causes the strike. Diminished production means unemployed labor.

Capital can lie by and rest, but the laboring man has nothing to support himself and his family but the work of his hands from day to day, and those little savings, which, if the strike is to last long, must soon be exhausted. I submit to you it is our duty, so far as laws may accomplish it, to assist in removing causes so demoralizing as the enforced periodical idleness of labor. What capital loses by the delay it may regain in the enhanced price, but what labor loses by delay is gone and lost forever. I hold that it is not a healthful condition and least of all in a government based upon a suffrage almost universal.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to ask him a question at that point? I do not wish to interrupt him, but it is in reference to that principle.

Mr. BAYARD. If the Senator wishes to ask a question, I will answer, but I am rather fatigued. I have spoken longer than I intended.

Mr. BLAIR. I will not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. BAYARD. I will answer any question the Senator wishes to ask.

Mr. BLAIR. I understood the Senator to enunciate this principle, that what capital loses by delay it makes up afterward and what labor loses by delay is gone forever. Now, is there a distinction between the losses of capital by delay and the losses of labor by delay? Is there not in the subsequent demand for labor an increased recompense for labor precisely as there is increased compensation for capital?

Mr. BAYARD. No, I think I am perfectly right, because the labor I refer to is labor specially instructed and adapted to the line of its occupation. The man employed in a mill cannot turn out and work at something else wholly different; the blacksmith must be a blacksmith, the spinner must be a spinner; he cannot part with his trade and take up a new occupation suddenly. What I said is true. Capital in the first place can afford to lie by because what it loses at the time it gains by the enhanced price caused by non-production; but when the laboring-man remains idle for a week or two or three weeks, it is simply to him a dead loss and nothing accrues; on the contrary, probably at the end of that time, starving, weak, and dispirited, he is glad to accept even reduced wages.

Mr. BLAIR. Is it not true that the idleness of capital and of labor is alike enforced by excessive production, and that capital and labor alike will resume production when there is a demand for the product? So that if capital is idle it loses; if labor is idle it loses in its time; but whenever there comes a demand for the thing produced labor and capital again combine and wages increase precisely as compensation comes again to capital. Is not that so?

Mr. BAYARD. I think not.

Mr. BLAIR. The divergence of labor into other directions has not been taken into account.

Mr. BAYARD. I thought the Senator wished to ask a question which I should answer with the greatest pleasure if I were able, but I do not think this is the time for him to make general comments. The proper time will be hereafter. If my propositions which are submitted in all candor will not bear criticism, dismiss them. If they contain truths, if they shall tend to alleviate the dangers which I feel to-day are threatening our social system, do not, I beg of you, shut them from your minds, gentlemen of the majority, because they come from one of your political opponents.

You may estimate the losses in such strikes as we now witness by millions of dollars in the mere loss of wages to labor. As I have said if scarcity is produced by diminished production the capitalist may regain and recoup his losses though he may shorten his gains. The laborer cannot do this. But the actual loss to labor is not his measure of money wages. There is not only diminished production that affects the whole country; there not only is a diminished home market for other commodities, which we are told is one of the chief advantages of well-paid labor, that it creates a market for home productions; there not only is diminished consumption which of course involves loss to producers, but more than that there is the substitution of a speculative temper and habit among men in lieu of a regular, steady, and wholesome trade. If men believe there is to be an overproduction and consequent temporary fall in prices, if there is to be periodical or irregular stoppages in production, then regularity of supply and demand will vanish and speculation upon these emergencies will take place. Then there is a demoralization of the laboring class arising from idleness and from those vices that follow inevitably in its train, the ill-effects of which never wholly depart, and are replete with dangers. I read the passage from Sir Henry Taylor to show that steady occupation, the regularity of employment is the true sedative for human excitability, and it is the true method by which men shall lead contented and honorable lives, and not be subjected to these periodical disturbances which interfere with steady labor and retard productive industry.

Besides, such seasons of distress always are the chosen time, the opportunity for demagogues, the curse and pest of popular government, those men who seize occasions of depression to exaggerate distress, and appeal to all the lowest and worst instincts of humanity, and to all the dishonorable and mean traits in a community to shake the foundations of public credit, to disorder its occupation, to weaken its law-abiding spirit, and in that way to make a republican form of government less safe and respectable.

And what will be the result upon political parties if you shall agree that the taxing power of our Government shall be used by those who can command the strongest cohorts to make their raids upon the public Treasury? Will it be any longer a republican government? Will it be a representative government founded upon popular intelligence, and upon the virtues that adorn domestic and support public life, or will it be a government of mere wealth, a corrupt plutocracy, in which everything shall be given to him who hath and from him who hath not even his little shall be taken away?

I believe that the legislation of this country for a long time has been too much influenced by combinations of property which control its taxing power, and which take for private and personal ends just that portion of the property of each citizen that they can obtain through the forms of law. The ultimate consequences of this is to my mind plain. Political power in this country is in the majority, and these abuses will always increase and strengthen until finally you will drive mere numbers into opposition to the institutions of property, which has been accumulated by the agency of an unjust and unequal system of legislation and taxation.

What will give relief? What will enable manufacturers to pay labor, and labor to earn steady and reasonable wages? Lighter burdens of taxation, more extensive markets for the joint products of labor and capital. We need for this a reduction in the cost of our production such as will enable the products of American industry to compete on terms of reasonable equality with the products of foreign nations. Can they do it to-day? Can the products of our most highly protected industries compete to-day in foreign markets with those of other nations?

I can imagine no more dangerous doctrine than in a popular government to admit that the taxing power can be used by the majority for class or for special benefits. I profess that I cannot distinguish between the claim and exercise of such a power and communism and agrarianism. It is communistic in its theory, in its principle; it will be found so in its results.

I say this earnestly, because I believe that now we have come to the point in this country when this question of public taxation has to be considered down to its very roots. We are dealing with the sovereign power of taxation, a power that has no constitutional limitation excepting that it shall be exercised only for public ends. Congress, to save this country, to uphold its institutions, can tax to the uttermost dollar the possessions of the citizens. It is unlimited in that respect. It is the wise and high discretion alone which can control the exercise of that great power. The question now is, are you ready to accept, are the American people prepared to accept, the doctrine that such a power can be used for any other than public ends and for the uses of the Government itself? It has been denied over and over again by every jurist whose name is authority in America. The Supreme Court of the United States made a late review of this principle and I will adopt their language. Mr. Justice Miller, speaking in the Supreme Court of the United States of certain rights that were beyond the control of Congress, private rights which were not to be invaded under the forms of law, said:

> It must be conceded that there are such rights in every free government beyond the control of the state. A government which recognized no such rights, which held the lives, the liberty, and the property of its citizens subject at all times to the absolute disposition and unlimited control of even the most democratic depository of power, is after all but a despotism. It is true it is a depotism of the many, of the majority if you choose to call it so, but it is none the less a despotism. It may well be doubted, if a man is to hold all that he is accustomed to call his own, all in which he has placed his happiness, and the security of which is essential to that happiness, under the unlimited dominion of others, whether it is not wiser that this power should be exercised by one man than by many.
> Of all the powers conferred upon government that of taxation is most liable to abuse. Given a purpose or object for which taxation may be lawfully used, and the extent of its exercise is in its very nature unlimited. It is true that express limitation on the amount of tax to be levied or the things to be taxed may be imposed by constitution or statute, but in most instances for which taxes are levied, as the support of government, the prosecution of war, the national defense, any limitation is unsafe. The entire resources of the people should in some instances be at the disposal of the government.
> The power to tax is, therefore, the strongest, the most pervading, of all the powers of government, reaching directly or indirectly to all classes of the people. It was said by Chief-Justice Marshall, in the case of McCulloch vs. The State of Maryland, that the power to tax is the power to destroy.
> To lay with one hand the power of the Government on the property of the citizen, and with the other to bestow it upon favored individuals to aid private enterprises and build up private fortunes, is none the less a robbery because it is done under the forms of law and is called taxation. This is not legislation. It is a decree under legislative forms.—Loan Association vs. Topeka, 20 Wallace's Reports, page 662.

Mr. President, standing now as we do upon the threshold of a discussion that must almost necessarily last for a long time, I have no idea that those who have gained, as historically I have shown how they gained, these excessive powers through the forms of tariff legislation in favor of class and individual interests, will loosen their hold willingly or quickly. I believe we are upon the verge of a severe and excited struggle of public opinion upon this subject. I have been anxious to-day, not so much to produce statistics, not so much to bring mere figures which may be questioned in this vast problem which we are discussing, but to plant myself upon a doctrine and principle that I believe is fundamental, and that is, that you are not to pervert a public power merely to promote private interest.

The Constitution of the United States, the constitution of every State in the Union, I believe of every civilized state, written or unwritten, provides that private property may be taken for public use upon just compensation being rendered therefor; but where was the converse of that principle ever admitted—that public property can be taken for private use? There is the heresy, there is the danger. Into that I do not say criminally, I do not say unpatriotically, but naturally and selfishly, I believe a favored class in this country have entered, so that to-day an unequal distribution of the burdens of taxation rests upon the American people. They have been unjust as between ourselves, and they are dangerous and deleterious even to those in whose behalf they have been laid. They are imposing to-day a strain upon our social and political fabric which should not be continued.

I would be glad to-day to go heart and hand with those of my fellow-citizens who have a share in these undue privileges in order that they should themselves, by taking part in the reform which I am satisfied ought to come and is to come, prevent it from being violent or extreme. I am not in favor of inconsiderate and hasty change; I am not in favor of abrupt and violent disturbance of established business, of tearing town and destroying property and rights of property which have been invested under the faith of existing law; but we must now take up this question in a spirit of justice. This vast country of ours is now opened for the first time to the full comprehension of its people, because it is at last at peace, each with all. There is not a corner of the Union to which the telegraph and the post-office do not carry the message; everywhere our people can come together. They can now as they never could before understand each other, and their various needs and capacities. They can see how far science and discovery have changed the relations of production. All this can be done. We should go into high council on this subject, and endeavor, when we are exercising this sovereign power of a great people, the power to tax, to tax in discretion, and take heed that it is done strictly and solely for the purposes and objects for which that power was delegated to Congress under the Federal Constitution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRILL. The question will be on the committee's amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the bill been read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been read. It will be read.

Mr. HOAR. Is it necessary to read it?

Mr. BECK. Has the bill ever been read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has to be read at some time.

Mr. HOAR. Nobody has demanded the reading now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Missouri to ask its reading.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want the bill read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest that the usual course be taken, that the formal reading be dispensed with, and that the bill be read with the amendments reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to having the bill read with the committee amendments?

Mr. BECK. I desire the bill read, and then I desire the amendments to be acted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will now be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The first amendment of the Committee on Finance is, in section 1, line 3, after the word "that," to strike out "on and after the passage of this act, except as hereinafter provided."

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a formal amendment.

The question being put, it was declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. COKE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendments to the first section are merely formal, about which there is no dispute whatever.

Mr. MORRILL. They were agreed to unanimously by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas call for the yeas and nays?

Mr. COKE. I withdraw the call.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 1, line 5, after the word "laws," to strike out "internal revenue."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 6, after the word "repealed," to insert "as hereinafter provided."

Mr. PENDLETON. I have here before me the bill (H. R. No. 5538) reported July 6, 1882; I do not see any such amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the wrong print.

Mr. BAYARD. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that there are several prints of this bill and he had better get the last one.

Mr. MORRILL. This is "July 12;" that is the last print.

Mr. BAYARD. I would rather we should each have a copy before us.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Doorkeeper has copies that he can furnish to all Senators. The amendments to the first section are merely pro forma. There is no objection to any of them.

Mr. PENDLETON. I should like to know which form of this bill we are considering? The House bill No. 5538, reported by the Finance Committee, lying on the table, was the one taken up on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MORRILL. "July 12," is the print.

Mr. PENDLETON. How did that get substituted for the other?

Mr. ALDRICH. By the vote of the Senate.

Mr. PENDLETON. By a vote of the Senate that was substituted for the one reported July 6th?

Mr. ALDRICH. By unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill was recommitted.

Mr. HARRIS. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that the bill was recommitted and afterward reported back.

Mr. PENDLETON. There are so many reports that it is hard to keep track of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms will get any additional copies that may be needed.

Mr. BECK. The reason I called for the reading of the bill at length was so that each Senator could see exactly what bill he had before him, and I was very sure that there would be just such misunderstandings as have now grown up. The bill as it came from the House was purely an internal-revenue bill, with no item of tariff taxation in it. As it was reported back by the Finance Committee, it was purely an internal-revenue bill, and was so placed upon the Calendar on the 6th day of July, and so remained, so far as the Senate knew, although the Committee on Finance were considering matter pertaining to tariff taxation until the day before yesterday, when on motion of the chairman of the Finance Committee the bill was recommitted to the committee and reported back instantly with all these items of tariff taxation in it, and ordered to be printed. I was sure, just as it has turned out, that a large number of Senators who had not heard these facts stated, had not the right bill before them so as fairly to understand what was really to be considered.

Now the bill that is up, as I understand, is the bill that was recommitted and reported back the day before yesterday with items of tariff taxation as well as internal revenue. I simply make the statement for the purpose of endeavoring to have all Senators understand, without confusion, what we are acting upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct. The pending amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 6 of section 1 it is proposed to insert the words "as hereinafter provided."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 1, to strike out all after the word "the," in line 6, to and including "two," in line 17, in these words:

Stamp tax on bank checks, drafts, orders, and vouchers; the tax on the capital and deposits of banks and bankers under section 3408 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended; the tax on the capital and deposits of national banks under section 5214 of said Revised Statutes, not including the taxes on the capital and deposits of said banks, bankers, and national banks for the six months' period ending in the case of national banks on the 30th day of June, 1882, and in the case of other banks and bankers on the 31st day of May, 1882.

And in lieu thereof to insert——

Mr. BECK. The question is on striking out those words, is it not?

Mr. SHERMAN. To strike out and insert.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow the matter proposed to be inserted to be read before he proceeds?

The PRINCIPAL LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The matter to be inserted is:

Taxes on capital and deposits of banks and bankers, except such taxes as are now due and payable; and on and after the 1st day of October, 1882, the stamp tax on bank checks, drafts, orders, and vouchers, and.

Mr. BECK. I desire to amend by inserting, in lieu of what is stricken out:

After the 1st day of January, 1883, the tax on manufactured tobacco shall be ten cents per pound.

Mr. SHERMAN. The motion to strike out and insert is a not a divisible motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But a Senator can move to amend either the part to be stricken out or the part to be inserted.

Mr. SHERMAN. Am I correct in the general proposition that a motion of that kind is not divisible?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not divisible.

Mr. SHERMAN. This committee amendment is simply a transposition of words and a change of phraseology. The Committee on Finance reduced a sentence of ten lines to a sentence of three or four lines and we thought made it clearer and better. As a matter of course, it is not the proper place to put in the tobacco tax; but if the Senator wishes to have a vote on the tobacco tax, I suggest to him as a matter of convenience that he put it in below. There is no objection to his having a vote on that question, but it ought to be inserted after the repeal of the other taxes named. This would not be a proper place for the amendment, if inserted.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I wish to make an inquiry. This I understand is an amendment of the committee, and although, as the Senator from Ohio says, it is a mere formal amendment transposing the words, still if adopted now it will prevent any amendment but that amendment until we get into the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all. The proper place for the insertion of the proposal to reduce the tobacco tax will be section 2. Section 2 relates entirely to the tobacco tax, and the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky when offered should be offered as an amendment to that section.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Suppose somebody wants to substitute for the words in this section a repeal of the tobacco tax. If the vote is taken on the committee amendment now and it is adopted by the Senate no amendment to that can be offered afterward.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator can move to strike it all out afterward; but the first section relates entirely to the tax on deposits of banks and bankers, the stamp tax on bank checks, drafts, orders, and vouchers, and the tax on matches, perfumery, medicinal preparations, &c. It relates entirely to the stamp tax. Section 2 relates to the tobacco tax.

Mr. BECK. Section 2 relates to nothing connected with the tobacco tax, as I understand, except that it lightens up the tax on a number of dealers; but that has nothing to do with the tobacco tax.

Mr. SHERMAN. But that will be the proper place for the amendment.

Mr. BECK. It mentions dealers and sales and things of that kind; but I propose, if I can, to insert, in lieu of what the committee struck out from line 10 to line 18 of section 1, the following:

After the 1st day of January, 1883, the tax on manufactured tobacco shall be ten cents per pound.

If that fails I shall endeavor to get a vote on eight cents a pound, one-half what the tax is now. I want some relief.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I gave notice a few days ago of an amendment to this bill, which I had printed, and upon which I desire the action of the Senate. It is in relation to the tobacco tax, and proposes the entire abolition of the tax on tobacco. I would prefer, if agreeable to the Senate, that the vote be taken on that proposition before any vote is taken on a mere proposition to reduce the tax, because being a more radical amendment it ought to be voted upon first. I submit the amendment at this time and ask that it be read.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1883, all laws and parts of laws imposing internal taxes upon tobacco, snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes shall be, and they are hereby, repealed; and on all original unbroken packages of tobacco, snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes held by manufacturers or dealers on the said 1st day of July, 1883, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be allowed a rebate or drawback of the full amount of the tax. And all laws and parts of laws which impose any limitation or restriction on the sale or use of leaf tobacco by the producer are hereby repealed. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this act into effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment is not in order now. The Committee on Finance moved to strike out from line 6 to line 18 of section 1 and insert other words. The Senator from Kentucky, as the Chair understands his motion, wishes to substitute what was read at his suggestion in place of what the committee move to insert.

Mr. BECK. In lieu of what is stricken out by the committee's amendment I move to insert:

That from and after the 1st day of January, 1883, the tax on manufactured tobacco shall be 10 cents per pound.

Mr. HARRIS. No vote has been taken on striking out. The committee propose to strike out.

Mr. BECK. I propose to insert in lieu of the matter stricken out the words:

That from and after the 1st day of January, 1883, the tax on manufactured tobacco shall be 10 cents per pound.

Mr. MAHONE. Before I vote upon that question I desire to say that at another place in this bill I propose to offer a similar amendment looking to the same object. It does not occur to me that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky is offered at the proper place.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is as clear as day; we are not children here. This is a mere amendment to embarrass the regular order and framing of this bill. It has that effect. The first section relates simply to the proposition to repeal certain taxes imposed by stamps and also the tax on bank deposits. It does not relate to tobacco at all. It has nothing in it about tobacco. The committee propose a simple proposition, agreed to by the Senator from Kentucky and every member of the Committee on Finance, as a substitute for the language used by the House, as a question of phraseology, a mere question of words; and it is manifest upon the face of the paper that the committee's amendment is a proper one to be inserted in lieu of the words used by the House.

If the Senator wants to make his proposition in regard to the repeal or reduction of the tobacco tax, he can do it properly in any other part of the bill, especially in the second section, which relates to the tax on dealers in tobacco. There is no objection to that being offered there.

It seems to me proper that in this bill we should proceed in such a way that we shall understand what we are voting about. I do not deny that the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky is in order; that when it is proposed by the committee to strike out certain words he may move to amend the words proposed to be stricken out by putting in something entirely incongruous, having no connection whatever with the subject-matter, which would compel the reframing of the whole section. I do not think that is the best way to do.

If the Senator will wait a few moments until these formal amendments about which there was no contest in committee shall be agreed to or disagreed to, then he can submit his proposition in regard to the whole or a partial repeal of the tax on tobacco and I am ready to vote on it, but I hope he will not embarrass the work of the committee of which he is a member by putting tobacco in a section that has no relation whatever to tobacco and which relates to an entirely different subject.

Mr. MORRILL. I call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to the third section, where his amendment would be germane and proper. It does not seem to me that it is proper at any other point.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Ohio indulges in the suggestion that adopting my amendment would embarrass the action of the committee on the bill. I have as much right to say—though he would think it very impolite if I did say—that under the bill to reduce internal-revenue taxation, when there are a hundred and twenty-odd millions of taxes produced from distilled spirits and tobacco, and you are seeking to give relief to the country and to the producers of the country, you have made the bill which is entitled "A bill to reduce internal-revenue taxation" a mere pretext in order to leave out all the real burdens, and to alleviate the burdens, if there are any now, imposed upon banks and bankers, perhaps the most favored and the least burdened of all classes of men in the country. I was voted down in committee, I admit; but my amendment is pending, and I have a right under the rules of the Senate to bring the Senate to the test of whether they do intend to reduce internal-revenue taxation, which they can do by the proposition I make, or whether they intend, merely assuming that they are going to reduce internal-revenue taxation, to give favors and benefits and privileges to an already privileged class, and ignore all that ought to be considered in regard to internal-revenue taxation.

If I am in order, as the Chair has decided that I am and the Senator from Ohio admits that I am, in moving to bring the Senate to a vote upon this amendment, then I for one will know by the votes of gentlemen whether they do intend to reduce internal-revenue taxes or whether they intend to vote down all that ought to be reduced and to reduce what ought not to be reduced except as part of a general system. I am willing to remove burdens from banks and bankers; I am willing to remove burdens anywhere as part of a system that relieves everybody; but to have them selected and picked out, that being all the House of Representatives could find that was of value and all the Committee on Finance could find that was of value until the bill was recommitted after a good while and by an order that I do not care again to allude to, is to leave out what I think is the substance of reduction of internal-revenue taxes. I desire, if I can, and the Chair says I can, to have a vote upon one of the main questions first. If this carries, I shall move to reduce the tax on distilled spirits to fifty or sixty cents a gallon; and I believe I can show that, although we shall thereby lighten a great many millions of burdens, we shall obtain more revenue at that rate than we are receiving now and with less loss than we have now. I want to relieve substantial burdens and not to give favors to a class to the exclusion of all others.

Mr. MORRILL. It is perfectly obvious that we may remove all the taxes in the world, and unless we remove the tax on tobacco and whisky we do nothing substantial, according to the idea of the Senator from Kentucky. When we reduced the tax on tobacco from twenty-four cents to sixteen cents a pound we had the pledge of that Senator and of various others that they would not ask for a further reduction upon tobacco for five years; yet now the Senator is the first one to make a proposition to reduce it over one-third.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, both sides of the Chamber profess to be in favor of reducing taxes. It becomes important to determine on what we will reduce taxes. The bill as reported from the committee, that part of it at least which we are now acting upon, proposes to relieve the capital of banks from taxation. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky proposes in lieu of that to relieve, to some extent at least, this agricultural product, tobacco, from taxation. It is a direct question presented, and a question that the Senate will for itself decide whether we will relieve bank capital from taxation or this agricultural product, tobacco.

Mr. HOAR. This is a proposition to strike out and insert, and under the rules of the Senate it is indivisible, as the Senator from Ohio said a little while ago. If it prevail, it is impossible to change the proposition inserted hereafter, because when language has once been inserted by a vote of the Senate it cannot afterward be stricken out. It is also impossible, if the motion prevail, to restore the language stricken out, because when language has once been stricken out by a vote of the Senate it cannot be reinstated by other language which is the same in form or substance. Therefore those Senators who wish, as some of the Senators on the other side say they do, notably the Senator from Kentucky, to abolish the tax on bank deposits, vote against their purpose if they vote for this amendment, because they have stricken out that language from the bill, and it cannot be put back under our rules. So those Senators who wish to reduce the tax on tobacco by making a different rate from that proposed now, or to abolish it altogether, as I understand the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] proposes, cannot do that if they vote for this amendment and it carries, because they put into the bill this language which thereafter becomes unchangeable.

It appears, then, to be clear that this hurrying in this amendment in a section where it does not belong has the parliamentary effect of compelling every gentleman who wants to abolish the bank taxes to take a position where it is impossible to do it, of compelling every gentleman who wants to abolish the tobacco tax to take a position where it is impossible for him to do it, or who wishes to get at any other rate of taxation on tobacco than the one proposed in this amendment. It is therefore obvious—I do not impute motives to the Senator from Kentucky, I only speak of results—that this is a mere amendment to make confusion and not an amendment to accomplish anything that anybody in the Senate wants.

Mr. FERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts does he understand that voting down this amendment precludes the right of any Senator to move to strike out the words here?

Mr. HOAR. Of course not.

Mr. FERRY. So I supposed.

Mr. HOAR. I addressed myself distinctly to the proposition that if a motion to strike out and insert, which, under the rules of the Senate, is indivisible, be carried as it is put, you may amend either of these things before you put that motion, if you choose, but if this is carried as it is put it prevents every Senator hereafter from abolishing the tax on bank deposits and prevents every Senator hereafter from reducing the tax on tobacco to a lower rate or abolishing it altogether.

Mr. FERRY. I take exception to the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts. The motion of the Senator from Kentucky is to strike out the words that have lines across them in the print from line 6 to line 18, inclusive, and insert a reduction of the tax on tobacco. Now, if that should be voted in it would not prevent a motion to strike out those words and insert the language of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator is too good a parliamentarian to differ from me if he understands; the difference between us arises out of a misunderstanding. If the text of the bill now contains proposition A and it is moved to strike that out and substitute proposition B, under Rule 31 of the Senate that is an indivisible motion; it is put as one motion. You can, before putting it, move to amend A, or you can before putting it move to amend B, and those motions, though made afterward, take precedence because they are amending the text; but when you reach your proposition to strike out and insert, if it carries you cannot put back into the bill afterward what was stricken out, because it has been stricken out by order of the Senate. You cannot take out of the bill what you have put in because that has been put in by order of the Senate.

Mr. FERRY. You can move to strike out A, taking the illustration of the Senator, and insert B; if that is carried, you can move to strike out A and insert C.

Mr. HOAR. What does the Senator mean? The Senator says if you carry that motion to strike out A and it is done, and A is gone, you can still make another motion to strike out A.

Mr. FERRY. I want to remind the Senator——

Mr. HOAR. Is the Senator thinking of what he is saying?

Mr. FERRY. I think I am. I will remind the Senator that a motion to strike out and insert certain words does not prevent a motion to strike out and insert other words, because the question is indivisible. Therefore if this motion is carried to strike out and insert the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, there is nothing to prevent then striking out the same words and inserting the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. When you have stricken out certain words once, can you strike them out again?

Mr. FERRY. You can by inserting other words. You cannot strike out and insert the same words, but you can strike out and insert other words.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think the Senator will hold to that proposition on reflection.

Mr. FERRY. The rule is that a motion to strike out and insert is indivisible, but that does not prevent a motion to strike out without insertion, and you can move to strike out and insert other words if one motion is lost.

Mr. HOAR. We are not talking about what happens when one is lost; we are talking about what happens when one is carried. If my friend from Michigan will give me his attention—I know his great experience and his great clearness as a parliamentarian—he has simply failed to notice what I said, failed to catch one little expression that made him argue one thing when I am holding the other. I was speaking of the effect of the adoption of the proposition when it is done, that is when A is stricken out by order of the Senate and gone out of the bill and something else is put in. When A is out by vote, you cannot move to strike it out again, because it is already gone. When B is in by vote, you cannot move to strike that out. I am speaking of what will happen if the proposition carries, not if it fails.

Mr. FERRY. I understand the Senator, and we do not differ on a motion to strike out; after that is carried of course we cannot reinstate it, but the trouble is that here is a motion to strike out and insert, and if that is carried you can then move to strike out and insert other words because they are indivisible, and therefore it is a different proposition.

Mr. HOAR. But suppose both shall carry, then what do you strike out? After you have struck out A once, after you have moved to strike out A and insert B——

Mr. FERRY. Then you can move to strike out B and insert what the committee has here.

Mr. HOAR. What have you got in then? Can you put in C?

Mr. FERRY. Certainly, by adding other words. That is clear under the rule.

Mr. HOAR. Others with the words struck out.

Mr. FERRY. By striking out and inserting other words.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator mean to maintain that if you have struck out A and inserted B you can then immediately move to strike out B and insert something else?

Mr. FERRY. It is a different question altogether.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 6739) for the relief of Lucretia R. Garfield; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before putting the question on the motion of the Senator from Delaware the Chair will lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on one of the appropriation bills.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6243) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. HALE, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 6739) for the relief of Lucretia R. Garfield was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and fifty-three minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 14, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for the regular order.

Mr. PAGE. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAGE. Is it in order for me at any time to ask to take from the Speaker's table the river and harbor bill for the purpose of having the Senate amendments printed and non-concurred in?

Mr. RANDALL. What is the gentleman's proposition?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California inquires whether it is in order to go to the Speaker's table to take up the river and harbor bill. That bill stands in the same relation as general appropriation bills under the rule.

Mr. CARLISLE. There are some of the amendments which perhaps ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. If we take the bill up and non-concur in the Senate amendments there will be no opportunity of considering them in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PAGE. Can that be done after the bill has been in conference?

Mr. CARLISLE. Not at all.

Mr. PAGE. What I want is to get the judgment of the House upon taking from the Speaker's table the river and harbor bill, to non-concur in all the Senate amendments, to have the amendments printed, and ask for a committee of conference. That is what I want.

Mr. HOOKER. I think we should not do that. It may be the pleasure of the House to concur in the amendments, or at least in some of them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that at this time what is desired by the gentleman from California would require unanimous consent.

Mr. PAGE. At what time would the proposition be in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the gentleman's request. Is there objection to taking from the Speaker's table at this time the river and harbor bill——

Objection was made.

Mr. MCCOOK. Would a point of order lie against the motion of the gentleman from California that under the rule these amendments should be considered in the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that before disposing of the Senate amendments to that bill a point of order would lie that they should receive their first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MCCOOK. Very well; if the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] insists upon his motion now, I will make that point of order.

Mr. PAGE. Then I will ask that the morning hour——

Mr. RANDALL. The amendments of the Senate will be subject to a point of order whenever called up.

Mr. PAGE. Is there any objection to having the amendments of the Senate printed?

Mr. RANDALL. None.

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman from California be in any better condition to call up the Senate amendments to the river and harbor appropriation bill if the morning hour is not dispensed with than he will be if it is dispensed with?

The SPEAKER. It would be exactly the same thing. If the morning hour is dispensed with on motion, it would be treated the same as if the hour had been used in calling committees for reports.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAGE. The rule provides that after the morning hour a motion to proceed to business on the Speaker's table shall be in order.

The SPEAKER. Should the morning hour be dispensed with on motion, then it would be after the morning hour.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the further consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6243) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read the twenty-third amendment, which was to insert the following:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be paid, out of any unexpended balance of the appropriation for incidental expenses of the Quartermaster's Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, to twenty agents of the Quartermaster's Department, employed by Major J. J. Dana, quartermaster, United States Army, the amounts deducted from their salary during the last quarter of said fiscal year, not to exceed $4,700.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to non-concur in that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The twenty fourth amendment of the Senate was to insert the following:

For the payment to Demott Bishop, (carpenter,) N. Mayer, (blacksmith,) Joseph Valentine, (engineer,) John T. Carroll, (stonemason,) and Charles Schmidt, (quarryman,) employed in the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, for balance of pay due for the fiscal years 1878 and 1879, $200 each, $1,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Unless there is a studied purpose to non-concur in every amendment of the Senate to this bill, it seems to me that the amendment last read should be concurred in, for the service has been rendered.

Mr. HISCOCK. I can only say this, that I do not know anything about this amendment. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that there is only this studied purpose: that even though the items are small, where I do not know anything about them, (and that is the case with most of these amendments,) I thought it would be wiser to non-concur, and then when we come back from the committee of conference with a report we shall be fully able to inform gentlemen in reference to them.

Mr. RANDALL. That really remits the whole of this bill with the Senate amendments to three members of the House. Now, if the service has been rendered in this case, about which the gentleman ought to know something, then we ought to concur in the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania move to concur in the Senate amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not make any motion; I merely make a suggestion.

Mr. ATKINS. Allow me to suggest this. It is very evident from what the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says that he has not given special attention to these amendments, expecting that the House would non-concur in all of them. It is well known to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the conferees on the part of the House ought to have something to play on with the conferees of the Senate, and I think it is very well to non-concur in all these amendments.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to say that I am endeavoring to follow the well-established practice of the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses which was fully indorsed by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania. I therefore move to non-concur in this amendment.

The motion to non-concur was agreed to.

The twenty-fifth amendment of the Senate was to strike out "$95,000" and insert "$115,000;" so that the clause as amended would read as follows:

For payment of amounts for arrears of pay to two and three year volunteers who served in the war of the rebellion, which may be certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, up to June 30, 1883, $115,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not see any objection to concurring in that amendment, and I move that it be concurred in.

The motion to concur was agreed to.

The twenty-sixth amendment of the Senate was to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$550,000;" so that the paragraph as amended will read as follows:

For payment of arrears of pay to officers and soldiers of the United States Army, which may be certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, up to June 30, 1883, $550,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there is no objection to concurring in that amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. No indeed.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

The twenty-seventh amendment of the Senate was to insert the following:

For payment of amounts for additional bounty under the act of July 28, 1866, which may be certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department up to June 30, 1883, $80,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to non-concur in that amendment.

The motion to non-concur was agreed to.

The twenty-eighth amendment of the Senate was to insert the following paragraph:

To pay John H. Morgan, as acting sergeant-at-arms of the committee of the Senate required to investigate the Cheyenne Indian raid of 1878, twenty days' service, $120.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to non-concur in that amendment.

The motion to non-concur was agreed to.

The twenty-ninth amendment of the Senate was to strike out "$150,000" and to insert "$75,000;" so that the paragraph as amended (naval establishment) would read as follows:

For the Bureau of Construction and Repair, $75,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no objection.

The amendment was concurred in.

The thirtieth amendment was to insert as a new paragraph the following:

For accrued mileage to naval officers and officers of the Marine Corps, under the act approved June 30, 1876, in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the United States vs. Temple, $50,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from New York give us some explanation of this?

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand that under the decision of the Supreme Court the appropriation contemplated by this amendment is necessary, and unless some gentleman objects I will move concurrence.

Mr. HOLMAN. The only reason why I think there should be non-concurrence is that in acting upon this provision the conference committee may be able to correct an evil which manifestly now exists in the law.

Mr. HISCOCK. Very well; I move non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The thirty-first, thirty-third, thirty-fourth, thirty-fifth, thirty-sixth, thirty-seventh, thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth, fortieth, forty-first, forty-second, and forty-fifth amendments were respectively read and non-concurred in.

The thirty-second, forty-third, and forty-fourth amendments were respectively read and concurred in.

The Clerk was proceeding to read the forty-sixth amendment when,

Mr. HISCOCK said: The amendments from number forty-six to number sixty-four are amendments appropriating money for Senate officers. I move that they be non-concurred in.

The amendments are to insert the following paragraphs:

SENATE.

For the payment of mileage to Senators who attended the special session of the Senate convened on the 10th day of October, 1881, by proclamation of the President, the sum of $33,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

For clerks to committees and pages, $2,500.

For pay of folders, $158.

For miscellaneous items, $24,000.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay George B. Edwards for services as clerk to the special committee appointed to investigate the affairs of the United States Soldiers' Home, from January 11, 1882, to March 7, 1882, inclusive, fifty-six days, at $6 per day, $336.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay the clerk to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate the difference between the salary received by him and the amount paid to the clerk to the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives for services as clerk to that committee for the fiscal years 1880 and 1881, such sum as may be necessary is hereby appropriated.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay W. D. Blackford the difference between the pay received by him as skilled laborer and that of the assistants in the document-room, he having performed the same service from the 1st day of December, 1881, to the 1st day of December, 1882, inclusive, $440.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay to the messengers in his office the difference between their present pay and that of a messenger of the Senate of the United States from July 1, 1881, to June 30, 1882, $144 each.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay to Joseph McGuickian the difference between his pay as special policeman in the office of the Secretary of the Senate and that of a messenger of the Senate of the United States from July 1, 1879, to June 30, 1880, $144, he having performed the duties of a messenger during that period.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay George A. Clarke, messenger to the reporters' room of the Senate, the difference between his present pay and that of a messenger of the Senate of the United States from July 1, 1881, to June 30, 1882, $240.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay George Gilleland an amount equal to the difference between his pay as laborer on the rolls of the Senate and that received by messenger in charge of the reporters' gallery, which position he was detailed to fill from December 5, 1881, to June 30, 1882, inclusive, $412.85.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay S. H. Colbath the sum of $1,258.89, the balance of salary due by law to one discharging the duties performed by him as a messenger of the Senate from April 1, 1877 to May 5, 1879.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay Thomas B. Bailey for services rendered by him as page in the Senate Chamber from November 9 to December 4, 1881, inclusive, $67.50.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay John S. Hickcox, for services as assistant in folding-room, from July 1, 1881, to June 30, 1882, inclusive, $240, this amount being the difference between the pay he receives and that of assistants in the document-room: Provided, That hereafter no officer or employé of the Senate shall receive pay for any services performed by him at any rate higher than that provided for the office or employment to which he has been regularly appointed.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay Daniel O'Neill for forty-five days' services as a watchman on the Capitol police force, $112.50.

For work on the Capitol and general repair thereof, and for fire-proofing the rooms adjoining the Hall of the old House of Representatives, $2,000.

For payment of expert architects employed under the act of June 8, 1880, for work on additional accommodations for the Library of Congress, $1,500, to be paid to the estate of the late Alexander R. Esty.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay Charles N. Richards the difference between the pay of keeper of stationery and assistant keeper of stationery of the United States Senate for the period of time between the 1st day of May, 1880, and the 1st day of November, 1881, $454.10.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I support the motion of the gentleman from New York to non-concur in these amendments; but I wish to call particular attention to the forty-seventh amendment, which appropriates $33,000 for the purpose of paying mileage of Senators at the extra session convened in October last. There is no precedent for this allowance of mileage. At no extra session of Congress since I have been a Representative in this House has one dollar of mileage ever been allowed to any of its members. By way of instruction to the committee of conference, which will no doubt be appointed on this bill, I wish this House to emphasize the declaration that the forty-seventh amendment will not be concurred in by us.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether these Senators did actually incur any expense in the way of mileage at all?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senators were called in extra session in October and remained here until the regular meeting of Congress in December, and they received their mileage for the regular session.

Mr. HISCOCK. In view of the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] I withdraw my motion to non-concur in all these amendments, and will move to concur in the forty-seventh. I do this for the purpose of obtaining an expression of opinion from the House. I say very frankly that while we may wrangle over this question for some time, I believe in the end it will result in the concession of this matter to the Senate. I wish to be perfectly frank with the House, and should I be appointed on the committee of conference I wish to go into the conference with instructions from the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I knew that the gentleman from New York would meet this question with the candor which he now exhibits. It was for this reason that I wanted an authoritative expression of opinion and purpose on the part of the House as to whether we intend to make this appropriation of $33,000. I repeat that there have been extra sessions of Congress since I have been here, and no member has ever received a dollar of mileage for any extra session which he was summoned from his home to attend.

A MEMBER. Or stationery?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Nor any allowance of stationery except once. Now, the Senate, having convened in October, remained in extra session until the opening of the regular session. Senators did not leave this capital in the interval between the extra session and the regular session. They staid here and drew their mileage—not for the extra session I grant you, but for the regular session which came immediately upon the heels of the extra session. They had never left the city.

This amendment proposes to make an innovation by appropriating $33,000 for additional mileage, although members of the House have never asserted any such claim when summoned here in extra session. I want this House to speak and to speak authoritatively to its committee of conference and tell them that they shall or shall not yield to this demand of the Senate. There is no equity in it.

Mr. PAGE. I suggest that the gentleman from Kentucky submit a motion to instruct the committee of conference not to yield on this point.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for the previous question on the motion to concur.

Mr. DUNN. I rise to a point of order. I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HISCOCK] that he asks this vote in the nature of an instruction to the committee of conference; and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] makes a similar statement. Now, under the rules is it proper for this House to instruct a conference committee? Does not such instruction destroy the freedom of the conference?

The SPEAKER. The members of the conference committee might regard themselves as instructed by the vote of the majority on this proposition. While it would not be in form an instruction, it might be so regarded by them.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask the gentleman from New York to withdraw the call for the previous question, that I may make an inquiry.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will do so.

Mr. WASHBURN. I wish to inquire whether the gentleman understands that this amendment provides for the payment of constructive mileage to Senators?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not understand that it provides for the payment of constructive mileage as we ordinarily understand constructive mileage. It is very likely the Senators, or a part of them, came here in October in obedience to a call for an extra session and remained until the regular session. That may be true; but I understand constructive mileage is where a man gets mileage in two capacities at the same time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Is not this in the nature of a "salary grab?" There is no law authorizing it.

Mr. HISCOCK. So far as that is concerned, the gentleman from Illinois is equally learned with myself. So far as I am concerned, I only desire an expression of the House on this question, and only desire to say further that while we may wrangle over it, as I have no doubt we will for days, it will result in this House yielding the point rather than the bill shall fail.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman ought not to assume any such thing on the part of this House. This House ought never to yield on this question.

Mr. HISCOCK. I demand the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask for a division of the House on the amendment; and I do this, I will say, that I may have it in the nature of instruction to the committee of conference.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let us have the yeas and nays. [Cries of "No!"]

Mr. BLACKBURN. I suggest the gentleman take the yeas and nays on it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope not.

Mr. PAGE. A rising vote will do.

Mr. RANDALL. After the announcement of the chairman of the committee we ought to have a record vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asked for a division too late. There was a decided vote and the result was announced.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand now by the action of the House that the committee of conference is never to yield to the amendment. [Cries of "Never!"]

Mr. HUBBELL. Every member will judge for himself.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I do not understand the House means any such thing. I want to file a caveat against any such inference.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was non-concurred in for the purpose of obtaining the yeas and nays. [Cries of "Too late."] It is proper we should put ourselves on record against this salary grab on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I have a right to move to reconsider. I do it to get an expression by a yea and nay vote.

The SPEAKER. How did the gentleman vote?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I voted with the majority.

Mr. COX, of New York. It does not matter how he voted, there was no record.

Mr. PAGE. Are we considering this bill in the House or in the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. We are considering it in the House.

Mr. PAGE. As in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. We are considering it in the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. On the motion to reconsider I demand the yeas and nays, and I do it for the purpose of allowing members the privilege of going on record.

Mr. HUBBELL. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That does not make the question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. On the motion to reconsider I demanded the yeas and nays, and the gentleman had no right to move to lay on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he had.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. After the demand for the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. After the demand for the yeas and nays, and before the vote was taken.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman from Michigan is avoiding the issue on the question.

Mr. HUBBELL. The gentleman from Michigan can take care of himself and needs no instruction from the gentleman from Illinois.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to reconsider was then laid on the table.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to non-concur in the balance of the amendments, under the caption of "Senate," from No. 48 to 64, inclusive.

The amendments were non-concurred in.

Amendments numbered 65 and 66 were severally read and non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 67 was read, as follows:

For newspapers and stationery for members of the House of Representatives, $4,500.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to concur in that amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope some explanation will be given as to why we should concur in this amendment. As I understand it, a regular appropriation is made for this purpose.

Mr. HISCOCK. I can only say that the estimate for this amount was presented to me by the Clerk of the House after the bill had been passed, and I looked it over and thought it right, and sent it to the Senate committee with the request that it be incorporated in the bill.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 68, to strike out "F. M. Lynn" and to insert "F. W. Lynn," was concurred in.

Amendments numbered 69, 70, and 71, as follows, were severally read and concurred in:

(69) To pay John B. Trainer, for services as messenger in the House of Representatives during the years 1877 and 1878, $267.74.

(70) To pay Frank L. Donnelly, for services as page in the House of Representatives at the extra session and regular session of the Forty-fifth Congress, $92.50.

(71) To pay C. W. Coombs, Department messenger of the House of Representatives, for services from January 10 to April 6, 1882, at $1,200 per annum, $289.77, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Amendment No. 72 was read, as follows:

(72) To pay George W. Julian expenses of contest with John S. Reid for seat in the House of Representatives, Forty-first Congress, $2,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to non-concur in that amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Has the chairman of the committee any reason for disagreeing to that amendment?

Mr. HISCOCK. Only this: if this money is paid to Mr. Julian, I am of the opinion that there is a former Representative here who stands precisely on the same footing, and should be cared for in the same way. I am in favor of applying the same rule to both.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I shall not object to the motion of the chairman of the committee, but I will say that I do believe that amount of money is due to Mr. Julian; but I am willing to let it go to the conference committee to be examined, and am thoroughly satisfied that upon an examination of the facts of the case it will be inserted in the bill by the committee of conference.

The motion to non-concur was agreed to.

Amendments Nos. 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, and 81 were severally read and non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 82 was read and concurred in.

Amendments Nos. 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, and 90 were severally read and non-concurred in.

Mr. HISCOCK. The next amendment (No. 91) is the last Senate amendment to this bill. It is a proposition to strike out section 6 of the bill, and insert a provision with reference to the payment on account of the illness and burial of the late President. I move to non-concur in the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. Do I understand this is the amendment on page 77 of the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I have an amendment to offer——

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, in order to obtain the sentiment of the House in reference to this matter I shall change my motion and move to concur in this amendment and upon that I call the previous question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That does not include the independent sixth section, which has been added by the Senate but which has not yet been read?

Mr. HISCOCK. It includes that as a part of the amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations ask for the previous question upon the Senate amendments, including the entire independent section?

Mr. HISCOCK. I have made my motion and call for the previous question with the view to seeing if we can reach some limit to the debate upon this amendment or fix some time for closing it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask my friend from New York if he does not think it fair to allow the House to use its own discretion here to fix a limit on the debate, and not attempt to do it by the previous question?

Mr. HISCOCK. What debate do you want?

Mr. BLACKBURN. There are some gentlemen who want to be heard upon this.

Mr. HISCOCK. What length of time?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would defer to the gentleman's own wishes in that respect.

Mr. HISCOCK. But I am consulting with you now as to your wishes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Say an hour.

Mr. HISCOCK. Very well, by unanimous consent, we will have an hour, with the understanding that at the end of the hour the previous question is ordered.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But the gentleman, I am sure, does not want to preclude amendments?

Mr. HISCOCK. Of course not.

Mr. HOLMAN. There should be an opportunity for offering amendments and discussing them under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let it be understood that, by unanimous consent, all debate upon the Senate amendments and amendments thereto be limited to one hour.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well.

Mr. HOLMAN. But is it also understood that these amendments are to be debated under the five-minute rule after the expiration of the hour?

Mr. BLACKBURN. That, of course, is the understanding.

Mr. PAGE. How will the time be divided?

Mr. HISCOCK. Equally between the sides.

Mr. RANDALL. It is understood that there is to be general debate for an hour, and five minutes' debate upon bona fide amendments thereafter.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is the suggestion, that the debate upon amendments shall be under the five-minute rule upon substantial amendments, but not pro forma amendments.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is after one hour's debate?

Mr. HISCOCK. After the hour.

Mr. PAGE. I shall object to fixing the time for debate until I understand how it is to be divided.

Mr. HISCOCK. It will be equally divided.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I understood the Speaker to say that there was no amendment allowable to this amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not mean to be so understood.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. Then I have an amendment to offer——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not been recognized to offer an amendment. The gentleman having the bill in charge is recognized in accordance with the rule and practice.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. But I respectfully submit as a point of order that, I having the floor and having addressed the Chair and the Chair having recognized me, the gentleman could not take me from the floor; and if it is allowable to offer the amendment I wish to offer it before the previous question is ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] did not have the floor.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will make this proposition to the House: that general debate upon the amendment be limited to one hour; that thereafter there may be debate under the five-minute rule, but no debate on pro forma amendments.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am willing to consent to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment shall be limited to one hour, to be equally divided——

Mr. RANDALL. All general debate.

Mr. REED. No; all debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's proposition is that all general debate on the pending amendment shall be limited to one hour, and that thereafter there shall be debate under the five-minute rule on substantive amendments only. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. [Mr. BLACKBURN rose.] The gentleman from New York will be first recognized.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. Who is to distribute the time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will see it is equally distributed.

Mr. POUND. I ask that the amendment be read.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is to strike out all of section 6 and insert a new section, which the Clerk will read.

Mr. McLANE. I think there is still some misunderstanding about the arrangement as to debate.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand there is to be general debate on the amendment for one hour, and thereafter there will be debate under the five-minute rule upon substantive amendments only. Now, then, Mr. Speaker, I trust that the amendments will be offered at once.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. The Chair directs the Clerk to read the amendment.

The Clerk read the ninety-first amendment of the Senate, as follows:

Strike out section 6, as follows:

"SEC. 6. That in all cases in this act where the year for the use of the appropriation made is stated, for instance, the year '1881,' it is intended to indicate the year ending June 30, 1881, and the same with any other year stated, it in all cases indicates the fiscal year. In all cases where no year is indicated it is understood that the appropriation is for the year ending June 30, 1882, for which deficiencies this act is principally intended."

And insert as a new section the following:

"SEC. 6. That a board of audit, consisting of the First and Second Comptrollers of the Treasury and the Treasurer of the United States, is hereby constituted, to whom shall be referred all claims and the determination of all allowances to be made growing out of the illness and burial of the late President, James A. Garfield; that the said board shall hear, and examine, and determine all questions arising out of said claims and proposed allowances, and shall make an award in each case for services rendered, or supplies furnished, which, when received, shall be taken in full compensation of all demand whatsoever; that said board of audit shall issue a certificate, signed by each member of said board, setting forth the amount awarded to each person, and on account of what services rendered, or supplies furnished, and shall transmit said certificate to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall cause to be paid to the several persons named therein, or their legal representatives, the amount so certified; and to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay said awards the sum of $57,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated; and of this amount not more than $35,500 in all shall be certified and paid for medical services and attendance; and in making said awards it shall be lawful for said board to make allowances to employés of the Government for extra services in amounts not exceeding three months of their current pay: Provided, That no claim shall be considered and no allowance shall be made by said board on or after January 1, 1883: And provided further, That the aggregate amount of awards made by said board shall not exceed the amount hereby appropriated: And provided further, That no claim shall be considered under this section unless the person filing the same shall file a release under seal of all claims against the representatives of the late President growing out of said illness and burial."

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand the Speaker will distribute the time. Is it the intention of the Chair that I shall take one-half of it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is willing that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] shall control one half hour, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] the other half hour.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire so far as the half hour to be controlled by me is concerned that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] shall have such portion of it as he desires.

Mr. BLACKBURN. When is it the pleasure of the chairman of the committee or of the Chair that I shall have my time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may take it now, so far as the Chair is concerned.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I say I want to deal with this question with exact candor and fairness. I do not intend to indulge in an expression that shall be harsh or unkind to any one. I do not mean to reflect in improper terms on the action of the Senate in putting this amount on the bill. But I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that it was a matter of which the Senate had no proper jurisdiction.

The House, when it met last December, organized a select committee under resolution, charged with the duty of examining into and reporting upon these claims for settlement and payment. That select committee met and reported to this House, through its chairman, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR,] on the 19th day of April last. The minority report was also filed. The chairman of the committee making the report announced on this floor that he intended to call it up at an early day for consideration and disposition. I asked him on that day, as the RECORD shows, to indicate when it would suit his pleasure to call it up. He declined to answer. From then till now, at intervals, I have been urging him to bring this matter up before the House that it might be debated.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let the gentleman answer me this question: Did he ever ask me more than twice?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I asked the gentleman twice, and I got a friend, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MORRISON,] to go to him a third time.

Mr. TAYLOR. Once you asked me to defer it; once to bring it on.

Mr. BLACKBURN. On the contrary, I never in my life asked it to be deferred one hour. I asked the gentleman myself in person that it should be called up, and I got my friend from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] to go to him the third time to tell him the floor of the House was open to him, and to ask him to bring it on.

Now, I want to know how the Senate got jurisdiction of this matter. I will not say it was impolite; I will not say it was indecorous. I do not know but I might be warranted in saying that it verges very close on the insolent when the Senate Chamber, through a Committee on Appropriations, takes charge of a matter that a select committee has been raised in the House to inquire into and has already reported upon, and when that matter has never been before the Senate at all. It is a piece of insolence upon the part of a sub-committee of the Senate. Why is it that this flank movement is attempted? Why undertake to settle this question of appropriating this money by such an indirect method as this when there lie two reports, a majority and a minority report, both upon that table, and the gentleman making that majority report has never yet afforded this House an opportunity to consider them.

The Senate has cut down the amount which was recommended by the report of the majority of the select committee of the House for physicians from eighty-odd thousand dollars to $35,500. I am opposing that Senate amendment on two grounds: first, because it is an infringement upon the dignity of this House, and it was so stated upon the floor of the Senate by a Senator from Missouri. It is not sincere or direct or manly legislation. It is an effort by surreptition to accomplish what the advocates of this amendment have never dared to ask of this House in open session.

I want to say more. I do not believe that there is a man within the sound of my voice who will claim that this Government owes a solitary dollar of this money. It a gratuity, and when put in proper shape I shall advocate it.

I declare here once for all that no man shall undertake to attribute to me any unkindly purpose either toward the dead or toward the living who are involved in this matter. If I could have believed that it was within the compass and power of surgical and medical skill to have saved the life of the late President of this country, there never was one dark day from the 2d day of July to the 19th day of September that I would not have gladly emptied the Federal Treasury to have accomplished that purpose. The relations that I held to him are known to all who served with us here. I will not even by indirection or implication appear to be unfriendly to his memory. For his greatness of brain I admired him; for his generosity of soul I loved him; for his patience in suffering and courage in death I honored him. But that is not the question before the House. The question is as to whether we will appropriate unusual sums of money to pay exorbitant fees to surgeons for the rendition of extraordinary skill.

Now, I undertake to charge, and it will not be contradicted by any member of that committee, that there never was a scintilla of proof, and there is not to-day an atom of proof before that committee that either one of the doctors in this case ever rendered any extraordinary skill in the treatment of it at all.

I go further, and say that there never was an atom of proof and is not to-day to show that either one of these doctors ever laid eyes upon the President from the 2d day of July, when he was wounded, up to the 19th day of September, when he died. The committee refused to allow us to take any testimony. I, as a member of that committee, demanded subpœnas in order to bring these doctors there and make them testify that they had at least seen the President, and those subpœnas were refused. And there is not a thing upon the earth, except newspaper rumor, to lead that committee to believe that either one of these surgeons ever crossed the threshold of the President's sick chamber.

The bill, as the Senate offers it to you, has no proof upon which to predicate this appropriation of $35,500. It constitutes a board of audit to consist of the First and Second Comptrollers of the Treasury and the Treasurer of the United States, but it does not require that board to take any testimony or evidence at all. There is no proof furnished and there is no demand in this bill that any proof ever shall be furnished.

I have my own opinion. There are two letters that lie there on your table, or should be there with the report of this committee, one from Dr. Gross, of Philadelphia, and one from Dr. Sayer, of New York, which I would like to have read. I would like for this House to hear what those two eminent surgeons have to say. They stand deservedly in the front rank of their profession either in American or foreign estimation.

As to the treatment of this case—I am no professional, but I have carefully read the testimony of the leading surgeon in this case as given in the Guiteau trial. I find that by his own sworn statement Drs. Hamilton and Agnew, men who stand deservedly high in their profession, were called to this town on the morning of the 4th of July, forty-eight hours after the shooting. I undertake to say that they made an examination at the White House which was simply superficial; that neither finger nor probe was in their presence that day inserted into that wound.

They adjourned to meet again at two o'clock—this being in the forenoon. They met at two o'clock, and the President being asleep neither doctor went into his room. They left the city and neither one of them put his foot within the District of Columbia again until the 23d day of July, according to the evidence in the trial of that case.

They came back on the 23d day of July, exactly three weeks after the shooting. They found a fractured rib and a spicula of bone which had created pus cavities that needed to be lanced and operated on. For three weeks the President had lingered in the hands of these surgeons without the slightest idea in their minds as to the nature and character of the wound, the track of the bullet, or the injury from which he suffered. Three weeks passed before the broken rib was discovered or the spicula of bone extracted.

It went on for seventy-eight days, and according to the testimony of these doctors, that wound from the day it was delivered until the day of death was never treated. They treated pus cavities, I grant you, for seventy-eight days, mistaking them for bullet wounds. But the wound of the President was never touched or handled by a single doctor in the case. The external wound had healed, and it required an autopsy to discover the bullet, and that was found by accident and found in a wash-bowl after an hour and a half had been spent in the dissection of the body.

This proposition works injustice in many directions. You cannot patch up a piece of work after this fashion, and make it legitimate or honest. If any surgeon who was in attendance upon that President deserves recognition at the hands of Congress I ask you whether you are going to exclude from such recognition the Surgeon-General of the Army and Dr. Woodward of the same service? They are not provided for in this amendment, and it will be taken and justly taken by their friends as a slap in the faces of those two gentleman if Congress shall undertake to adopt this amendment, and make moneyed compensation to the civilian doctors and refuse to recognize the services of these military surgeons.

But this proposition goes further and does worse. Above all the greedy horde of cormorants that have swarmed around this committee from the time of its organization until now, presenting bills, some of them as low as seventy-five and even fifty cents, to be audited and allowed and paid—above all the greedy horde, a soulless corporation looms up and stands alone as actuated by generous and patriotic and humane purposes. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company without thought of expense made arrangements for conveying the President from the White House to Long Branch. It laid a track from the White House to the depot and transported all his retinue of servitors to Long Branch, furnishing palace cars and taking the sides out of one of them in order to contribute to his comfort; laid a track from the depot at Long Branch to Francklyn Cottage; and later brought back the mournful cortege with all its attendants. When this committee demanded of that corporation its bill the answer was that it had none. When the committee a second time demanded the amount of the expenses charged, again the answer was that there was no charge, and that if Congress should vote a dollar to that company they would refuse to touch it, because they were but glad to contribute to the extent of their power to the comfort and restoration of this wounded man. But there is no mention of that.

Then as to the surgeon first in attendance upon the assassinated President, the surgeon who rendered service but for which you know and I know he would have died in the depot before removal, there is not a word of mention for him.

A MEMBER. Who is that?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Dr. Townshend, the health officer of this city, who according to the testimony was the first physician in attendance upon the President; and when he sank in syncope and was on the verge of death it was Dr. Townshend who rallied him; it was he who in company with Dr. Bliss went in the ambulance with the President to the White House and remained until reaction had set in, and the second day had come round before he was dismissed.

I say that if we mean to settle this matter we should settle it like men; we should come up to the question fairly and give due credit to every man who bore a helping hand in this case. Vote money if you choose, but vote it after a fashion different from that which the Senate amendment proposes. This is not the way to do it. Congress, in my judgment, has no business to resolve itself into a court of probate, suing out search-warrants and traveling this city and country over to hunt up bills of a half-dollar or $25,000 in order to settle a decedent's estate. Remit these questions to the courts, where they belong; let the claimants bring to Congress their bills, accepted and approved by the legal representatives of President Garfield's estate; and I stand here before the country to advocate the passage of a resolution that shall extend the pay of the late President to his family for one year or four years if necessary in order to pay every dollar of those expenses.

I will not by my vote allow the estate to become responsible for one dollar of these expenses; but I insist that the right way to pay them is after some sort of ascertainment. There is not a man on this floor or in the Senate Chamber to-day who knows of his own certain knowledge by any proof of any character anywhere that any one of these doctors ever saw the President during his illness. I do not know but that it might have been better for the President if they never had seen him; it certainly could not have been worse. I do not undertake to say that the wound was not a mortal one, but I do undertake to say that the wound need not have been mortal to have produced death with such medical treatment as he had. I do mean to say, doctor or no doctor, that from the foundation of the world medical science never furnished so glaring an illustration of blind blundering as in the treatment to which the late Chief Magistrate of this country was subjected. Those doctors published bulletins three times a day and sometimes oftener from the 2d day of July till the 19th of September; they are on file and of record. I dare challenge any man who lives to put his finger upon a single bulletin in which he can find a single sentence or a single word or a single syllable that ever carried an atom of truth. Never from the beginning to the end even by a lucky accident did those doctors tell the English-speaking world a solitary fact. I do not blame them; they did not know it.

I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Congress of the United States should put the seal of its approval upon professional blundering like that, and commend it to this country as entitled to its recognition. I do not care so much for the money. We waste more money than this frequently, and probably upon causes as bad but certainly no worse than this. It is not the amount of money involved so much as it is the injustice done to the medical profession of this country when you take a lot of perfectly honest, perfectly sincere men, I am willing to admit, but a lot of professional blunderers, and undertake to push them to the front rank of their profession and put the approving seal of the American Congress upon their butchery. I am opposed to that, and I do not want it done.

I want these gentlemen, every one, sent to the courts of the country, to the legal representatives of General Garfield's estate. I do not care how much these bills may aggregate. Whenever there has been a judicial settlement, whenever there has been any sort of ascertainment, whenever there has been any sort of proof offered on earth to show any service was rendered, I am ready and willing to go as far as the farthest in extending the salary of the President to cover every dollar. But I do insist if you adopt this amendment of the Senate, or if this House refuses or fails to instruct its committee of conference to insist on its being stricken out, you will not only do a great injustice to the medical profession of the land, but you will do gross injustice to men who did seek to render service, who were left out without recognition, and are not covered by this proposition.

It lacks equity, it lacks law, it lacks decency, and I protest in conclusion, as I did in the beginning, that it is an insult to this House, not for the Senate Chamber of the country, but for a subcommittee on appropriations in the Senate Chamber to take possession of a matter never discussed or mentioned on its floor and wrest it from the hands of this House when the House had a select committee for months and months, raised for that especial purpose and engaged in its consideration. There are the reports lying on that table from the 19th of last April until now. If you will take up those two reports we may be able to do something like equity in the settlement of this matter. But you cannot do it after the slip-shod fashion the Senate has employed. I denounce it all. I denounce the mode and method which have been adopted to bring it before this House as unusual, unfair, and cowardly; I denounce the claims of these doctors as frauds. They are not supported by evidence, and cannot be. Evidence has been demanded; evidence has been challenged, and the committee of this House has refused to allow it to be produced. I ask this House to instruct its committee of conference, as it did on another amendment to this bill just now, to insist on striking this amendment out and never to consent to allow it to go through unless it shall be after such fashion as will do justice to all the parties who rendered aid or gave assistance in this matter.

How many minutes of my time remain?

The SPEAKER. Seven minutes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will reserve that time for the present.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, on the 19th of April last the special committee submitted its report to this House. At that time I announced I would at as early a day as possible call the matter to the attention of the House. At the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] I stated I would not call it up except in his presence. Once afterward, when he was to visit West Point officially, he came to me and asked me to defer it for ten days. I consented to that request. After he came back from West Point he asked me if I would call it up, as he intended to go to Kentucky. I said I would if I could. I intended to do it, but found I was unable to do so, and did not. Aside from those I remember of no application he has made to me in regard to the matter. I am not certain, however, that he has the right to direct me in regard to my public duties.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I only put it in the shape of a request.

Mr. TAYLOR. I know it; but in the newspapers ostensibly representing the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky he has been reported as always urging the consideration of the bill, while I have been represented as delaying its consideration.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does not the gentleman know, if we are to be made responsible for everything that is in the newspapers, he was once reported as being ready to give up his own report and would have signed the minority report except he would never consent to sign anything the gentleman from Illinois or myself did?

Mr. TAYLOR. I was about to say, while such statements have been made, that from the time the bill was reported until now I have been anxious and more anxious than any other man in this House to have the House consider that bill, not because I want the bill to pass as it is, but because I want this House to settle this matter as it ought to settle it. I shall be content with such action as the House will take in regard to the bill, and I am as willing to agree with the gentleman from Kentucky or the gentleman from Illinois on this or any other subject as I am with any other gentleman on this floor.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would ask a little deliberation in this case. What is the question involved in this matter aside from the mode in which the business is proposed to be done? There is no bill presented by any physician as a claim against the Government. There is no bill presented by any physician against anybody. The public have an idea that the physicians have been presenting exorbitant claims. They have made no application for any allowance or pay for services. Some of the surgeons have conferred with the committee or its members, mostly in writing but very limitedly, and only when requested to do so. They present no bills for their services. There are none existing to-day against the Government, but this case and this only is presented: the people of this country seem to think that the estate of President Garfield ought not to be encumbered with this indebtedness; that the expenses of his illness ought not to be paid by the estate, and this House has authorized a special committee to ascertain the persons to whom payment should be made and the amount to be paid.

Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of very little consequence to me as to how much money is to be paid to Dr. Bliss or Dr. Agnew or the other eminent surgeons who rendered distinguished services in behalf of the wounded President, and I am sure that I do not care personally whether they get a farthing or not, nor do I desire them to be paid too much for their services; but the object and purpose of the action of the House is to save the estate from the payment of money and the family from annoyance. I fear the tendency is to ignore this object, to disregard the interest of the estate, and to forget the feelings of the family.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, this, as I say, is the material question with which we have to deal. Now, how shall we meet it and how best determine it? I do not feel inclined, for my part, to inquire whether professional skill had been used by these physicians or not. That is not a matter with which I am to deal. I do not know how I could find out. Do you? I do not know how much the services were worth, even if I could find out what the services were; but what I do find here is—and this is the only fact with which we have to deal—that four or five of the leading surgeons of the United States, confessedly equal to any in their profession in this country, were for about eighty long days, day and night, wrestling with death to prevent the President from going from us. What matters it that they did all that human skill could do to save him? They failed, not from want of devotion and effort, but because he was past remedy. Their services were valuable. They did not tell the committee how much they were worth. Nobody living can state it. No physician can give us any information upon that point. But they do insist and they have reason to think that they are entitled to be paid in something commensurate with the responsibility which rested upon them. They believe that their payments should be commensurate with their reputation and commensurate with the long months of untiring care and devotion which they gave, at the sacrifice of their other professional prospects and opportunities, to the care of the wounded man. They never have submitted that claim to our arbitration. They never have agreed to take our award. They hold it as a claim against the estate and we cannot dispute it, nor can we settle it by simply giving them what we may assume to be right, but must determine it by what they are willing to take, or they will be left to pursue their own remedy. They know, Mr. Speaker, that this estate of President Garfield will pay every bill that they present for that service. What utter nonsense to ask that these bills be pursued in the probate courts of the State of Ohio.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. TAYLOR. Proceed, sir.

Mr. ATKINS. Does the gentleman from Ohio believe that there is any court in America which would allow these extravagant charges against an estate?

Mr. TAYLOR. The "gentleman from Ohio" believes that there is no court in America that would ever receive these claims, because the family, as I believe, will refuse litigation. That is the point I am making. Do you suppose that the representatives of the estate of President Garfield would allow these claims or this question to go before the courts for litigation, or that anything which the estate was able to pay to the utmost farthing would ever be admitted to the courts?

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Does the gentleman know that in the State of Ohio, his own State, all bills against the estates of decedents must be filed in the court of probate, and cannot be allowed except in the ordinary course of legal procedure.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, sir; I do not know anything of the kind.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then how can you charge anything against the estate or charge the minors of the estate with any balances——

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, the gentleman has asked me a question and I have answered it, and I cannot yield any further. Claims in that State are presented to the administrator and he is absolute in his power to dispose of them either by accepting or rejecting them, subject to any suit against him for mal-administration.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well; let him pass upon these.

Mr. TAYLOR. I say, and the gentleman should have understood me, that from my stand-point I wish to save this estate. And I would like to have this House to understand that Mrs. Garfield will never, as I think, litigate the bill of the physicians who attended her husband during his mortal illness. That is the question which presses upon me; not the amount that these men deserve or will receive.

One word more, Mr. Speaker, and I have done. Remember these claims never have been submitted to this committee. And I say, and I speak what I do know, that this Senate proposition will not receive the assent of the parties who hold these claims. It will be no settlement. It will be putting ourselves in a ridiculous attitude before the world—the Congress of the United States bickering over the bills of the surgeons for services faithfully rendered during eighty days, and then when passed the surgeons refusing it and the estate paying the bills that are presented. Any gentleman who wishes to put himself in that attitude can do so. I do not.

It has been stated to this House that in the committee a demand was made for witnesses in regard to what the services were worth. That is so. On the last day of meeting, after the report had been once adopted and reconsidered—on the last day of meeting that demand was first made. But, as I understand, it could not have been acceded to at any time, for this reason: we were not authorized to send for books, witnesses, or papers. And, further, the opinions of surgeons in regard to this matter were of as little consequence as anything you can regard or think of. It was not a satisfactory method of investigating such a question. It was bringing us to no satisfactory conclusion.

And now, without saying or knowing what ought to be paid or with what amount these gentlemen will be satisfied, I do say with my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] that this manner proposed by the Senate of undertaking to adjust the matter is not only absurd, but is unjust and I think decidedly improper. It is only a partial adjustment and it ought to be adjusted by this House. I care nothing for any supposed disrespect to the committee. I am exceedingly anxious to have this matter disposed of in any proper way; but I do think that this House ought to take action upon what its committee has done, and let the House dispose of the matter as it ought to be disposed of.

I do not intend to say that the bill as reported should be passed. I never approved the bill, though I reported it by direction of the committee without formal dissent, as was well understood; but what I did desire and still do is that the House take the matter up and so amend the bill, if amendment is necessary, as will make it fair and just, believing its action will be wise and right and that whatever the result arrived at in that manner it would be received by the parties in interest as entirely satisfactory, while even a larger amount tendered in the spirit and with the irregularity of this amendment would not be regarded with favor by them.

Mr. Speaker, there is no trouble in having the bill we have reported considered this session in both Houses, where we will be entirely free to act with knowledge. It is an entire mistake for the gentleman to say that this committee acted without information. We did not send for any witnesses, but very many of the leading surgeons of the country aided with their opinions so far as opinions could aid in such a case.

I think the amendment of the Senate should not be agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. As a member of the committee appointed by the Speaker of this House to consider the claims growing out of the illness of our late President I desire simply to say that the committee did all they could to get what information could be had before them, in order that they might intelligently make their report to this House. After the committee had met and organized it directed the chairman of the committee, Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, to correspond with all the physicians, and others having claims against the estate, and ask them to submit their bills to the committee. This the attending physicians refused to do.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman let me ask him this question?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Was there ever submitted to the committee from the date of its organization until now any proof in this world, either verbally or in writing, affidavit, deposition, verbal statement, bill, or letter, or was there ever an appearance entered by anybody to show there was a dollar due to any one of these physicians?

Mr. PAGE. I state, as the gentleman from Ohio has stated, that these men never claimed to have any demand against this Government.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And they have presented no bills?

Mr. PAGE. They have no bills to present. They have no demands at all upon the Government for any expenses incurred during the illness of our late President.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now, my friend will answer another question. Was there any evidence in the world given to any member of the committee that any one of them ever saw the President from the 2d of July until he died?

Mr. PAGE. Oh, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky is not serious in asking such a question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I think I am.

Mr. PAGE. We all of us know and the gentleman from Kentucky knows that these men were in attendance.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does not every member of the House know it as well as the committee?

Mr. PAGE. Supposing that is true; nobody was there to dispute that. We never thought of subpœnaing witnesses to show that these men were in attendance there. But we do know this fact: the committee was in possession of the fact that Dr. Bliss was in attendance upon the President for seventy-nine days. We also know the number of visits that Dr. Agnew and Dr. Hamilton made to the President.

Mr. SPRINGER. How many were there?

Mr. PAGE. I do not remember now. It is the duty of the gentleman to know; he was on the committee, and if he does not know it is his own fault.

Mr. SPRINGER. There was no proof of that fact.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Not a bit.

Mr. PAGE. It was stated before the committee, and was known to the members of the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Who stated it?

Mr. PAGE. It was stated that Drs. Agnew and Hamilton visited the President so often.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Who stated it.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was stated by Dr. Bliss in writing, and certified to by Drs. Agnew and Hamilton in writing as correct, and that was read to the committee.

Mr. O'NEILL. I desire to say here, if the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] will permit me, that Surgeons Hamilton and Agnew, the one or the other of them, were here attending the President each day from the day they were first called.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Oh, no.

Mr O'NEILL. From the 4th day of July to the day the President died.

Mr. HISCOCK. Who has the time now; and whose time is being used in this discussion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] has the floor.

Mr. O'NEILL. I am simply giving some information to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] states what is correct. It was stated by Dr. Bliss in writing to the committee that either Dr. Agnew or Dr. Hamilton was with the President all the time as one of the consulting physicians.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I know the gentleman does not want to do injustice to those physicians. I tell him on my honor and conscience that Dr. Bliss swore in the Guiteau trial that Drs. Hamilton and Agnew came to this city on the 4th day of July; that they left this city that night and neither one of them was ever in the District of Columbia again until the 23d day of July.

Mr. PAGE. I do not want to discuss questions of fact as they appeared before the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is what Dr. Bliss testified to.

Mr. PAGE. I will not detain the House by any lengthy statement. The facts were all before our committee; the physicians refused to render any bill or to ask for any compensation from Congress. They refused to put any price on their services, and all the committee had to do was to come to the best understanding we could as to the amount and value of the services rendered.

Of course the members of the committee differed very widely as to the amount which should be paid to different individuals and the manner in which it should be paid. But they did come to a conclusion, and the majority report has been presented by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR,] and is now waiting action by this House.

I desire to say in this connection that in my judgment it ill becomes this Congress to discuss for any length of time the question as to whether the Government of the United States shall assume the responsibility of relieving the family and estate of the late President by paying this money. If you pay any money you must pay a sum sufficient, so that the physicians and those who were in attendance will accept it, or they will not have anything to do with it but will present their bills against the estate.

The question now before the American Congress for determination is, what will they give, and how much will they give? Will you give a sum sufficient so that the physicians will agree to accept it?

I leave to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] all the honor and glory there may be in his attack on these physicians; he may have it all. I do not desire to reply to him. They need no defense from me. I will only ask permission to print with my remarks some of the letters from the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, as well as extracts of indorsements from leading physicians in foreign countries to sustain the position I now take. Also the letter of Dr. Bliss to the chairman of the committee in response to a resolution of the House dated February 2, 1882:

[Copied from the National Republican of July 4, 1882.]

DR. BLISS'S AUTHORITY.

The following correspondence will show exactly the authority under which Dr. Bliss went into the case, and that he assumed charge of the treatment of the late President at the express desire of Mrs. Garfield. The letters of Secretary Lincoln and ex-Secretary Hunt distinctly set forth the facts, and their clear and concise statements are sufficient to refute the misrepresentations and attacks made by Senator Vest and others on July 3, 1882:

1329 F STREET NORTHWEST,
Washington, D. C., May 22, 1882.

DEAR SIR: As one of the medical advisers of the late President Garfield I take the liberty of addressing you briefly upon a matter of both public and private interest. Certain statements made by parties of presumable credence in a portion of the press of the country are calculated to inspire some minds with doubt as to whether the wishes of General Garfield and his wife, together with those of their nearest friends, were respected and followed in the selection of professional gentlemen who had charge of the case during his illness.

May I ask you to furnish me with an outline of the circumstances connected with this part of the case as far as they came under your own observation? By so doing you will aid in setting at rest some minor yet vexatious questions, the discussion of which tends to pervert and even to distort the history of a labor which was by all regarded as a patriotic duty.

You will thus add greatly to the esteem in which you are held by myself and my associate counsel.

Yours, very truly,

D. W. BLISS.

Hon. ROBERT T. LINCOLN, Washington, D. C.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 23, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I have your note of yesterday, asking me to furnish you with an outline of the circumstances, so far as they came under my observation, connected with the selection of the professional gentlemen who attended upon President Garfield during his illness. In compliance with your request I give you such a statement, made as brief as possible.

When the President was shot my carriage was at the door of the railway station, and within a few seconds thereafter I hurried it off to bring you, the utmost speed being, of course, enjoined upon the driver. You were very soon at the station, the President having been, I think, borne to an upper room before your arrival. I do not recall that anything which happened led me to think that any physician was present before your arrival; certainly there was none whom I knew. You at once took charge of the President, acting with other surgeons who came quickly to his help. Then followed his removal to the White House, and the anxious hours of the afternoon, during which a large number of surgeons (some of whom I knew personally, some only by name, and some being entirely unknown to me) were in attendance. During the night, as I recall it, this attendance had largely ceased, and when I left the house at dawn I was informed by you that there would probably be no information to give as to the outlook until after a general consultation, which had been appointed for eight o'clock in the morning.

I returned about nine o'clock, and not long, perhaps an hour after that, all the members of the Cabinet being assembled in one of the chambers, the large number of medical gentlemen in attendance upon the President became the subject of conversation, all assenting to the necessity of the number being reduced at once, for obvious reasons. It appeared in the conversation that the only surgeon known to those present in the room to have been summoned in the case was yourself, and also that there were persons among the many anxious friends of the President who would not have probably chosen you as one of his medical attendants. It was therefore thought best to have the suggestion made to Mrs. Garfield of the propriety of her selecting one or more surgeons to attend the President, and of the consequent cessation of the attendance of the others. For the purpose of communicating with her General Swaim and Colonel Rockwell were sent for to the room and requested to make the suggestion I have made. Inasmuch as you were, as far as I know, the only surgeon summoned directly by any one near the President, personally or officially, and had been in consequence up to then in principal charge during what had come to seem a very long time, I felt it my duty to request General Swaim and Colonel Rockwell at the same time to say to Mrs. Garfield that if the attendance of Doctor Bliss was not agreeable for any reason, and it was thought best to have him retire, any embarrassment should be felt in effecting this, I trusted that, as I had summoned him, a mere suggestion might be made to me, and that I would see that his attendance ceased without embarrassment to any one.

I am now uncertain whether these two gentlemen went on their mission and returned, or whether, without going, they were able to give us the information, which they at once did, that Dr. Bliss had been selected to take charge of the case with such assistance as he should desire.

In pursuance of further conversation among all the gentlemen in the room, based on this information, it was thought best that the Secretary of the Navy and myself should go to Dr. Bliss and tender him the assistance of the Surgeon-General of the Navy and Surgeon-General of the Army, with any other assistance which he might ask and which it was in our power to afford him. The Secretary of the Navy and myself at once went to your room and tendered you this assistance. You replied that you would much like to have the aid and counsel of the Surgeon-General of the Army; that for reasons which you mentioned you would not ask the assistance of the Surgeon-General of the Navy; that further, for reasons which you gave us, you would like the assistance of Surgeon Woodward, of the Army, and of Dr. Reyburn, of this city. I therefore formally advised the Surgeon-General of the Army that you were the surgeon in charge of the case, and directed him to place himself in attendance with you, and to instruct Surgeon Woodward of the Army also to place himself in attendance. I do not now recall the exact circumstances which resulted in the summoning of Dr. Agnew and Dr. Hamilton, but I remember that we were all anxious for their presence, so that nothing should possibly be left undone which might contribute to the recovery of the President.

I believe the foregoing answers your inquiry as completely as I am able to do from my own knowledge.

Very truly, yours,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN.

Dr. D. W. BLISS.

WASHINGTON, May 24, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I was at the railroad station in this city when President Garfield was shot. I saw him in less than a minute afterward. He lay on the floor of the reception-room. In a few minutes he was removed to a room upstairs. I then saw Secretary Lincoln. He told me he had sent immediately after the shot for you. I expressed my gratification at his having done so, for I had perfect confidence in your skill, judgment, and experience. Soon after this I saw you approach the mattress where the President was lying. You uncovered the wound, inserted a small probe into it, spoke with the patient, gave him brandy, and exercised entire control of the case. Afterward other surgeons came about the bed; but you were in entire and unchallenged control of the case. You remained so all that day, and the friends of the President and the other surgeons acquiesced in your doing so.

Next morning something was said among the Cabinet about the presence of so many persons in and about the sick-room. It was deemed expedient to reduce the number of surgeons. This conclusion was communicated to Mrs. Garfield, and she was requested, as I understood, to state whether your direction and supervision of the case was undesirable to her. I was told she said that this arrangement was entirely in accordance with her wishes. You were then requested to select such surgical assistance as you desired. You mentioned the gentlemen who acted with you afterward. The Secretary of War and myself conferred with members of the Cabinet after this interview, and we proposed that the Surgeons-General of the Army and Navy should be added to your corps. The suggestion was approved by our colleagues. It was then communicated to you. You were pleased with the recommendation of Surgeon-General Barnes, but you objected to the Surgeon-General of the Navy on personal grounds. I did not urge him further on you.

Afterward the members of the Cabinet suggested that Drs. Agnew and Hamilton be added to the corps as consulting surgeons. This proposition was conveyed to Mrs. Garfield and met her approval. It was afterward submitted to you, and you approved it promptly and cheerfully.

These facts occurred when things were fresh and your control of the case was assured and exercised in the presence of the President's family and friends, with the knowledge of the world and with their acquiescence.

It is an insult to the truth to set up at this date the pretense that you in any manner intruded into the control of the case. It is at least a mean reward for your skillful, unceasing, and heroic devotion to your distinguished patient.

I am, dear sir, with the highest consideration, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. HUNT.

Dr. D. W. BLISS, Washington.

[British Medical Journal, July 9, 1881.]

The distinguished patient could not be under better surgical care than is to be found in Washington. The vast experience gained during the war of the rebellion in the United States has diffused an immense amount of knowledge concerning gunshot wounds and their treatment among Army surgeons in that country, and several of the most eminent among them are connected with the case, &c.

[British Medical Journal, August 20, 1881.]

The surgical treatment has been severely criticised in some quarters, very unfairly as it seems to us, inasmuch as the attacks upon the course pursued have been made without an opportunity of personal observation of the case, and without making any allowance for the difficulties in which the surgeons in attendance upon it have been placed. * * * So far as the facts which have been successively announced in the official bulletins are concerned, nothing has been mentioned which has been inconsistent with what might be expected to take place in any case of a bullet wound in which a bone has been struck and the bullet so diverted that it has been caused to pursue a deep and tortuous course in muscular tissues and to pass out of reach of observation or detection by the surgeons.

After analyizing the statements of Drs. Hammond, Sims, Ashurst, and Hodgen in the North American Review for December, 1881, we fully concur with Dr. Sims in the previous assertion made by him that the wound of the late President was as certainly mortal as the wound of President Lincoln. The difference was only one of time.

The New York Medical Journal, November, 1881, says, regarding English criticisms on the long and painful conflict of surgery with the injury dealt to our lost President: "Truly the modern art of surgery in all its fullness—not the mere individual capabilities of the little knot of men who stood as its representatives—was brought to bear upon this case."

* * * * * * * *

"Also, if any of Dr. Bliss's questions as appended by him to his account of the case in the Medical Record of October 8, 1881, can be so answered as to show that in any respect the conduct of the case could, without the light thrown upon it by the autopsy, have been better carried out, we trust that such answer will be brought forward speedily and boldly. We have nothing but praise for the surgeons as regards their actual management of the case."

[Boston Medical and Surgical Journal, September 8, 1881.]

A lenient judgment must, however, be invoked for the physicians who have borne the task of an attendance the trying nature of which can be easily understood, and we ought to congratulate ourselves that no change has taken place in the personnel of our President's medical staff.

[Same journal, September 22, 1881.]

No one, we believe, is in a position to say that the wound was not from the beginning of a necessarily fatal character or that other measures than those taken could have averted the result we all deplore.

* * * * * * *

It is plain, and is generally acknowledged, that no good and much harm would have resulted from any serious attempt to extract the ball, even had it been possible to determine its exact situation.

[Medical Record, August 13, 1881.]

In the light of the facts that are furnished the public it is easy to understand the extreme caution of the surgeons as to probing the wound.

[Same journal, August 6, 1881.]

We take pleasure in affirming again that the treatment of the President is thus far beyond criticism, and it is fair to suppose that so long as the present medical staff remains in attendance nothing will be left undone to insure the comfort, safety, and recovery of the illustrious patient.

[Same journal, August 20, 1881.]

As might have been expected, the management of this case has been open to much criticism by the secular press. It is to the credit of the profession, and especially of the gentlemen in charge of the case, that so little can be said concerning what might have been done and what was not done. Despite the journalistic prescribers in some of our leading dailies, the people have continued to maintain a confidence in the attending and consulting surgeons which is as gratifying as it is necessary. There seems to be, justly, but one sentiment entertained both by the profession and the public regarding the judicious manner in which this case has been treated from the beginning.

It is, we believe, the general verdict of the profession that the late President received all the aid which medical science, intelligently applied, could furnish. Looking back upon the case, even with the light of the autopsy before us, it is impossible for any one to say that any different mode of treatment would have saved the President; and, furthermore, we may claim that medical art prolonged for months a life which might otherwise have ended in a few days or weeks. We believe that this can be truthfully said, and that it will be echoed and indorsed by the medical profession.

No means of more thorough exploration of the wound could have been safely employed.

Drs. Sims, Ashurst, and Hodgen, in the North American Review, "frankly acknowledged that the wound was essentially fatal; that the error of diagnosis was, under the circumstances, unavoidable; that the treatment was in accordance with accepted principles in surgery, and that in reality nothing more could have been done to prolong the life of the lamented sufferer."

[Cincinnati Lancet and Clinic, September 24, 1881.]

No blame can be attached to the surgeons in attendance upon the President for abstaining from instrumental interference with a view of locating the ball. * * * What skill and science could do was done. The surgeons in attendance merit the gratitude of our people alone; there is nothing deserving of reproach.

[Pacific Medical and Surgical Journal, San Francisco.]

He was in able hands, well known to the profession in Europe as well as in America.

[Canada Lancet, September 1, 1881.]

Everything is being done for the patient that can be done. Every confidence is very justly reposed in his medical advisers, and, come what may, there can be no cause for blame attached to them.

[From Medical News and Abstract, Philadelphia, October, 1881.]

The publication in the current number of the American Journal of the Medical Science of the official report of the autopsy upon the body of President Garfield will, we trust, while satisfying the legitimate curiosity of the profession and of the laity, at the same time effectually and permanently quiet the unfriendly criticism of the surgical treatment of the case in which part of the daily press has so freely indulged and from which, we regret to observe, some medical journals, without full knowledge of the case, have not thought proper to abstain.

The discoveries of the autopsy, taken in conjunction with what is known of the clinical history, will at once make apparent to the profession the good common sense, admirable conservatism, and sound surgical treatment and judgment which have characterized the management of the case from first to last, and, although the non-medical mind may be slower to comprehend the questions at issue, it will not be long before the same conviction forces itself upon the people at large.

We know beyond the possibility of a doubt that no human skill could have averted the fatal result; but we find, moreover, that even in the searching light of the careful and thorough post-mortem examination it is difficult, if not impossible, to suggest any modification of the treatment, even in minor points, which would have made it better adapted to the exigencies of the case.

* * * * * * * *

From this general consideration of the history of the case, viewed in the light thrown upon it by the details of the autopsy, we may safely conclude—

First. That the treatment at the time of the reception of the injury, immediately subsequent to it, was that rendered proper by the condition of collapse which then existed.

Second. That on reaction taking place, a sufficient, thorough, and careful examination was made with the finger and the probe.

Third. That when the consulting surgeons were called in and found that this had been done, they very properly, and in accordance with well-established and universally-recognized rules of surgery, refrained from repeating that examination.

Fourth. That even if these rules had been disregarded and such examination had been made, it would have determined nothing of practical importance as regards the subsequent treatment.

Fifth. That wherever pus accumulations had taken place, they were properly opened by free incisions made at the most dependent portions.

Sixth. That these incisions drained not only the course of the abscess but communicated freely with that portion of the spine which had been penetrated, and, therefore, with the track of the ball; and the completeness of the drainage is shown by the absence of pus accumulations either in the locality traversed by the ball or in the iliac or lumbar regions.

Seventh. That the damage done to the cancellated tissue of the lumbar vertebra was sufficient in itself to explain the septic state of the system, which in time, and independent of the ball, (which proves to have become harmless,) would have destroyed the life of the patient.

[College and Clinical Record, Philadelphia, October, 1881.]

The careful methods of exploration pursued by the attending surgeons will commend themselves to the attention of the profession and the public as fully commensurate with the importance of this celebrated case. The study of the autopsy will bring to the mind of the most skeptical a thorough and persuasive vindication of his careful, conscientious, and indefatigable medical attendance—a vindication that was not deemed necessary by those who had honestly placed their faith in their skill and discretion during the many weeks of suffering through which their distinguished patient so uncomplainingly struggled.

[Medical Press and Circular, (London,) October, 1881.]

The general verdict of the profession is that the President received all the aid which medical science, intelligently applied, could furnish. It is held that, looking back upon the case by the light of the autopsy, it is impossible for any one to say that a different line of treatment than that pursued would have saved the President's life, and further, that medical art prolonged the life which otherwise might have ended in a few days.

[Virginia Medical Monthly, September, 1881.]

The President's condition is a subject of such deep interest to every American that we are not surprised at the eagerness so generally manifested by the medical press to speculate as to the result. We have seen many ridiculous descriptions and surmises on the subject put in print by doctors, who in this instance manifest no greater intelligence than the laity as to the nature of the wound. By such a course the profession lays itself liable to have further odious epithets and taunts thrown at it. Not one of the six distinguished medical men now in attendance upon the President has yet been able to trace the track of the ball or to locate its present position with satisfactory definiteness to warrant them in announcing an opinion, although these gentlemen are the only surgeons who have ever had an opportunity of examining the wound. * * * Whatever may be the result now, even if fatal, we would feel resigned as we would live in the belief that everything had been done for the restoration of the President that human skill could accomplish.

Annales D'Hygiene Publique et de Médicin Legale, Paris, Février 1882, contains an account of the post-mortem and remarks "that treatment was fully justified by the results."

Philadelphia Medical Times, October 8, 1880, in its London letter, says: "When, however, the suppuration of the gland ceased to form new points of pus, then again hope became buoyant that his magnificent constitution, his high courage, judicious nursing, and consummate medical skill, all combined, would bring him through ultimately. * * * The medical management of the case has never been hostilely criticised, in my hearing at least—nothing, but whatever occurs the public of Great Britain will ever feel that in a terrible emergency the medical profession has acquitted itself with distinguished skill, and has deserved well of all."

[Extracts from a review of some of the more important surgical problems of President Garfield's case, by J. William White, M. D., demonstrator of surgery and lecturer on operative surgery in the University of Pennsylvania, Surgeon to the Philadelphia Hospital, Fellow of the American Surgical Association, &c. Philadelphia, 1882.]

Its motive is to be found in the fact that numerous articles which have from time to time appeared in both the medical and the lay press seem to indicate that in the minds of many intelligent people, within and without the profession, there is still much misconception regarding several important points in the case of the late President Garfield.

In bringing together the facts which I shall mention I have especially consulted the official report, published in the American Journal of the Medical Sciences for October, 1881, and have carefully perused the excellent articles of Drs. Ashhurst, Hunt, Sims, Hodgen, Shrady, Weise, Kumar, Schüssler, Figueria, and others, as well as the editorials and criticisms of the medical press of this and foreign countries.

The points which it seems worth while to consider, on account both of their general surgical interest and of the misconception alluded to, and which may be taken up seriatim, are as follows:

1. Did the relative positions of the patient and assassin at the time of the shooting afford any indication of the course of the ball as revealed at the autopsy?

2. Was it probable that at any time the ball could have been detected or located by the use of probes; and if so, should such an endeavor have been made?

3. Did the subjective symptoms indicate anything more serious than nerve injury or spinal concussion; or, in other words, did they furnish reliable material for diagnosis?

4. Was the subsequent treatment in any way whatever hurtful or defective, or could it have been modified with advantage, if the exact character of the injury had been known?

5. What was the immediate cause of death?

6. Was the wound necessarily a mortal one?

"Occasionally,[1] when the trunks of nerves are directly injured, (not divided,) but violently pushed aside,) the wound will be accompanied with intense pain, but none will be experienced locally; the pain which is felt will be referred far away from the tract of the projectile to some distant part to which the nerves are distributed. * * * Less rare cases are those in which pain is not only felt in the wounded limb but reflex pain is also felt in the opposite uninjured limb," &c.

"Nerve injuries may also cause pain which, owing to inexplicable reflex transfers in the centers, may be felt in remote tissues outside of the region which is tributary to the wounded nerve."[2]

"In Case IV, Hutchinson's Series, page 313, the median and ulnar nerves being injured, there was pain in the unhurt hand. Pirogoff, page 384, has similar instance from injury to the right brachial plexus. In two cases wounds of one leg seemed to the patient to be truly in the other."[3]

So far as I know, all the diagnoses of spinal injury which were claimed to have been made in different parts of the country first appeared after the publication of the autopsy, and this is rather to the credit of their authors than otherwise, as certainly no one having merely those symptoms submitted to him in a similar case to-day would be justified in asserting the existence of a fractured vertebra or a grave injury of the cord.

Professor Kumar, of Vienna, after a lengthy criticism of the case in the light of the clinical history and the autopsy, wrote:[4]

"Evidences of paralysis in the region of the lower extremities were never noticeable; the only symptoms of disturbance of nerve function were those already mentioned—hyperæsthesia of the skin of the feet and ankles and of the right half of the scrotum—which at the end of the first week had entirely disappeared. From all these symptoms no conclusion as to the course of the ball could be drawn."

Lidell[1] says:

"The general symptoms of gunshot fracture of the spine are not essentially different from those which are present in other forms of that injury, and they are referable mainly to paralysis, either partial or complete, (but commonly the latter,) of all the muscular apparatus supplied with spinal nerves given off at or below the seat of fracture."

Hamilton[2] wrote in 1865:

"In a few cases a ball has been known to pass through the side of the body of one of the vertebræ, leaving a round hole or a lateral furrow, without coming in contact with the spinal marrow or the blood-vessels. It is not probable that we shall be able to diagnosticate such a case clearly during the life of a patient, and if we were able to do so we do not see what benefit could be derived from any surgical operation."

Legouest[3] says:

"It is always very difficult, if not impossible, to be assured that the bodies of the vertebræ are injured when there are no symptoms of a lesion of the spinal marrow. The surgeon in most of these cases is constrained to leave them to the efforts of nature, watching for the appearance of those accidents which may accompany the presence of foreign bodies, and which are aggravated in such cases by the importance of the organs in the neighborhood of the wound."

Agnew[4] says of fractures of the vertebræ:

"Except in fractures of the spinous processes, where the damaged part is entirely accessible to the touch, we cannot affirm the existence of such an injury with any degree of certainty. The presence of certain symptoms following a sufficient cause furnishes ground for supposing the existence of a fracture, and yet these may all be present without any injury of the kind. The prominent symptom in paralysis."

Authorities to this effect might be multiplied indefinitely, but the question hardly admits of dispute.

If, then, a study of the positions of the wounded man and his assailant was without diagnostic value, if probing to any extent was strongly contraindicated and could not possibly have resulted in anything but harm, and if the subjective symptoms were not distinctive or were positively misleading, it is evident that the materials for definitely determining the character of the injury were altogether wanting. Much has been written in regard to "mistaken diagnosis," even by gentlemen who intended to defend the management of the case; but it has always seemed to me that this did not fairly state the situation. An "absence of diagnosis" on account of a total lack of necessary evidence would have more nearly expressed it, and every surgeon of experience knows how frequently and how unavoidably this occurs.

The laceration of the cancellated structure of the first lumbar vertebra doubtless contributed largely to the production of the septicæmic condition, which was in no wise due to lack of proper or sufficient drainage. More favorable circumstances for its production than existed in the comminuted and softened cancellous tissue, with its open venous sinuses, bathed in ichorous pus, could hardly be imagined.[5]

The fact that drainage was thorough and complete, and that no portion of the unfavorable symptoms was due to neglect in this respect, was fully established by the absence of purulent collections either along the track of the ball or in the passage caused by the burrowing of the pus. There was no time previous to the first operation at which the accumulated pus did not pass out of the original wound, but its exit was favored by gravitation after the two operations which brought the external openings on a lower level, and enabled them not only to drain completely the iliac and lumbar regions but also to carry away any discharge that may have come from the fractured vertebra.

Professor Max Schüller, of Berlin, after a careful review of all these points, wrote:[6]

"Even if a suspicion of the wound of the spine had arisen, the problem of treatment, which the attending surgeons were endeavoring with the greatest skill to solve, would have undergone no alteration."

The treatment was cautious, but thorough, and no indication was overlooked or disregarded. Wherever collections of pus took place, they were properly opened by free incisions made at the most dependent portions. These incisions drained not only the course of the abscess but communicated freely with that portion of the spine which had been penetrated, and, therefore, with the track of the ball, and the completeness of the drainage was shown by the absence of pus accumulations either in the locality traversed by the ball or in the iliac or lumbar regions. The treatment also as regards the other complications, the parotitis, bronchitis, dyspepsia, &c., was in the most marked degree careful and judicious, and, indeed, may be said to have prolonged the life of the patient for many weeks.

As to the immediate cause of death, it was, as has been stated, the rupture of an aneurism of the splenic artery. The ball itself had become encysted, and had given rise to no damage whatever, after the moment of its lodgment, but the injury to the cancellated tissue of the lumbar vertebra was sufficient to explain all the septicæmic symptoms, and in time would doubtless of itself have proved fatal.

In attempting to reply to the sixth and last question, as to whether or not the wound was necessarily a mortal one, much time and labor has been spent in a review of all the authorities bearing upon the subject. It may be said at once that in the whole range of surgical literature, civil and military, no similar case, followed by recovery, has ever been recorded, and this statement is made with the full knowledge that it has been asserted that such recoveries are not infrequent. In some instances these erroneous assertions may have been due to neglect properly to classify the cases, which are often very improperly reported. Of course it is well known that fractures of the vertebral processes are not especially fatal injuries; and that a large proportion of them recover. Many of these are recorded under the general head of fractures of vertebræ, but evidently have no bearing upon the case in question.

What Lidell[7] does say is that—

"In the British army, during the Crimean war, there occurred ten cases of gunshot wounds with fracture of vertebræ, but without lesion of the spinal cord, of which six died and four recovered so far as to be invalided; there also occurred twenty-two cases of gunshot wounds with fractures of the vertebræ and lesion of the spinal cord, all of which died."

On the very same page Dr. Lidell, who is truly described as one of the most experienced of our military surgeons, says:

"Leaving out of the calculation such fractures as involve the spinous process alone, the writer has never seen a case of gunshot fracture of a vertebra get well, and he might add that he has never seen life prolonged for a month after the infliction of that injury."

"Attempts at extraction are dangerous and often useless," and that "only when paralysis exists will it be necessary or prudent even to make incisions, or to search in the simplest manner for the foreign body or for spiculæ of bone."

"In the Surgeon-General's Report No. 6 one hundred and eighty-seven examples of gunshot fracture of the vertebræ are reported, of which one hundred and eighty died, and of seven which recovered not one was a fracture of the body of a vertebra."[1]

Demme[2] says:

"Extensive injuries or lodgment of balls in vertebræ or in the cord give rise either to death or incurable paralysis."

Gross[3] says:

"Gunshot wounds of the vertebræ, with lesion of the spinal cord, are nearly always, if not invariably, fatal. Of twenty-two cases of this kind in the English army, in the Crimea, not one recovered. Even when the bones alone are affected the danger is generally very imminent, most of the patients thus affected dying in a short time."

No instance of complete recovery after the latter injury was met with, and in those here alluded to the actual seat of the fracture was in every case doubtful. No perforating wound with recovery is mentioned at all.

Space will not permit a more extended consideration of this subject, but I may add that, in addition to the authorities already quoted, the excellent writings of Alcock, Ballinger, Bell, Bird, Chevalier, Clowes, Cole, Demme, Guthrie, Hall, Hutchinson, Longmore, Ranby, Thompson, and Williamson have been consulted, and with a similar result.

No undoubted instance of recovery after a compound comminuted or perforating gunshot fracture of the body of a vertebra has ever been recorded.

The explanation of this fact is apparent to every one who carefully considers the nature of such an injury, the grave and manifold dangers which encompass it, and the almost infinitesimal chance which the patient has, if he escape one or two of them, of avoiding them all.

In support of the foregoing statements, both as to the necessary fatality of the wound and as to the absolute correctness of the treatment in the President's case, it would be easy to adduce almost unlimited confirmatory evidence. The leading medical journals of the world have strongly and unequivocally upheld these views, and, indeed, it may be said that they have been maintained by every writer who has discussed the subject and who is entitled, by special study or experience, to speak with authority.

I shall confine myself now, however, to quoting the testimony of three eminent members of the profession in this country:

"Looking at the whole case from beginning to end, I do not see that the treatment could have been altered in any way to the advantage of the illustrious patient; and nothing was done that should have been omitted, and nothing was left undone that could possibly have been of benefit."[4]

"The President's surgeons did all that men could do; all that the present state of science would permit; and all that could have been done even if they had at first ascertained the course and direction of the ball. Our whole medical literature does not contain a single well-authenticated case of recovery from such a wound. * * * He had no, the least chance of recovery under any circumstances or any treatment."[5]

"In reviewing the history of the case of President Garfield I can find no reason for adverse criticism of any part of the management."[6]

In conclusion, it may be asserted that, after careful consideration and thorough search through the records of this and similar cases, and after the opportunity of deliberate comparison thus afforded, the following facts appear to be incontrovertible:

1. It was never possible at any time or by any method to ascertain certain, definitely, and safely the precise character and extent of the President's wound.

2. Any attempt in this direction further than was made by the attending surgeons would in all probability have resulted fatally at once, and their steadfast resistance to extraordinary influence in favor of operative interference entitles them to great credit.

3. The treatment, which was directed to meeting the indications as they arose, was in every respect that which it would have been necessary to adopt had it been possible fully to determine the exact nature of his injuries.

4. Life was prolonged for an unusually protracted period by the careful and skillful attention which the distinguished patient received.

5. Death resulted from the secondary effects of the wound upon structures far beyond the reach of surgical interference.

6. No undoubted instance of recovery from such a wound is to be found recorded in surgical literature.

EDITORIAL—THE TREATMENT OF THE LATE PRESIDENT'S WOUND.

In the Wien Medicin Wochen No. 47, 1881, Professor Max Schüller, after giving a complete history of the late President's case, concludes as follows:

"Taking into consideration all the circumstances connected with this gunshot wound, it is evident that the determination of the direction taken by the missile by probing would have been extremely difficult, and, if it had been possible, would have been accompanied by great danger to the patient. It is probable that the track of the bullet through the muscular tissue it traversed was so irregular, and the tissue itself so torn by the projectile fired at so close range, that an immediate attempt to follow in the direction of the ball would have been futile. Among the symptoms which presented themselves immediately after the receipt of the injury, only the pain and disturbance of sensibility in the lower extremities gave an indication of the true course of the bullet.

"This disturbance of sensibility in both lower extremities would scarcely have occurred without a lesion of the cord (either by extravasation and pressure upon the dura or a direct injury of a light grade of the substance of the cord) above the point of origin of the nerves distributed to these members. If, however, the supposition has been entertained that the vertebral column was wounded, the question of indication for treatment would not have been different from that instituted by the attending surgeons.

"To prevent sepsis in gunshot injuries and to bring to a successful issue such a wound as that received by President Garfield, is one of the most difficult achievements, and cannot always be accomplished, even with the most careful and assiduous application of antiseptic surgery."

Dr. Schüller has fallen into the error of supposing that nervous sensation or pains can always be traced to some specific lesion of the nervous system; while nothing is better established than that such sensations are often wholly unreliable as a means of exact diagnosis. The literature of nerve injuries is replete with examples which illustrate the truth of this statement. Lesions of the ganglionic system, where there is no lesion of the nerves of common sensation or of motion, often cause reflex pains and paralysis in one or both extremities or in other parts of the body. Ordinary colic, or distention of the stomach by gas, may cause pains in various parts of the body; and if the disturbance or lesion of the ganglionic nerve is persistent, (as it would be in case of its being traversed by a ball,) the reflex pains would necessarily be persistent. There was no positive evidence, therefore, furnished by the pains, first in the right foot and then in the left, that they were not caused by such an injury, and especially since these pains only lasted a short time.

It is true, also, as shown by Mitchell, that an injury of the spinal nerve is not always expressed by pains in that part of the body which corresponds to its distribution. The author relates the case of a man who, being wounded by a ball in his right thigh felt pain only in the left thigh; and in another case cited by him an injury of the right sciatic nerve caused paralysis of the right arm and only paresis of the right thigh. But in a matter so well known to medical men it is unnecessary to cite examples. We do not deny that the rule is otherwise, so far as lesions of nerves of common sensation are concerned, but the exceptions are so frequent as, in total absence of other evidence but a temporary, symmetrical pain in the lower extremities, to justify the inferences made by the surgeons in the case of the late President.

It is certain also that in case it were to have been necessarily inferred from the pains in the feet that the spine had been injured, it could not indicate whether it was simply a concussion, the ball having glanced off in some other direction, or an actual penetration of the spine, the ball remaining imbedded in that structure, or a complete perforation, the ball being lodged at some point remote from the spine. It would determine, in short, nothing of any practical importance. As Dr. Schuller justly says, it would not have changed the indications of treatment, or, to use his exact language, "the treatment would not have been different from that instituted by the attendants."

While we were writing, the British Medical Journal for December 27, 1881, came to hand, and we find in it a very full expression of opinion on this subject by its editor. He thinks that during the first twenty-four or forty-eight hours after the receipt of the injury some further exploration might properly have been made, but it is evident from his statements that he was not well informed as to the extent of the explorations which were actually made by Drs. Wales, Bliss, and Woodward. He does not doubt that the splenic artery was injured, nor does he think that any exploration, however thoroughly made, could have averted the fatal result; and in this conclusion he declares himself in accord with the opinions of Drs. Sims, Ashurst, and Hodgen, as expressed in their several papers published in the December number of the North American Review.

"When, therefore," says the editor of the aforementioned journal, "the injury came in the form of a severe gunshot fracture of two ribs, and the perforation of the vertebral column, not to mention the other accompanying lesions, the chances of escape became infinitesimal that the wound might be strictly regarded as a fatal one. No particular mode of surgical treatment, no amount of skilled nursing and attention to hold out a reasonable hope of being able to avert the fatal result. Professional skill, devotion, and extreme watchfulness might prolong life, as we believe they did to its utmost tether in the President's case, but either in the form of blood-poisoning, or, if not in that, in the form of exhaustion, or in some other manifestation of the kind the fatal end was sure to follow. We have expressed regret that the early exploration of the wound was not more complete, in the belief that the diagnosis and prognosis would have been rendered clearer had it been, and that some of the passing complications which ensued might probably have been evaded; but it never occurred to us, when once the true nature and extent of the lesions were fully exposed at the examination after death, that the exploration could have exerted such an influence as to stop the final result."

As the editor of the British Medical Journal alludes to the matter of placing the patient in the same position in which he was when the ball was received before proceeding to probe, but naively remarks that, owing to the shock this may not have been possible in the President's case, we take the liberty of suggesting to him that this rule, given in the writings of certain surgical authors, was never intended to apply to anything but muscular wounds, and especially wounds of the extremities, in which a restoration of posture does occasionally cause a restoration of the channel made by the ball, and which would otherwise be obliterated by the action of the muscles as sliding valves; but even in these cases it is seldom, as all Army surgeons know, of any value. No surgeon of experience, of reputation, nor who has ever given the subject a moment of thought, has ever advised this to be done in the case of a gunshot wound of the belly or any of the large cavities, for the reason that it could be of no possible use—the channel through the viscera could not thus be restored. This is especially true in case the ball has entered the abdomen. The intestines, especially after being wounded, are in constant motion; and to think of restoring the channel of the ball by this method is simply puerile, and its mention is unworthy a medical student.

If the ball had passed through the liver, whose position is changed by every degree of inflection of the body, the difficulties would be the same. There are other reasons, also, why surgeons have never taught that, in case of an abdominal wound, such as that suffered by the President, the patient should be put again upon his feet; namely, first, that if the intestines have been perforated the effect of this would be to hasten and make certain the escape of their contents into the peritoneal cavity, and thus vastly increase the danger of a fatal result; second, there may be, for aught we can know, a concealed hemorrhage, which would be necessarily increased by such a change of position; and, third, that the patient is almost invariably suffering under such extreme prostration from the shock that to maintain him in an erect position until the probing was completed and the ball extracted would be simply impossible or promptly fatal.

Surgeons have therefore always enjoined perfect rest in the horizontal posture from the first moment after the accident, and they are not likely hereafter to teach any other doctrine, or to disturb the viscera with probes after belly wounds, in any position of the body. No one has yet followed these absurd and dangerous suggestions, or if he has he has taken good care to conceal his results.

The London Lancet for September 24, 1881, concludes a somewhat lengthy review of the President's case as follows: "The fact that life had been so long preserved is the best evidence in favor of the surgeons."

We wish to add to these rather desultory remarks a word or two more in reference to the question of the practicability of introducing probes or drainage tubes into the track of the wound.

It is a matter of fact, capable of the easiest demonstration, that the course of the ball was not straight. These are the known facts denied by no one. The ball struck the eleventh rib about three inches from its anterior extremity; then the twelfth rib near its posterior extremity; then the fibro-cartilage between the last dorsal and first lumbar vertebra, near the root of the transverse process, from which point it passed forward and downward, emerging from the front of the first lumbar vertebra only a little to the left of the center; and here was again deflected to the left, until it became lodged under and below the pancreas, two or three inches to the left of the spine. In this course it had suffered, as any one may demonstrate on the skeleton, four marked deflections; first, on the eleventh rib; second, on the twelfth rib; third, as it entered the spine; fourth, as it emerged from the spine. Such being the actual fact, to have carried a probe or drainage tube through its channel would have been impossible.

But admitting that the channel had been straight, every surgeon knows that such channels in the cavity of the belly do not remain open for the convenience of the surgeon, and, as we have already stated, they cannot be re-established. It is, to our mind, evidence of the lack of knowledge and experience in surgery for any man to say that he could carry a probe safely among the vital tissues to the depth of seven or ten inches; and (as in the President's case it must have been carried) behind the kidney, between the liver and colon, or behind both to the spine, and through the spine to the seat of the ball.

Mr. Garfield had a very broad chest, and it is quite probable that the distance of the ball as found in a straight line was twelve inches. Whoever talks of cutting or probing for the ball or of satisfactorily draining it through drainage tubes seems to us to talk nonsense; and we are not surprised therefore that the almost unanimous expression of the medical profession at home and abroad is that the surgeons pursued the only course which presented any chance of saving or of prolonging the life of the patient.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 2, 1882.

SIR: Attention having been called to the expressed wish of your committee as set forth in the resolution requesting of those persons whose services to the late President Garfield are to come before you for consideration an estimate of the value of those services, I have the honor to state that, after a full conference with the medical gentlemen associated with me in attendance upon the President, I am requested by them to express their earnest desire to meet the wishes of the honorable committee, while yet, as a matter of delicacy, they beg to be relieved from presenting bills to Congress for services rendered.

It is believed that it would be more satisfactory to the committee, to Congress, and to the American people to present to your committee a statement of the services rendered in their endeavor to promote the comfort and preserve the life of the President, leaving the matter of compensation to your committee, than to present an itemized bill.

This opinion is one of most earnest conviction, in view of the fact that the physicians have no claim against the United States and that the action of Congress in the matter of compensation for their services is a recognition that they were rendered to the President of the United States, and not simply to the man James A. Garfield.

My permanent counsel consisted of Surgeon-General J. K. Barnes, United States Army, Surgeon J. J. Woodward, United States Army, and Dr. Robert Reyburn, all of Washington, District of Columbia.

It is proper to state that all these gentleman gave daily personal attention to the President, and Drs. Woodward and Reyburn alternated night service, one of them being immediately with me each night until September 17, 1881.

After the President arrived at Elberon, at his request the number of physicians attending upon him was reduced, and these gentlemen retired from the case. They were, however, called to Elberon immediately after the death of the President to assist in conducting the autopsy.

The distinguished counsel from Philadelphia and New York City, Drs. D. Hayes Agnew and Frank H. Hamilton, were summoned to Washington on the night of July 3, 1881, and arrived the following morning, remaining in consultation during that day. They were again summoned July 23, and from that date gave alternate personal service of from three to four days each until the death of the President.

It is perhaps unnecessary for me to state that all the physicians in attendance during the periods above named virtually gave their entire time and attention to the case of the President, and I am glad to be able to say that the whole history of surgery shows no such striking instance of harmonious and self-sacrificing devotion to the care and comfort of a patient as was displayed by the medical gentlemen in consultation with me.

As surgeon in charge of the case, I was for eighty consecutive days constantly on duty, from the time the President was wounded until his death. This service included day and night attendance, which required the abandonment of my private practice, and so seriously impaired my health as to prevent me from resuming my full professional duties until about the 1st of January, 1882. Dr. D. S. Lamb, of Washington, accomplished as an anatomist and pathologist, was selected to perform the autopsy and called to Elberon for that purpose. The skillful manner in which he performed this delicate service fully justified the selection made.

I desire in this connection to pay a just tribute to the untiring and devoted services of those who performed the immediate duty of nursing the President during his illness, namely, General Swaim, Colonel Rockwell, Dr. Boynton, Mrs. Dr. Edson, Mr. O. C. Rockwell, and Steward William T. Crump, whose health was seriously, and it is believed permanently, impaired by his continuous and exhausting duties.

Last, but not least, I desire to specially mention the faithful services of President Garfield's family servant, Daniel Scroggs, (colored.)

Therefore the compensation for services rendered in the case of the lamented Garfield, which so keenly touched the sympathy of all and engaged their anxious solicitude, is respectfully submitted to your deliberate judgment.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. W. BLISS.

Hon. E. B. TAYLOR,
Chairman of the Committee for Auditing Claims for Services and Expenses Growing out of the Illness and Burial of the late President of the United States, James A. Garfield.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HISCOCK. What time is there left?

The SPEAKER. There are left seven minutes on either side.

Mr. O'NEILL. I simply want to state two reasons why I will not vote to concur in this amendment of the Senate. In the first place, it was designed by the special committee appointed by this House to ascertain what amount should be paid by the Government for the expenses attending the sickness and death of the late President of the United States to give a vote of thanks, or to make a complimentary notice in the bill of two or three physicians who came to the depot almost at the moment of the assassination of the President. Two of them were Dr. Smith Townshend, the distinguished health officer of Washington, and Dr. C. B. Purvis, who is in charge of the Freedmen's Hospital, both of them of very extended reputation as physicians and surgeons. I do not see any such thing in the bill reported by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR,] who is chairman of the special committee, and it is not in the amendment of the Senate to the deficiency bill, and if we vote concurrence justice cannot be done these eminent practitioners.

The special committee agreed unanimously to give a vote of thanks, or to give a very complimentary notice, to Dr. Townshend and Dr. Purvis, who providentially were near the depot at the time of the assassination, and whose treatment of the case then and there brought about the reaction in the condition of the wounded President. Unless this House non-concurs, or instructs the committee of conference which will probably be appointed, we can get no such complimentary notice placed in this amendment of the Senate. And then, in passing, let me ask whether, under this proposition, Surgeon-General Barnes, United States Army, and Surgeon Woodward, United States Army, can have consideration for their constant attendance as surgeons upon the President? We had better non-concur.

There is one other thing: after the death of the President there was another physician of the city of Washington who rendered very great service to science throughout the country and the world in conducting the autopsy upon the dead President at Elberon. I refer to Dr. D. S. Lamb, acting assistant surgeon United States Army. Should the House adopt this proposition of the Senate there is, in my opinion, no way in which he could be properly noticed for what he did, and no compensation could be given him under the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I indorse every word that the gentleman says about Dr. Lamb. His services ought to be recognized. But is not the gentleman mistaken in the statement that Dr. Purvis was the first physician in attendance upon the wounded President?

Mr. O'NEILL. Dr. Townshend and Dr. Purvis were there very early, almost at the same early period, Dr. Townshend coming first and prescribing, and then soon having the aid of Dr. Purvis.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Dr. Townshend, the health officer of this District.

Mr. O'NEILL. I say that Dr. Townshend and Dr. Purvis were first there, and they brought about the reaction in the condition of the President. But Dr. Lamb has been also overlooked; and his name and theirs should in some way be incorporated in this proposition, if we do not non-concur.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I say so too. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has seven minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. HISCOCK. How much time for debate is left?

The SPEAKER. Seven minutes.

Mr. TUCKER. I understood we were to go on then under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is on substantive amendments only.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] to close the debate.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I entered a motion to concur in the Senate amendment, because I believed the trial of the claims should be taken from Congress. I recognize as a fact that no physician or surgeon has presented a claim against the United States; I assume that the committee charged with this investigation called on the physicians, surgeons, and attendants for claims and that none were presented.

I recognize the truth of the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] in all of its breadth, but it simply proves the physicians and surgeons preferred to present their claims against the estate of the deceased, as they had a perfect right to do; at least they have not surrendered them to the jurisdiction of Congress.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the question, and the only question for Congress is, whether it will provide a forum for the trial of these claims to which the physicians, surgeons, and attendants are willing to go. I believe the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] has to some extent indicated the course Mrs. Garfield will take with reference to the claims. He says the claims against the estate of the late President when presented will be paid.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will say to the gentleman from New York I did not intend to state that. What I did say was, if these physicians would accept the amount proposed by the Senate amendment, and would present their claims against the estate, in my opinion when so presented they would be paid.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have not the least idea in the world the estate of the late President would go into court to contest these claims. I believe most if not all the physicians and surgeons are men eminent in their profession and entitled to compensation for the professional services they rendered to the deceased President. The question, then, is whether we will turn them over to the estate of the late President or, having buried him in great sorrow, we will relieve that estate from the expense of medical attendance. For myself, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of payment of the expenses by the Government. I believe this nation should forever indemnify the estate of the late President and indemnify the widow and children of the late President against a single cent of expense attending his sickness and confinement after he received his mortal wound. Believing this, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the Senate amendment. It seems to provide a fair forum to which the claimants doubtless will be willing to go, and where their claims may be fairly, honestly, and equitably adjudicated. I am in favor of the American Congress making a sufficient appropriation to pay the claims when adjudicated; and the proposed amendment no doubt appropriates a sufficient sum for that purpose.

But, sir, I am in favor of removing from this arena the trial of these claims. I am opposed to their discussion here on their merits. Is the country to have served up to it the scene of a member of Congress on one side or the other, I care not which, discussing the merits of the physicians and their practice—discussing their treatment of the dead President? Is it a sightly thing for the country to witness? Is it a proper business for us to be employed in?

Possibly the sum named in the amendment will be insufficient. Most likely the surgeons will accept it. The Senate have sent the amendment to us, and if we adopt it we will at least know what is demanded by the claimants. I hope the amendment of the Senate or something substantially like it will be adopted. I now call for a vote.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is there any more time left for discussion?

The SPEAKER. The time for discussion is exhausted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand it is for debate under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. McLANE. I understand this is the time to concur in the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is putting the only question before the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to strike out "$57,000" and insert "$67,000." Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York, in the course of his remarks, admits the possibility this may not terminate this question. I have had the idea the House of Representatives was the proper body to inaugurate a settlement of this question. Mr. Garfield served in this body and not in the Senate. He won his honors and national fame here. This is the popular branch of the Government and as the representatives of the people we propose to come in here and, as an act of favor, to appropriate a sum of money to meet the expenses of the sickness and burial of the late President Garfield. This House has inaugurated a method to arrive at a determination. It was appointed by the Speaker. As I understand it, that committee has made a report. I very much prefer to see this Senate amendment voted down and let the House act of itself originating and inaugurating a method or bill by which this payment shall be made.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have this conviction and feeling that this act of the Government is far more appropriate for the House of Representatives to originate than for the Senate by way of an amendment to a House bill. If the House by a separate act originating here pronounces its conviction as to this settlement, it is the conviction of the people that we represent; and as a representative branch of the Government I insist that this settlement ought to be made here. The very remark of the gentleman from New York that possibly this quite liberal allowance fixed here by way of a settlement will not be final, and that it may not be an end of it, is all that I want by way of argument. If it is less by $1 than will be demanded let us reject the Senate amendment and determine for ourselves how much is right. We ought, out of respect to the memory of the dead President, so dear and tender to us all, so loved by us all, to put an end to this controversy in a manner both dignified and in harmony with the sentiment of the people whom we represent. But I do not like a settlement that is brought in here by a Senate amendment. Let the House of Representatives say to the Senate what the representatives of the people think ought to be a just and honorable and magnanimous settlement of this question; and when it is once settled, Mr. Speaker, let the very settlement of it be a monument of the nation, a lasting monument to the memory of the great and respected dead.

Mr. McLANE. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota; not that I have any special objections to it, but so far as the amount appropriated is concerned I prefer to take the sum fixed by the Senate and provide in some other manner for the compensation of some of the physicians who attended the late President, which I think merits the consideration of the committee, and thus dispose of the matter. The amount of money may or may not be just what it ought to be; but there are two physicians who were attendants at the bedside of the late President who have been omitted in part, if not altogether, from any consideration in this settlement; they have been omitted, comparatively speaking. I refer now to the two surgeons in the Army. There is either no provision at all for their payment or a very insufficient provision. If the three months' extra pay referred to be understood as a compensation sufficient for the service rendered by Surgeon Woodward and Surgeon-General Barnes, I may be permitted to say that I regard it as utterly insufficient, and I would suggest to this committee that before we dispose of this altogether, and when the question is now before the House, to permit some provision to be made for these two Army surgeons, neither of whom has presented or ever will naturally present a bill.

Surgeon-General Barnes, as the committee well knows, was called to the attendance of the President by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of State. So also was Surgeon Woodward, though not in the same formal manner that General Barnes was called. But these two gentlemen did serve with the civilian physicians by this order or request, and they should receive compensation for their services. Having served, Mr. Speaker, at command or invitation or request, why not, while you are paying the civil surgeons an honorable and liberal compensation—and in my judgment no compensation is honorable that is not liberal—why not give these two surgeons some recognition? I will suggest a manner in which it may be done which will probably meet the wishes of many gentlemen upon the floor; and I will cite an instance where a similar thing has been done. Take for instance the precedent of General Ord, who was retired as a brigadier-general at the age of sixty-two, but afterward by a resolution of Congress was placed one grade higher on the retired list as a recognition of his honorable services to the country. Why not now allow Surgeon-General Barnes, who was retired as a brigadier-general, to be rated as a retired major-general, and Surgeon Woodward, a brevet colonel, to be rated as a brevet colonel and retired on that pay. All brevet officers in the Army in the history of the country for honorable services have been allowed pay according to their brevet rank. Let Surgeon Woodward now draw pay at the grade of his brevet rank and Surgeon-General Barnes be retired as a major-general, and if you take him at sixty-four years of age and let him receive this compensation up to the average length of life the difference between his pay as a retired major-general and that he is now receiving as brigadier-general will never exceed the pay of any of the civil surgeons under the proposition which has been made to pay them in this House.

The House owes this, I think, to itself; and if it desires to come up to its own dignity and magnanimity and meet the occasion in that spirit which a great national question should call forth, it will not fail to pay to the civil surgeons sufficient and honorable pay such as they would receive from a civilian dying in a condition able to compensate them for their services; and also to allow the military surgeons who attended upon the late President some recognition and benefit for their services such as they are entitled to. These gentlemen did a public service, and if this proposition is adopted it will be simply giving to them what we have always given to military men who have served the country with honor and distinction; and at the proper time I shall move such an amendment to this proposition as will carry out the objects which I have thus hurriedly stated to the House.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out "$67,500" and inserting "$75,000."

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. At the proper time I will move to strike out of the clause the following words:

And of this amount not more than $35,500 in all shall be certified and paid for medical services and attendance.

I regret exceedingly that the discussion of this question has been brought before this body. I think that of all places in the world the Congress of the United States is the last place to settle claims against an estate. I am in favor of this provision. I am in favor of concurring with the Senate amendment when it is properly amended. I happen to know that the discussion of this question in this public way is exceedingly unpleasant and offensive to the widow of the late President and that she has said to her friends she would much prefer paying these claims herself rather than have them bandied about in this public way.

I see no reason why this should not be acceded to. This board which it is proposed to appoint to audit these accounts are men well known in the community and they are known to be competent to adjust those claims. If $75,000 be allowed without any condition I have no doubt they will settle the claims upon the estate within that amount and settle them in a manner satisfactory to the claimants.

As a matter of fact these physicians did all that was possible to do under the circumstances. They may not have acted as physicians outside who knew nothing about this case would have done; and they may have perhaps failed to meet the views and expectations of certain gentlemen. But they are distinguished in their profession. There is no man of ordinary intelligence but would be willing to trust his life in the hands of Dr. Agnew or Dr. Hamilton, to say nothing of the distinguished physicians of the city of Washington. They have made no claims against the estate; they have made no claims against the Government; and we do not know what they would be satisfied with. But from the best information I can obtain I have reason to believe anything that is awarded them by a proper board they will accept without making any further claim on anybody, that they will receipt in full, and be perfectly satisfied. They have acted wisely and discreetly and said nothing, although they have been severely criticised in the press and by private parties; under all the circumstances they are entitled to consideration. And I therefore trust this provision will be concurred in by the House, as it remits to a competent board an adjustment of these claims against the estate, takes them out of public discussion, and will eventually result in their final settlement.

Mr. TUCKER. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. I shall vote against the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] to concur in the amendment of the Senate principally for the reasons that have been so well stated by my friend from Maryland on my right, [Mr. MCLANE.] I think sir, if Congress is going to do justice to those who rendered service at the bedside of the late President of the United States that justice should be rendered to all who participated in that service. The surgeons in civil life have been provided for by this amendment of the Senate—whether sufficiently or not I should prefer that a committee of conference between the two Houses be appointed to decide. But they have left out and omitted entirely the services of Surgeon-General Barnes and of Surgeon Woodward.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have to say this: it so happened I was in the city of Washington, opposite the depot, at the time of the fatal accident to the President; and I know that the then Secretary of State, Mr. Blaine, sent for Surgeon-General Barnes immediately on the shooting of the President; and I happen to know that during the whole period up to the time the President went to Elberon there was no man who attended upon him with more zeal and with more earnestness than General Barnes.

It is not according to the etiquette nor according to the delicacy of the relations which these gentlemen occupied toward the President that they should prefer any pecuniary claim; and the committee that was appointed by this House to consider this question had provided for some honorary notice of Surgeon Barnes and of Surgeon Woodward, which has been entirely omitted in the amendment of the Senate. I think that should be provided for; and the suggestion of my friend from Maryland [Mr. MCLANE] meets entirely my concurrence. I had prepared an amendment to that effect, but I withhold the amendment in the hope that the House will non-concur in the amendment of the Senate that the whole matter may go to a committee of conference, and that justice may be done to all parties. And my friend from Maryland mentions to me that he concurs with me in that view.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will my friend from Virginia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Is it not a fact that the President of the United States is ex officio the Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the United States?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCMILLIN. And was it not the duty of every medical officer of the Government, in the employment of the Government, to give what attention he could to him?

Mr. TUCKER. It was not an official duty, I will answer the gentleman; but it was a service these gentlemen very generously and freely gave to the President.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I think these gentlemen were at the time in the pay and employment of the Government.

Mr. TUCKER. Undoubtedly they were; but one of them was a Surgeon-General in the pay and the employment of the Government to attend to the duties in his office, and not to attend professionally on all the officers of the Government, members of Congress included.

Mr. CANNON. What is the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia? Is it to compensate the Surgeon-General?

Mr. TUCKER. Not to compensate him, but to notice his honorable service in the Army, which has lasted over forty years, through three wars in which the Government has been engaged. He has been Surgeon-General for eighteen years, and has honorably discharged the duties of the office. And I think notice should be taken of his services by advancing him to the grade of major-general on the retired list; which would be not only an ample recognition, but one that would be deserved.

Mr. CANNON. For what reason?

Mr. TUCKER. On account of his honorable services in the Army.

Mr. CANNON. But why couple that measure with this which is to pay a class of bills that neither the House nor the Senate nor the country want disputed? Why try to tie that thing on to this?

Mr. TUCKER. Well, sir, as I understand, the gentleman would have raised a point of order on the amendment of the Senate if it had been offered in the House; and as it was offered in the Senate and does not do full justice, why should not the House insist that full justice should be done? [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is not in order; under the agreement only substantive amendments are in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I move to amend——

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Two amendments are already pending.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TOWNSEND] to the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.] The form of the motion must be to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, which was to make the appropriation $75,000; and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. DUNNELL, to strike out "$57,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$67,500."

Mr. DUNNELL. I will withdraw that amendment.

The SPEAKER. Then the question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. And on that motion I call for the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. It was understood that amendments were to be offered.

The SPEAKER. There is no motion to amend pending.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to move an amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. And I call the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the Chair allow the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] to take me off the floor, when I rose before the vote was taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TOWNSEND] and stated that I desired to move an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] was not recognized.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ought to have been.

The SPEAKER. Because the gentleman in charge of the bill must be first recognized.

Mr. SPRINGER. I had the floor long before the gentleman from New York called the previous question.

Mr. McCOOK. And you have made your speech.

Mr. SPRINGER. I was a member of the special committee on this subject, and was allowed only seven minutes. Now, if you want to go on with this bill do so; it will take you some time to get through?

Mr. HAZELTON. You will let Jumbo loose. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Jumbo is over there.

The SPEAKER. Under the arrangement, as the Chair understood it, there was to be one hour for general debate, after which substantive amendments were to be allowed under the five-minute rule. A fair execution of that agreement the Chair thinks would not allow amendments to be cut off by a call of the previous question.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been waiting for gentlemen who desire to offer amendments. Debate cannot be had except on substantive amendments.

Mr. TAYLOR. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move to strike out these words:

And of this amount not more than $35,500 in all shall be certified and paid for medical services and attendance.

My reason is this: with that amendment the amendment of my colleague from Ohio [Mr. TOWNSEND] will have some effect; without my amendment it will have no effect, for the outside bills are all ascertained.

Mr. NEAL. That amendment was voted down.

Mr. TAYLOR. I thought it was adopted.

The SPEAKER. It was not adopted.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to amend the amendment of the Senate by striking out "$57,500" and inserting in lieu thereof "$47,500;" also by striking out "$35,500" and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,500." That will reduce the whole appropriation by the sum of $10,000, and make the reduction apply to the fees of physicians.

The gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK,] who has charge of this bill, has stated that he desired, by means of this provision, to testify in a substantial way the gratitude of the nation to the surgeons for the manner in which they treated this case.

Mr. HISCOCK. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. SPRINGER. Some gentleman on the other side said so. I think perhaps it was the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL,] or the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR.] Some gentleman made that statement.

Mr. HAZELTON. Was it "the gentleman from Maine?" [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. That statement was made.

Mr. HISCOCK. Those were not my words.

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not undertake to give the exact words, but that was the substance of the statement. I have no objection to any eulogies which the gentleman may desire to make on the surgeons in this case. But it is no testimonial to the memory of Mr. Garfield to pay large, exorbitant, and unusual fees to the physicians who attended upon him.

I am perfectly willing, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has said, to make a suitable provision by which liberal fees shall be allowed to the surgeons in attendance on this case. But no extraordinary skill having been shown we are only required to make reasonable compensation.

I want to call the attention of gentlemen on the other side to the fact that when an attempt was made upon the life of Secretary Seward, at the time of the assassination of President Lincoln, and when he was so wounded as to require medical attention of the most skillful kind for many weeks, his surgeon presented to him a bill for $800 in full for all his services; and Mr. Seward paid it himself, and no one thought of coming to the Congress of the United States and asking us to pay for medical attendance in that case.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to question the propriety of Congress providing proper payment to these surgeons?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have said that I did not.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me answer that question.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let the gentleman from Illinois answer it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have said that I was in favor of a liberal compensation.

Mr. McCOOK. What did you bring in the Seward episode for?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer for the gentleman from Illinois, and say——

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not yield; wait a moment. There is not a gentleman I think on either side of this House who ever has expressed any willingness to allow the estate of the late President to be taxed one dollar for any expense that grew out of his illness or his burial.

The only question is to ascertain what amounts should be paid. I have asked that a judicial investigation might be had; I have asked that subpœnas might be issued and that witnesses might come before a Congressional committee. I am willing to take any sort of evidence, I do not care what it is, so that it amounts to proof. I say again, for the gentleman from Illinois and for myself and for everybody over here, if you will, by any process known to the law or outside of the law, ascertain the expenses to which the estate of the late President is subject by reason of the assassination, we stand prepared to extend his pay and his salary for one year or for four years—for $50,000 or for $200,000, for any amount of money, in order to save that estate harmless to the last cent.

Now, let me show you what the effect of this is. A friend of mine on the other side of the House—and I have a good many friends over there whom I appreciate; I do not see him now in his seat—told me the other day that a committee of the House having reason to suspect that a witness who was under subpœna and was represented as being sick was not sick, directed the Sergeant-at-Arms to get a good doctor and with him visit the witness to see whether he was really sick. The officer of this House took a doctor in a carriage at Government expense. The physician felt the man's pulse, examined his tongue, reported that he was sick, and then sent in to the committee a bill of $100 for that service. The gentleman told me that this was a result of the very demands made in the proposition we are now considering. There had better be some limit fixed. I trust that the House will not concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I suppose the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] have been called forth to some extent because he understood me by implication at least to charge that he was unwilling to provide for the payment of these expenses. Now, I do not charge that upon anybody; but I feel justified in saying this: when the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] pleads here that we should not make this provision because the Senate has taken the initiative, that this is a good reason why we should resist the payment of these expenses; when my distinguished friend from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] and my distinguished friend from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] (and let them understand I do not question their good taste in this matter) choose to make this bill for the payment of expenses connected with the sickness of the late President a vehicle for the elevation of some one to a higher grade or rank, and if we will not accord this are ready to vote that these expenses shall not be paid; and when my distinguished friend—I was about to say distinguished surgeon—from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] is unwilling to pay these bills because he differs with the surgeons as to the practice adopted in the case of the late President, this all taken together amounts to a resistance to the payment of these bills; and the outcome of it is that these claims will be knocking at the door of the estate of the late President for payment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I trust my friend from New York will not put me in any such disreputable company as that of these doctors.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] by striking out "$47,500" and inserting "$100,000." Mr. Speaker, what is it we are engaged in to-day? Not, I apprehend, in auditing the accounts of the physicians who attended the late President, but in appropriating a sum of money which shall cover the expenses that may be found due by reason of his assassination. If we would do the thing properly and as the American people I believe would have it done, we would simply provide a sum of money adequate to the purpose and leave it to judicious men to determine who shall receive the money and in what proportion. I believe the American people would blush to-day if they could witness the scene presented in this House. When the President of the United States was stricken down by an assassin the whole nation would have been willing to pay a million dollars if his life could have been saved. The physicians and others who attended upon him, while they did not perhaps understand the fatal shot and its consequences, did their duty faithfully and well, and we ought to be willing to appropriate a sum of money sufficient to pay the bills and leave it, as the Senate amendment leaves it, to the determination of the Auditors of the Treasury and the Treasurer to determine how the money shall be distributed.

In my judgment this is the only dignified and proper way to treat a question like this. The people of the country have no interest in this shaving down the bills of the doctors. They will take no interest in the question whether the physicians properly understood the case or not. The people believe that the wound was a fatal one, and that no physicians could have saved the life of the President, but that these physicians did their duty to the best of their ability. I hope that my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to make the motion that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto be terminated in five minutes. Let the dead rest in peace.

Mr. KNOTT. I make the point of order that this can only be done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. If the House were proceeding as in Committee of the Whole, the motion would be entirely in order; but, as the Chair understands, the bill is being considered in the House under an arrangement——

Mr. KASSON. The House acting as in Committee of the Whole, there is no possibility of the committee rising; therefore the House has the same right to limit debate that it would have if the bill were being considered in Committee of the Whole and the committee should rise and report the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that this bill is being considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KASSON. That was the motion adopted by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, upon a reference to the proceedings of last evening, thinks not.

Mr. RANDALL. We are acting under an agreement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition to terminate debate?

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

Mr. KASSON. If the House is not acting as in Committee of the Whole the previous question is in order.

The SPEAKER. That would be in order, the Chair thinks, but for the fact that there was an agreement by unanimous consent to proceed to consider this bill, first allowing an hour's debate, and after that it was agreed it should be considered under the five-minute rule. Nothing was said about this being considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KASSON. I venture to suggest to the Chair that the House take one or the other view, either to close the debate under the five-minute rule as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union or to call the previous question. The House has not deprived itself of its control over the question.

The SPEAKER. Unless the unanimous consent cuts off the right of the House to have the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. There seems to be a right somewhere to close this debate when that is the wish of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no purpose to unnecessarily protract the debate.

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise for the purpose of opposing the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HARRIS.] He is not satisfied with the amount of money recommended by the Senate, but proposes to increase it to $100,000. There are many things in connection with this whole matter of which we have no cause to congratulate ourselves. It was a sad thing indeed to feel that we had reached that point of political depravity when a man kills a member of his own party (the President) because that personage did not go to that extreme in politics which suited the opinions of his assassin—was not stalwart enough for him. And coming still further down it is sorrowing to see those who treated the late President, in view of the manner of that treatment, exorbitant in their demands for the service they rendered.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. They have made no demands at all.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then why pay anything to physicians who do not think they deserve it enough to say so? We have all through the consideration of this question had intimations from the newspapers of the country what would be the character of the demands on the part of these physicians, sometimes estimated at $25,000 each. We have their own statements, so far as they have made any before the committee appointed by this House. I am informed by the gentleman from Illinois that they or a portion of them have stated they will certainly make demands for their services somewhere.

Now, what is the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts? It is to increase the medical fees in the aggregate about $20,000 or $25,000. The gentleman from Massachusetts says it does not increase them at all. Then why the increase of the aggregate amount proposed by the amendment?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. It merely provides for so much thereof as may be necessary, and it may be that not one dollar will be necessary.

Mr. McMILLIN. If anybody here ever saw any part of a contingent fund voted by Congress in this language that came back into the Treasury he has seen something which is of the very rarest occurrence and which will not be seen under this bill. Now, how much is given to these physicians under this bill? Between $8,000 and $10,000 each, it is thought. How much is that per day to the men who treated the late and lamented President? If they treated him every day from the hour the assassin's bullet struck him down to the day of his death, it would be something more than $100 a day to each surgeon.

In addition to that, my friend from Maryland proposes to promote some surgeons of the Army, which would ultimately place them on the retired list with higher rank than they now have. Ultimately that would be the result of it, because he proposes to increase their rank, and that increase would increase their pay even when retired. In this regard an untold amount is paid from the Treasury for these services. They were on high salaries in the Government service when they treated the President.

Is it possible gentlemen who were in the Army on full salaries would begrudge the little service they were able to give to a dying President, or would charge for it, directly or indirectly? I do not believe these men ever asked for such a gratuity, and I am not willing that it shall go forth that they have.

Now, for this compensation of $100 a day what is the character of the service which was rendered? I regret to go into this discussion. No man regrets it more than I do. I would be as glad as the gentleman from Iowa or anybody else to let it be buried in oblivion, but it will not rest. These men come to Congress, directly or indirectly, and ask for their service $100 a day. I repeat the question, what was the nature of that service?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. They do not come to Congress.

Mr. McMILLIN. There was not a man who touched the President that ever did know where he was wounded till after his death. They probed him in the wrong place and wounded him with the probe. He lingered eighty days and died.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Would you not think it proper for Congress to anticipate any possible claim against the estate by placing in the appropriation a sufficient amount?

Mr. McMILLIN. What I wish Congress to do in this and in every other case is, if it determines to pay a claim, to resort to some means of ascertaining what it is proper should be paid. That is the very first thing we ought to settle in this discussion. He was probed by these physicians, but probed how? Never in the direction of the ball. So shocking is this whole affair that gentlemen are not willing and do not desire the blunders of these physicians to be exposed. They do not wish the fact of their turning their instruments in the wrong direction shall be made to appear. Because the blunders were so shocking and their repetition so horrifying I forbear going further than absolutely compelled by a sense of duty.

I say we ought not in this case to give the vast sum which is proposed to be given to these physicians. If their pay were to be no greater than the skill they evinced, they would, I fear, get but little. I am opposed to the propositions both of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HARRIS] and the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. MCLANE,] and hope they will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] which the Clerk will again report.

The amendment was again read.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to offer an amendment, in line 5 of the section, after the word "all," to insert the words "just and reasonable;" so that it will read:

All claims and the determination of all just and reasonable allowances.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I desire, Mr. Speaker, now to offer an amendment by striking out, in lines 19 and 20, the words "fifty-seven thousand and five hundred" and insert "seventy;" so that it will read:

To pay said awards, the sum of $70,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That will not alter the pay of the physicians at all.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I am going to ask to have that stricken out if this prevails.

Mr. BLACKBURN. We will not do that.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I believe, Mr. Speaker, the House is desirous of getting rid of further discussion upon this question, and will be willing now to fix a sum which will settle it finally.

This is a painful question to a great many gentlemen, and a painful question to the country. I believe that $70,000 will pay all of the claims in a satisfactory manner. I do not believe that any one having a claim upon the estate will get any more than he is entitled to; and this provision will take the whole question out of discussion and place it in the hands of a competent board to decide upon and adjudicate all of these questions as they arise.

I hope, sir, that after the consideration and discussion this question has had in this House this morning that the whole matter will be settled by allowing this $70,000 to be appropriated, and then place the sum in the hands of these gentlemen to use as much as is necessary to settle all of these claims in a creditable and proper manner.

Mr. McCOOK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say simply a word by way of supplement to the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TOWNSEND.] As a personal friend of the late President of the United States, having served with him in the Army and on the floor of this House, having been honored by his friendship for twenty years, having loved him while living and reverencing his memory dead, I regret more than I can express that this discussion has been precipitated upon the House. I am no advocate of voting unlimited sums of money through a mere sentiment, but rather than hear a further discussion of all of the nauseating details of the management of this case I would be willing to vote $100,000 if necessary to have a final settlement of the entire question and have it removed from Congress and from before the eyes of the people. For this reason, while I shall vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TOWNSEND,] I shall vote also for the Senate amendment providing for a board to audit the claims about which so much has been said and written. Under that amendment their action will be final, and the high character of the gentlemen composing it is sufficient guarantee for me that exact justice will be done.

Let me call the attention of the House also to the fact that after all of the talk that has been had in regard to making provision for General Garfield's widow and his fatherless children but little has so far been done in that direction. What has Congress done? I speak in no offensive sense, for I certainly mean no comment or criticism upon the actions of any gentleman upon this floor, but with a single exception we have done nothing but wrangle over all of these questions, even over his funeral expenses. It is true we did pass a bill allowing his widow a pension of $5,000 annually, coupling with it, however, and properly so, the widows of two, I believe, of our dead Presidents, Mrs. Polk and Mrs. Tyler; but we have not given Mrs. Garfield, up to this time, the balance even of the annual salary of her husband. The only provision made for her and her children is that which has been made by private and voluntary contributions, and I am proud to say the greater part of it came from the city in which I have the honor to reside and in part represent.

Let me say in addition to this, Mr. Speaker, that if the Congress of the United States fails in any way to make proper provision for these funeral expenses and claims against the estate of our dead friend and President, the same generous spirit which prompted the people of New York to make this provision for his widow and children can still be relied upon to settle his funeral expenses to the last dollar.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker, the people I represent are not disposed to higgle about prices to be paid for services rendered in taking care of and alleviating the sufferings of our late President, James A. Garfield. But I think I speak the sentiments of my people, irrespective of party, when I say that we are not satisfied with the conduct of those gentlemen who had that case in charge. I speak their sentiment also when I say that they are not satisfied to see a crowd of cormorants swarming around Congress and asking the appropriation of vast sums of money they would never dream of asking of anybody else for such services except the Congress of the United States; making claims and requests and demands upon the Government and trusting to that feeling of generous sentiment which seems to be sweeping over this House that no exposure would follow the presentation of such claims. So that we are asked to furnish the money, and they will rest in perfect security that no exposure will follow.

My people have seen in the press—and I desire to ask the chairman of the special committee having in charge the examination into the funeral expenses, &c., this question, whether they are correctly advised or not—we have been informed through the press that under this cover the great State of which the late lamented President was the most honored son has not shrunk from sending a communication to that committee requesting the expenses of the militia of Ohio in attendance on the funeral to be paid. I would like to know from the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR,] whether such a communication has been received.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is a mistake entirely. I had supposed such a paper had been sent to me and had spoken of it as such; but on examination it was found to be a communication from the Secretary of War here concerning another matter. It was an entire mistake, growing out of a misunderstanding of my own.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman state what it was?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not remember; I can state by referring to it.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask him whether it was not recommended by the governor of Ohio?

Mr. TAYLOR. It was not. I was misinformed myself; it was my own mistake.

Mr. BRAGG. I regret the statement of the chairman of the committee should have found its way into the public newspapers only to be corrected here.

Mr. TAYLOR. So many things of that kind have occurred that this is no annoyance to me.

Mr. BRAGG. I say, Mr. Speaker, when we are fixing sums of money here we are doing something we know nothing about. We have been told by one gentleman the provisions in this bill would not be accepted. How does he know? It seems to be conceded that there has been no understanding arrived at as to what would be a legitimate and proper sum to appropriate to defray these expenses. All my people ask is that they shall be ascertained in some way that will vouch for the authenticity of the examination and for the credit of their indorsement; and when so ascertained I think I am instructed by the unanimous voice of my district to vote for them whether they be $100,000 or whether they be $1,000,000. But I do not believe that it is proper for us to be standing here, one man saying $25,000, another $37,000, another $45,000, another $75,000, another $100,000, when we are talking about a subject we do not know anything about at all. Would it not be better that this amendment be rejected, that this section placed on the bill by the Senate be stricken out, and that some method be devised by this House taking charge of that subject-matter, as it is its right and duty to do, to ascertain what would be a proper compensation which would be satisfactory to all parties connected with the transaction, and then by a joint resolution pass it under a suspension of the rules?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, and Mr. KNOTT rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. KNOTT. I desire to offer as a substitute for the pending amendment what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after line 10, and insert:

"Completed, shall, together with the evidence showing the nature and value of the services rendered and supplies furnished, be reported to Congress for its action."

So that it will read:

"SEC. 6. That a board of audit, consisting of the First and Second Comptrollers of the Treasury and the Treasurer of the United States, is hereby constituted, to whom shall be referred all claims and the determination of all allowances to be made growing out of the illness and burial of the late President, James A. Garfield; that the said board shall hear and examine and determine all questions arising out of said claims and proposed allowances, and shall make an award in each case for services rendered or supplies furnished, which, when completed, shall, together with the evidence showing the nature and value of the services rendered and supplies furnished, be reported to Congress for its action."

Mr. KNOTT. It is a divine injunction that all things should be done decently and in order. And if there was ever an occasion on which that injunction should have an application the present is that one; and it occurs to me that the amendment I have offered must meet the approval of every gentleman who desires to see full and exact justice done to the country, as well as to the various claimants in this case.

It is very justly complained by many gentlemen on this floor that we are going in regard to this matter comparatively in the dark. For one I feel that such is the case. For one I feel that this House cannot, with the data before it, act intelligently in this matter; at least with sufficient intelligence to do that justice to the country as well as to ourselves which is required at our hands.

Upon the plan which I have proposed, every claim in relation to the service rendered to the deceased President in his last illness or in connection with his funeral is to be audited by two of the most competent accounting officers in the service of the Government. After a calm and dispassionate examination of the evidence which may be presented to them, they are simply required to report their conclusion with the evidence adduced to this House for its action. We can then act decently; we can then act justly; we can then act, if need be, generously toward all parties concerned.

I think, sir, divested of all sentimentality, the matter before the House is simply, after all, a mere matter of business, and ought to be conducted as all other business matters are conducted by sensible, prudent, and dispassionate men. I hope that amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. When the assassin's bullet struck our much-loved Garfield to the earth there was no deeper horror anywhere than that which thrilled the hearts of the people of Wisconsin. The voice of her people and the votes of her representatives had first presented his name at Chicago, and it was with swelling pride that they saw him seated in the position for which they had named him. My colleague and friend [General BRAGG] will not dispute with me that no people in this country will go further than ours to do justice to his memory, and would sooner err by generosity than come short of full-measured justice in providing for those who stood around him in those awful days of suffering and anxiety.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps no such other case was ever known in this world as that which saw these terrible eighty days. No such responsibility anywhere that we know of was ever placed on mortal man as was placed on those who had charge of the medical treatment of the President. Nerves of steel stretched everywhere from the White House, and there was no pang there that had not its responsive shudder in every house in the land.

There these medical men stood in the glare of the world. Each pulse-beat of the suffering President not only thrilled this country but thrilled all Europe as well. The people in every town and city stood out at morning, noon, and evening to read the bulletins from the sick chamber of the President. Every day was a crisis in his life. Every hour was a crisis in their professional reputation of the medical men in charge. A gross or fatal blunder would have brought upon them the concentrated vengeance of mankind. What general can stand on battle-field with greater responsibilities? One life is as sacred as another. But how can we compare this to a case of ordinary private practice. Who would take the responsibility of being reviewed, even as these physicians have been reviewed in the House of Representatives to-day by those who make no pretension to science or skill or to know the actual facts? And yet this discussion goes everywhere, and might prove fatal to the professional standing of those gentlemen. Yet there they were, day by day and night by night, subjected to such a strain and such a responsibility as men seldom feel anywhere. They stood in the very white heat and focus of the world's pent-up humanity.

These men were placed in attendance, or at least recognized there. Dr. Bliss was assigned the place of leading physician. Whether he is competent or not I neither know nor care for the purposes of this discussion. His diagnosis and treatment were indorsed and adopted by two men conceded to be among the foremost, if not the most eminent in their profession in the United States, Drs. Hamilton and Agnew.

The people of Wisconsin were a thousand miles from the bedside of the stricken and suffering President. Speaking for them to-day, I am confident they would never undertake to substitute their individual impressions, opinions, or prejudices for those of trained and skilled professional men, who were on the ground, acting in view of all the facts which medical science could give. There may have been mistakes. There may have been individual wrongs; but who can settle them here? What one of us should assume to do it?

Mr. Speaker, I have seen a million of dollars voted here; yes, ten millions, twenty millions; yea, a hundred millions voted in fifteen minutes, without a word, and it did not grieve me, for I knew that some of it would go to the very men whom our dead President led to battle. Yet, when we talk of $50,000 or $75,000 as the utmost limit for this case, it leads to analysis and discussion in the face of the American people and of the world.

These Representatives from Ohio ask of this House to limit the amount to $70,000, to strike out the restrictions, so that it may be submitted to a competent board who can revise and consider these claims and adjust them with proper caution. Why not do it?

Sir, let us have no more wrangling here over the loved and lamented dead. By the memory of the man who sat in that seat, [pointing to General Garfield's late seat,] by the memory of the position which he held among us, by the agony which he suffered, by the trial put upon his widow and suffering children, with such humble power as I possess I appeal to both sides of this House, here and now, to adopt the suggestion of AMOS TOWNSEND, his personal friend, and of Judge TAYLOR, his personal representative and friend, and let us have no more wrangling about it, but adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TOWNSEND.] [Great applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TOWNSEND.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the amendment be reported and the section read as it will stand if the amendment shall be adopted.

The amendment was to strike out all after the tenth line of the Senate amendment and to insert in lieu thereof the words "completed, shall, together with the evidence showing the nature and value of the services rendered and supplies furnished, be reported to Congress for its action;" so that the amendment of the Senate would read as follows:

SEC. 6. That a board of audit, consisting of the First and Second Comptrollers of the Treasury and the Treasurer of the United States, is hereby constituted, to whom shall be referred all claims and the determination of all allowances to be made growing out of the illness and burial of the late President, James A. Garfield; that the said board shall hear and examine and determine all questions arising out of said claims and proposed allowances, and shall make an award in each case for services rendered or supplies furnished, which, when completed, shall, together with the evidence showing the nature and value of the services rendered and supplies furnished, be reported to Congress for its action.

The question was taken upon agreeing to the substitute offered by Mr. KNOTT; and upon a division there were—ayes 50, noes 65.

Mr. KNOTT and others called for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division there were—ayes 25, noes 93.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I make the point of order that the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] is not properly a substitute for my amendment.

Mr. KNOTT. That point is too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point is too late, and, at all events, the Chair thinks it might be regarded as a substitute for the amendment.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAGE. I was not in here during the entire reading of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT.] I desire to inquire if the effect of it, if adopted, will be to postpone this matter to another session of Congress?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Of course it would.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 76, nays 96, not voting 118; as follows:

Mr. WATSON with Mr. TALBOTT.

Mr. HUMPHREY with Mr. BRAGG.

Mr. HALL with Mr. WISE of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SKINNER with Mr. FLOWER.

Mr. THOMAS with Mr. CURTIN.

Mr. HUBBS with Mr. SHACKELFORD.

Mr. JOYCE with Mr. STOCKSLAGER.

Mr. BARR with Mr. DAVIDSON.

Mr. MILES with Mr. SINGLETON of Illinois.

Mr. MOREY with Mr. COLERICK.

Mr. URNER with Mr. MCLANE.

Mr. CALKINS with Mr. MILLS.

Mr. WARD with Mr. AIKEN.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. HOBLITZELL.

Mr. HAMMOND, of New York, with Mr. STEPHENS.

Mr. CROWLEY with Mr. HEWITT of New York.

Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. SPEER.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, with Mr. GEDDES.

Mr. FISHER with Mr. CLARDY.

Mr. LORD with Mr. KENNA.

Mr. CRAPO with Mr. BARBOUR.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, with Mr. O'NEILL.

Mr. DEZENDORF with Mr. GARRISON.

Mr. LYNCH with Mr. HARDENBERGH.

Mr. CARLISLE with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina, (who would vote "ay,") with Mr. WALKER.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina. I have been paired for some time with the gentleman from New York, [Mr. RICHARDSON.] I voted to-day supposing he was present. I now find that he is not, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. WEST. I supposed that I was paired with the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HEWITT.] On that supposition I refrained from voting. I find now that I am not paired. I would like to record my vote in the negative.

The SPEAKER. The rules do not permit the Chair to receive a vote under the circumstances.

Mr. TALBOTT. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WATSON,] but understanding that he would vote "no" on this question, I have felt at liberty to vote in the negative.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, to strike out "57" and insert "70," so as to make the amount of the appropriation $70,500.

The question being taken, the amendment was not agreed to, there being—ayes 35, noes 53.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurrs on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] to concur in the Senate amendment as amended.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In order to save time I ask for the yeas and nays at once.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that the amount inserted in the Senate amendment be read.

Mr. HISCOCK. It simply provides that the claims shall be just and reasonable.

The SPEAKER. Those are the only words added.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. If this question be determined in the affirmative, will it send the whole subject to the committee of conference?

The SPEAKER. It will not.

Mr. CANNON. The amendment of the Senate has been amended; and I desire to ask, if we now concur with an amendment, as proposed, will it send the whole subject to a conference?

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the House will go to a conference if the Senate should not concur in it.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the House concurs in the amendment of the Senate, it passes that part of the bill.

The SPEAKER. If the Senate should agree to the amendment of the House, there would be no conference on this section.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 79, nays 83, not voting 128; as follows:

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

During the roll-call the following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. PEIRCE with Mr. HEWITT of New York.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, with Mr. WASHBURN.

Mr. BREWER with Mr. FULKERSON.

Mr. STONE with Mr. HEWITT of Alabama.

On motion of Mr. VAN HORN, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The House has refused to concur, and the effect is under the practice to non-concur.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the House non-concurred in the Senate amendment; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. PEIRCE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported they had examined and found truly enrolled the following bill and joint resolution; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. No. 1095) to provide for the erection of a public building at Poughkeepsie, New York; and

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 237) concerning an international fishery exhibition, to be held at London in May, 1883.

LUCRETIA R. GARFIELD.

Mr. TAYLOR. I ask, by unanimous consent, to present for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 6739) for the relief of Lucretia R. Garfield.

There was no objection, and the bill was read a first and second time.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Lucretia R. Garfield, widow of James A. Garfield, late President of the United States, or, in the event of her death before payment, then to the legal representatives of the said James A. Garfield, the sum of $50,000, less any sum paid to the said James A. Garfield, or his widow or legal representative, on account of his salary as President of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE. I move to take from the Speaker's table the amendments of the Senate to the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. DWIGHT. I reserve all points of order on the Senate amendments.

Mr. COX, of New York. Why cannot we go generally to the Speaker's table?

Mr. PAGE. I ask that the amendments be read and acted on in the House.

Mr. CARLISLE. Let them go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PAGE. It has to go to the committee of conference anyhow, and the gentleman knows that very well.

Mr. CARLISLE. There is quite a difference, the gentleman will find. In the House the gentleman can move the previous question with reference to any amendment of the Senate. It cannot be done in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PAGE. If the gentleman will allow me, I will move to non-concur in all of the Senate amendments.

Mr. COX, of New York. But then we cannot discuss them.

Mr. PAGE. Let the amendments, then, be read and considered in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Subject to debate on amendments as under the five-minute rule.

Mr. PAGE. Certainly, they would be subject to debate.

Mr. CARLISLE. As I understand the gentleman's proposition, it is to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand the gentleman.

Mr. CARLISLE. Let me ask the gentleman from California, then, does he propose to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HASKELL. Before entering upon the consideration of that bill under that order I would like to have the Chair or the gentleman from California state to the House exactly what that order means. There have been, several times, bills sent to the House to be considered as in Committee of the Whole, and out of that condition of things has always arisen a dozen different disputes as to what the order means. Now, the practice of the House in that respect has never been settled; and while I am entirely willing that the bill shall be so considered I would like to have it clearly understood what that consideration means. There is a sort of a general rule that it means its consideration under the five-minute rule for debate and amendment; but a question of a similar character arose with the consideration of the bill which we have just completed as to the previous question——

The SPEAKER. As to the consideration of the last bill it was not considered by the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, but the reason why the Chair did not entertain the demand for the previous question was that there was an arrangement made by unanimous consent that there should be one hour's general debate, and then, thereafter, debate upon substantive amendments for five minutes under the rule. The Chair felt it his duty to carry out that understanding until substantive amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask the gentleman from California to make the motion to consider his bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole, so far as the five-minute rule is concerned, but to reserve the right to himself, if it be necessary to avoid question, to move the previous question as in the House, and that will settle the practice of the House in reference to this bill at all events.

Mr. RANDALL. It cannot be settled in that way. The practice is clear. The House can consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole; that would be to allow amendments and debate under the five-minute rule, and the previous question can cut off both debate and amendments. But in Committee of the Whole you cannot cut off amendments though the committee may rise to limit debate.

Mr. HASKELL. But there is no rising to limit debate in the House when it is acting as in Committee of the Whole. The Senate has a practice which permits something of the kind, but we have no such practice in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. As I have said, the Committee of the Whole can rise and cut off debate upon any amendment while it cannot cut off amendments. The previous question alone can do that in the House.

Mr. REED. But the Speaker can recognize the call for the previous question which will cut off debate or amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there will be no difficulty in reference to the matter. The Chair did indicate to-day that because an arrangement was made by unanimous consent which in good faith ought to be carried out, he could not recognize the demand for the previous question. But that was because of the condition which had been made by consent of the House that the debate was to run for a specified time.

Mr. REED. But in the House as in Committee of the Whole it would be different, I apprehend.

Mr. PAGE. My object in asking consent that this may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole is that we shall have debate under the five-minute rule before the previous question may be ordered.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will read the twentieth rule:

> Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

Now, I make the point of order that this bill, with the Senate amendments, should go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. There is no doubt about the application of the rule to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. PAGE. Of course it will have to go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if the gentleman from New York makes the point of order; and I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the amendments to the bill, if the gentleman from New York insists upon his motion.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do insist upon it.

Mr. PAGE. It must be for delay, it can be for nothing else.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to ask whether it is in order pending that motion to move to commit the bill and Senate amendments to the Committee on Commerce with leave to report at any time and with instructions to report back the bill so amended that the aggregate sum appropriated by it shall not exceed $15,000,000?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this bill is not before the House at all except by unanimous consent. The Chair understood that there was no objection in the first instance to the request of the gentleman from California. The gentleman from New York however makes the point of order that it must be first considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Chair sustains that point of order.

Mr. PAGE. I thought the agreement was that the bill might be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COX, of New York. How does this bill get from the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that there was consent to take it up.

Mr. PAGE. I move that we go to the Speaker's table and take from it the river and harbor bill——

Mr. RANDALL. You had better not make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand there was any objection made to going to the Speaker's table. But the point was made that the amendment must be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and that point was sustained. The Chair hears no objection to take the bill from the Speaker's table, and upon the point of order it is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Senate amendments to the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, (Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, in the chair,) and proceeded to consider the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. PAGE. The bill has not been printed with the Senate amendments as they finally passed the Senate. The Clerk, therefore, will have to read the amendments from the bill which came from the Senate.

Mr. CARLISLE. Does the gentleman from California expect the committee to consider the amendments without having any printed copy of them?

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the committee rise. We are expected to enter on the consideration of a large number of Senate amendments which increase the appropriations made in the House by millions without having before us the amendments in print.

Mr. PAGE. I ask the Clerk to read the amendments from the bill as it came from the Senate, and let the committee dispose of them as they are read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I insist on my motion.

Mr. PAGE. The House refused to allow the order for the bill and amendments to be printed. This is the only way we can reach them.

Mr. SPRINGER. We have not before us any amendments to go upon, except as we gather them from the reading of the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the committee do now rise.

The motion was not agreed to, there being—ayes 27, noes 70.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read the first amendment of the Senate, as follows:

> Strike out "five" and insert "fourteen;" so that it will read:
> "Improving harbor at Plymouth, Massachusetts: Continuing improvement, $14,000."

Mr. PAGE. I move to non-concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. COX, of New York. Is that debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly it is.

Mr. COX, of New York. On a bill of this character I would like to know what the Senate did. We cannot understand it properly when we have only the reading of the Clerk. Unless the amendments are printed no member is posted as to their character, and I think my friend from California should not insist on our proceeding in this way.

Mr. PAGE. I will move that the committee rise, and in the House I will move that the bill be printed with the Senate amendments.

The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. PAGE. I ask that the river and harbor appropriation bill, with the Senate amendments, be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to ask the House at this time to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration a bill of great importance to the State of Colorado. It is the bill (S. No. 698) relating to lands in Colorado lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Indians. It provides for the opening to settlement under the treaty with the Ute Indians of the Ute reservation. I hope the House will agree to consider the bill at this time, as it is a matter of great importance to that State.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill he has indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the right to object till the bill is read and an explanation is given by the gentleman who calls it up.

The bill was read.

Mr. HASKELL. Now, I would like to have the attention of the House for a moment while I make a statement of what this is.

Mr. ATHERTON. I desire to state that I will object to the consideration of that bill. It should go to the Committee on the Public Lands. I have information on the subject which makes me object.

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentleman not allow me to state the condition of the bill? I desire to make only a brief statement. It is a matter of such vital importance to Colorado that it requires the immediate attention of the House.

Mr. ATHERTON. I do not see what good will be accomplished by the gentleman making such a statement as he suggests. For I would still have the right to insist on my objection; and it would be simply taking the time of the House for no purpose.

Mr. O'NEILL. I have a bill to the consideration of which at this time I think there would be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. WISE.]

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6012) to construct a road from the city of Richmond, Virginia, to the Richmond National Military Cemetery.

Mr. HISCOCK. Can I reserve the right to object until I hear the bill read?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

The bill was read.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us go to the Private Calendar. To-day is Friday.

Mr. BOWMAN. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOWMAN. I desire to call up the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 684) to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government. That is the first in order of special assignments, and I have been waiting over sixty days merely to get a vote upon it. I think the debate is all exhausted on the bill.

The SPEAKER. This special assignment was under consideration on the 22d day of April last. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOWMAN] in charge of the bill had demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill. Pending that demand the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] had moved to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, pending which the House adjourned.

Mr. RANDALL. I will raise the question of consideration on that bill.

The SPEAKER. It is a special order.

Mr. RANDALL. My object is to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, to-day being Friday.

Mr. BOWMAN. I hope the gentleman will allow simply a vote on this bill; I do not think it will take more than fifteen minutes to end the whole matter. During the two months past I have been promised that this subject should be taken up next, and next, and next. I want to get it out of the way and dispose of it. I do not think there will be even a yea-and-nay vote on it.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBESON. As I understand it, this is a privileged question, being a special order under a suspension of the rules. When last under consideration it had advanced to the demand for the previous question, and pending that demand a motion to refer was made, and pending the motion to refer the House adjourned. I think it is too late to raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the question of consideration is not insisted upon.

REFERENCE OF CLAIMS TO THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. BOWMAN. I now call up the special order.

The House accordingly proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 684) to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] to refer this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion to refer was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the demand for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. McCOOK. I know nothing about this bill, although I remember hearing it discussed; but that was in April last.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOWMAN] is in charge of the bill.

Mr. BOWMAN. I call for a vote on the passage of the bill.

The question was submitted to the House and those in the affirmative responded.

Mr. McMILLIN. In view of the fact that it was so long ago that this bill was discussed, I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the demand for the reading of the bill is too late; the House is now dividing on the passage of the bill.

The negative vote was called, and the announcement was made by the Speaker that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HOUSE. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. McCOOK. The bill should be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit to the House the question of reading the bill at this time, which is one of some length. It requires unanimous consent. Is there objection to reading the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That whenever a claim or matter is pending before any committee of the Senate or House of Representatives, or before either House of Congress, which involves the investigation and determination of facts, the committee or House may cause the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to be transmitted to the Court of Claims of the United States, and the same shall there be proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt. When the facts shall have been found, the court shall not enter judgment thereon, but shall report the same to the committee or to the House by which the case was transmitted for its consideration.

SEC. 2. That when a claim or matter is pending in any of the Executive Departments which may involve controverted questions of fact or law, the head of such Department may transmit the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to said court, and the same shall be there proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt. When the facts and conclusions of law shall have been found, the court shall not enter judgment thereon, but shall report its findings and opinions to the Department by which it was transmitted for its guidance and action.

SEC. 3. The jurisdiction of said court shall not extend to or include any claim against the United States growing out of the destruction or damage to property by the Army or Navy during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, or for the use and occupation of real estate by any part of the military or naval forces of the United States in the operations of said forces during the said war at the seat of war; nor shall the said court have jurisdiction of any claim against the United States which is now barred by virtue of the provisions of any law of the United States.

SEC. 4. In any case of a claim for supplies or stores taken by or furnished to any part of military or naval forces of the United States for their use during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, the petition shall aver that the person who furnished such supplies or stores, or from whom such supplies or stores were taken, did not give any aid or comfort to said rebellion, but was throughout that war loyal to the Government of the United States, and the fact of such loyalty shall be a jurisdictional fact, and unless the said court shall, on a preliminary inquiry, find that the person who furnished such supplies or stores, or from whom the same were taken as aforesaid, was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout said war, the court shall not have jurisdiction of such cause, and the same shall, without further proceedings, be dismissed.

SEC. 5. That the Attorney-General, or his assistants, under his direction, shall appear for the defense and protection of the interests of the United States in all cases which may be transmitted to the Court of Claims under this act, with the same power to interpose counter-claims, offsets, defenses for fraud practiced or attempted to be practiced by claimants, and other defenses in like manner as he is now required to defend the United States in said court.

SEC. 6. That in the trial of such cases no person shall be excluded as a witness because he or she is a party to or interested in the same.

SEC. 7. That reports of the Court of Claims to Congress under this act, if not finally acted upon during the session at which they are reported, shall be continued from session to session and from Congress to Congress until the same shall be finally acted upon.

Mr. HOUSE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOUSE. Did the Clerk read the bill as it has been amended by the House?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk read the amended bill.

Mr. HOUSE. If the House shall pass that bill it will perpetrate an act of great injustice against honest claimants, of which it ought to be ashamed.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The question is upon ordering the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and there were 12 in the affirmative, not one-fifth of the last vote.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was accordingly passed.

Mr. BOWMAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and there were 14 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LYNCH. I have a bill here——

Mr. HUTCHINS. I desire to make a report.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Private Calendar, this being Friday.

The SPEAKER. That is a privileged motion.

Mr. RANDALL. We have not had a consideration of the Private Calendar for ten weeks.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. RANDALL; and upon a division there were—ayes 55, noes 29.

Mr. MILLER. No quorum has voted.

Mr. HISCOCK. Would a motion to adjourn be now in order?

The SPEAKER. The House is now dividing on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the point is made that no quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MILLER and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The tellers proceeded to count, but before concluding,

Mr. MILLER said: Evidently a majority of the House is in favor of proceeding with the consideration of the Private Calendar, and I will withdraw my point of order that no quorum has voted.

So (no further count being called for) the motion of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I desire to submit a report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would not be in order, the House having resolved to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The House having decided to go into Committee of the Whole, the Chair thinks that ends for the present the session of the House. The gentleman can be recognized later in the day.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. VALENTINE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN CITIZENS OF TENNESSEE.

The first bill upon the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1633) for the relief of certain citizens of Tennessee; of Bedford, Rutherford, and other counties.

Mr. BUCHANAN. A bill having the same purpose as this bill of the House has been passed by the Senate and is now on the Speaker's table. I move that this bill be laid aside and that we take up in lieu of it the Senate bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That cannot be done, because the Senate bill has not been referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I ask that the report be read. It will, I presume, give the committee full information as to the facts.

Mr. BRIGGS. I ask that the bill be read first.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remit, refund, and pay back, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the following-named citizens of Tennessee, or the legal representatives of such as are deceased, the amount of taxes assessed upon and collected from the said named persons contrary to the provisions of the regulations issued by the Secretary of the Treasury under date of June 21, 1865, and published in special circular numbered 16 from the Internal Revenue Office, of that date, said refunding having been recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury under date of June 19, 1873, that is to say:

M. H. Alexander, James Bass, Benjamin Batey, Willie Brown, J. G. Dejarnett, Thomas A. Elliott, Edwin H. Ewing, James M. Haynes, Thomas Hord, George W. House, Edward L. Jordan, Montfort F. Jordan, J. B. Kimbro, Thomas B. Miles, Felix G. Miller, S. E. Parrish, Isham R. Peebles, sr., Isham R. Peebles, jr., Peyton Randolph, R. D. Reed, John W. Richardson, Emanuel Rosenfeld, Alfred Ross, Susan Rucker, S. H. Singleton, Elizabeth Smith, George W. Smith, Lewis Tillman, M. B. Wade, Samuel B. Watkins, Samuel Winston, all of the county of Rutherford.

Louis Mankel, of the county of Knox: Asa Faulkner, of the county of Warren; William H. Ladd, of the county of Williamson.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1633) for the relief of certain citizens of Bedford and certain other counties of the State of Tennessee, submit the following supplementary report:

The parties named in the substitute herewith reported were, in 1863 and 1864, resident in the counties of Williamson, Rutherford, Bedford, and Warren, in the State of Tennessee.

The county of Williamson is immediately south of and adjoining Davidson, in which Nashville is situated.

Rutherford is southeast of Nashville and adjoining Davidson and Williamson. Bedford is southeast of and adjoining Rutherford, and Warren is east of and about eighty miles from Nashville.

Under section 90 of the act of July 1, 1862, an annual tax on all incomes over $600 and under $10,000, of 3 per cent., and on all incomes of over $10,000 a tax of 5 per cent. was imposed. (See 12 Statutes, p. 473.)

The forty-sixth section of the act of June 30, 1864, provides, "that if, for any cause, at any time after this act goes into operation, the laws of the United States cannot be executed in a State or Territory of the United States, or any part thereof, it shall be the duty of the President, and he is hereby authorized, to proceed to execute the provisions of this act within the limits of such State or Territory, or part thereof, so soon as the authority of the United States therein shall be re-established, and to collect the taxes, duties, and licenses in such States and Territories under the regulations prescribed in this act, so far as applicable; and where not applicable, the assessment and levy shall be made, and the time and manner of collection regulated by the instructions and directions of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury." (13 Statutes, 240.)

The joint resolution of July 4, 1864, imposed a special tax of 5 per cent. on all incomes over $600, in addition to all other taxes, for the year 1863. (13 Statutes, 417.)

Under the authority of section 46 of the act of June 30, 1864, above quoted, on the 21st of June, 1865, the Secretary of the Treasury issued Regulations Special No. 16, "concerning the collection of taxes in States lately in insurrection," as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
June 21, 1865.

Section 46 of the internal-revenue act approved June 30, 1864, provides that whenever the authority of the United States shall have been re-established in any State where the execution of the laws had previously been impossible, the provisions of the act shall be put in force in such State, with such modification of inapplicable regulations in regard to assessment, levy, time, and manner of collection as may be directed by the Department.

Without waiving in any degree the rights of the Government in respect to taxes that have heretofore accrued, or assuming to exonerate the tax-payer from his legal responsibility for such taxes, the Department does not deem it advisable to insist at present upon their payment, so far as they were payable prior to the establishment of a collection district embracing the territory in which the tax-payer resides.

But assessors in the several collection districts recently established in the States lately in insurrection are directed to require returns and to make assessments for the several classes of taxes for the appropriate legal period preceding the first regular day on which a tax becomes due after the establishment of the district; that is to say, in the several districts in question the proper tax will be assessed upon the income of the year 1864, inasmuch as the tax for that year is due upon the 30th day of June subsequently to the establishment of the district. All persons found doing any business for which a license is required will be assessed for the proper license from the first day of the month in which the district is established.

Persons engaged in any business for which monthly or quarterly returns are required to be made will be assessed for the month or quarter for which returns should be made at the first return day after the establishment of the district; and the same principle will apply to those taxes which are payable at different periods. A manufacturer of tobacco, for instance, in a district established after the 1st and before the 20th day of May will be assessed upon his sales for the month of April.

When any manufactured articles are found in the hands of a purchaser, and it is shown to the satisfaction of the assessor that the goods were actually sold and passed out of the hands of the manufacturer before the commencement of the period for which he is properly taxable, the articles will not be subject to tax in the hands of such purchaser, unless transported beyond the limits of the States lately in insurrection.

The holder of any distilled spirits, manufactured tobacco, or other article which is liable to seizure on account of the absence of inspection marks may present to the assessor the evidence that the articles in his hands, or under the circumstances which obtain in the particular case, are not subject to tax, except as above stated; and if the assessor is satisfied he will cause the packages to be so marked that they may be identified and sold without liability to seizure.

Whenever any collector shall have reason to believe that the holder of any goods on which the tax has not been paid intends to remove the same beyond the limits of the States lately in insurrection and to evade the payment of the tax, he will seize the goods and take necessary steps for their condemnation, unless the holder shall give bond as hereinafter prescribed for the transportation or exportation of the goods, or shall return the same to the assessor and pay to the collector the amount of tax that shall be found due. In all cases in which a seizure shall be made under these instructions the Department, on being informed of such seizure, will consider the case and extend such measure of relief as the facts shall justify.

In the States of Virginia, Tennessee, and Louisiana collection districts were some time since established, with such boundaries as to include territory in which it has but recently become possible to enforce the laws of the United States. In those districts the rule laid down above will be so modified as to require the assessment and collection of the first taxes which become due after the establishment of assessment divisions in the particular locality.

Whenever assessments are to be made based upon transactions which may have been carried on in a depreciated currency, it will be proper for the assessor to ascertain the amount of the income or value or sales or receipts in lawful money of the United States, according to the best information which he can obtain as to the average value of such depreciated currency for the period covered by the assessment.

The duties upon cotton and spirits of turpentine are, by a special provision of the statutue, made payable by the person in whose hands the articles are first found by officers of internal revenue. With reference to those articles, therefore, the rule laid down will not apply, but assessments will be made wherever they are found.

Whenever any person holds, as a purchaser, any articles which under the internal-revenue laws may be transported under bond, and desires to transport the same to any Northern port or place, he may apply to the assessor to have the amount of tax ascertained or determined. The proper examination having been had, the assessor will certify the amount of duties thereon to the collector, and the collector will thereupon grant a permit for their removal, after the execution of a bond for their storage in bonded warehouse, such permit and bond being in the form required by the regulations for the establishment of bonded warehouses. On or before the tenth day of each month the assessor will transmit to the Office of Internal Revenue a statement showing the amount of duties thus certified during the month preceding, and the collector will, on or before the same date, transmit a descriptive schedule of all bonds thus taken by him in the course of the preceding month.

When goods arrive in any Northern port under such transportation bond or under a permit issued by a collector of customs, under the regulations of May 9, 1865, they will be received into the proper warehouse, established under the internal-revenue laws, in the district into which the goods are brought, and the necessary certificates will be issued for the cancellation of the bond, in the same manner as if the goods were transported from another bonded warehouse. Whenever any person who is assessed for a license is found to have paid a license tax to a special agent, appointed under the regulations of the Treasury Department for commercial intercourse with insurrectionary districts, the collector will issue a license for the year ending May 1, 1866, and will collect only so much as may be due for the time intervening after the expiration of the license issued by the special agent.

The amount assessed and thus left uncollected will be abated when the proper claim is presented to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

H. McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

The eighth paragraph of these regulations distinctly provides that in districts where it has but recently become possible to enforce the laws of the United States, the rule shall be to require the assessment and collection of the first taxes which become due after the establishment of assessment divisions in the particular locality.

The report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shows that assessment divisions and assistant assessors for these divisions were established and appointed as follows: For the county of Williamson, June 30, 1864; for the county of Rutherford, August 30, 1864; for the county of Bedford, January 1, 1865; and for the county of Warren, September 8, 1865.

Under the provisions of section 91 of the act of July 1, 1862, the annual tax on incomes was leviable and collectible on the 1st of May for the year ending 31st December preceding.

And under joint resolution of July 4, 1864, the special tax on incomes for 1863 was leviable and collectible on the 1st October, 1864.

The first taxes that could become due in these counties under the provisions of the eighth paragraph of Regulations Special No. 16 were the taxes for the counties of Williamson and Rutherford for the year ending December 31, 1864, to be assessed and collected on 1st May, 1865, assessment divisions having not been established in these counties until June 30, 1864, in the first, and August 30, 1864, in the latter; and for the counties of Bedford and Warren the taxes for the year ending December 31, 1865, leviable and collectible on the 1st May, 1866, assessment divisions having been established in these counties January 1 and September 8, 1865.

It is a historical fact that from some time in March, 1862, to the close of the war the city of Nashville was continuously held by a garrison of the United States Army, and that the battle in front of Nashville occurred on the 16th of December, 1864, and that the counties of Williamson, Rutherford, Bedford, and Warren were alternately held, sometimes by the one and sometimes by the other belligerent.

The condition of affairs being such as to render it impossible to enforce the laws of the United States by any civil process until the beginning of the year 1865, the civil authorities being paralyzed, and the citizen powerless, he promptly complied with whatever demands were made upon him by any real or pretended official when backed by military power.

Taxes for the year 1863, in the respective amounts named in the bill, were assessed against and collected from the parties named, in the years 1864 and 1865, the assessment and the collections having been made by parties running out into the country under military protection and making their demands, and immediately returning to the garrison.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue reports that claims for refunding these taxes were filed in his office prior to June, 1873, and therefore claimants are not barred by the forty-fourth section of the act of June 6, 1872, 17 Statutes., page 257.

In June, 1873, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue submitted these claims to the then Secretary of the Treasury for consideration and advice. And on the 19th June, 1873, Secretary Richardson returned the claims to the Commissioner, with the opinion that the collections were not illegal, and therefore could not be refunded by the Department, but in his letter said:

"I fully recognize the hardship of the case, and desire that such claimants may receive relief from Congress. I have therefore to suggest that you will, in your next annual report, or on any other occasion which you may deem more fitting, recommend the passage of a special act authorizing the refunding of all taxes paid by residents of the insurrectionary States, which under the Department circular of June 21, 1865, should not have been collected. Such refunding to be made whether the tax in question was collected before or after the issue of the circular."

In this recommendation Secretary Richardson evidently recognized the hardship and injustice of the Government demanding taxes from citizens whom it did not and could not protect.

Every consideration of justice demands that these taxes, collected as they were in violation of the principles of the eighth paragraph of Special Regulation No. 16, should be refunded.

Mr. MATSON. I move to amend the bill by inserting, after the name of Benjamin Batey, in line 26, the name of "William Bosson." This name was by some clerical error omitted in copying the bill which passed a former Congress. It has been inserted in the Senate bill corresponding with this. There is no question about this man's loyalty.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that this bill applies only to taxes assessed and collected prior to June 21, 1865.

Mr. BUCHANAN. These taxes were collected for 1863. The report shows the circumstances accurately.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. Should not the bill be amended so as to instruct the Secretary of the Treasury instead of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to pay this money? The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has no money at his disposal for purposes of this kind.

Mr. DIBRELL. I will state that the Senate bill, which in this respect corresponds with the bill now pending, was prepared, under the direction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, by one of the Senators from Tennessee.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. How much money does this bill involve?

Mr. BUCHANAN. About $15,000.

Mr. HOUK. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Does any one know how much money this bill appropriates?

Mr. McMILLIN. The amount is about $15,000. The Senate bill corresponding with this, which is now on the Speaker's table I believe, indicates in dollars and cents the amount to be paid in each case. When we get into the House the Senate bill, if gentlemen are willing, can be substituted for this; then the exact amount appropriated in each case will appear.

Mr. MILLER. How does it come that this bill has not been presented before this time?

Mr. McMILLIN. The bill has been on the Private Calendar for several months, but we have not had this Calendar under consideration for ten weeks.

Mr. RANDALL. This bill was reported on the 27th of January last.

Mr. MILLER. When were these taxes paid?

Mr. McMILLIN. Soon after the war.

Mr. MILLER. Then why have these parties waited eighteen years before asking relief?

Mr. McMILLIN. They did not wait eighteen years; they have been asking relief for a number of years past, and there has never been an adverse report on any of these claims.

Mr. DIBRELL. A bill for this purpose has been pending in every Congress for some years.

Mr. MILLER. And no Congress has thought sufficiently well of it to pass it. I think that a good reason why this Congress should hesitate about passing it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the gentleman had heard the report read he would have understood the reason of the delay.

Mr. McCOID. I suggest that the report be read again. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. These claims were filed prior to June, 1873.

Mr. HOUK. I move to amend by adding as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby invested with full power and authority, and is instructed to remit, refund, and pay back, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, all moneys collected under like circumstances; and he shall be the sole judge of the merits of each case which may be presented.

Mr. Chairman, if we are going to pay back money in any cases of this kind, we ought to pay it back to all persons from whom it has been collected under similar circumstances. The Secretary of the Treasury has the records; he knows the circumstances; he is familiar with these transactions where money has been collected in violation of law, as is alleged to have been the fact in these cases. While I am perfectly willing to vote for this bill to make repayment upon the report which has been made, I think we ought not to commence to pay back by piecemeal; we ought to make provision for doing justice to everybody who has been wronged under like circumstances. Hence I have submitted the amendment.

Mr. DIBRELL. Does the gentleman know of any cases similar to those included in this bill?

Mr. HOUK. Yes, sir.

Mr. DIBRELL. Where income tax was collected during the war?

Mr. HOUK. Yes, sir; similar cases existed throughout the country in various other counties.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I doubt not that relief will be granted in those cases whenever the parties come forward and show that they are entitled to it.

Mr. HOUK. While we are making provision to do justice to a number of citizens, I think it only fair that we should do justice to all who have been wronged by the collection of taxes under similar circumstances. I believe this House is perfectly willing to trust the Secretary of the Treasury. He can judge of it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to ask my colleague whether the Commissioner of Internal-Revenue has recommended the refunding in those cases he refers to, as he has in this case?

Mr. HOUK. We cannot tell you how that is in reference to every case, but we presume he would; at least the Secretary of the Treasury will not pay them back unless they come within the provisions of this act.

Mr. McMILLIN. He said that there were claims of a similar character, and I wanted to know from him how far that similarity went.

Mr. HOUK. I undertake to say there are similar claims all over the Southern part of the country, and I want to make the provisions of this bill so that these claims shall be provided for and paid according to the right and merit of each one. To be sure the amendment was drawn hurriedly, and perhaps it is not as perfect as it should be. We are all willing, I apprehend, if the records are in the Treasury, to allow the Secretary to look into them and ascertain whether there are other cases coming within the provisions of this bill. If there are they ought to be paid as well as this particular claim should be paid. It seems to me the amendment is perfectly right and just, and ought to be adopted.

Mr. MILLER. I think, Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee is eminently proper. Instead, however, of putting the power in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury it should be put in the hands of one of the fourth-class clerks. It is undoubtedly true, as stated in this report, the assessment and collection of this tax was legal. That is what the Secretary of the Treasury has said, and it is contained in the report.

But that is no difference; and whenever there is a man who wants these taxes back, and wherever he knows they have been legally assessed and legally collected, we can provide that the Secretary of the Treasury or one of his clerks after investigation, if he finds the man wants them back badly enough, then pay them back. That will stop all this private legislation, and we will not have to consider bills to pay back taxes paid eighteen years ago. Adopt that amendment by all means. It is a very proper one for claimants of this class.

During the first part of this Congress men drawing $5,000 a year considered a question which had been before three Congresses relative to paying back $87 to some man up in New Hampshire who had paid a duty on a yoke of oxen he bought over in Canada, and who forgot to take his appeal in time, or rather the lawyer he employed forgot to do so. And because that man neglected a plain duty and forgot to take an appeal, gentlemen drawing $5,000 salary a year sat on that case and expended about $2,000 in getting that man paid back $87. He could not get an appeal in any justice's court in the country. He had a given time in which to take an appeal, but he forgot to take it, and he came here and we relieved him. If we are to relieve all these people who eighteen years ago paid taxes legally collected, what is the use of Congress passing on them one by one? If we are to pass them, then the amendment is a proper one, and all should be paid at once. As the gentleman from Tennessee has said, invest the power in some one and let him examine them and pay them back.

Mr. BRAGG. What I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, is this: if this amendment is adopted this becomes a public bill and belongs to another calendar. It passes from the Private to the Public Calendar, and is not subject to consideration by this committee. It was for that reason I suggested a point of order would lie against it. The amendment changes the entire character of the bill and makes it a public bill relating to all persons of every kind who paid taxes illegally.

Mr. HASKELL. Under what rule?

Mr. HOLMAN. The rule is that you cannot substitute a general for a special bill.

Mr. BRAGG. It has been decided ever since I have been a member of this House that public business could not be transacted while we were engaged on the Private Calendar, nor could public bills be considered or acted on. It has been the uniform rule. There never has been any diversion from it.

Mr. HASKELL. Give us the rule.

Mr. BRAGG. Rules cannot be made to comply with the freaks of everybody, but the practice under a rule establishes the meaning of the rule. If, as suggested by the intimation of the gentleman from Kansas, this may be done, we can take up the Uncompahgre land question in Kansas and dispose of it here. He may offer it as an amendment to any one of these bills.

Mr. HOUK. The gentleman fails to show how my amendment can change this private bill into a public one. These taxes have been paid, and it simply enlarges the scope of the original bill by providing that it shall cover these similar cases. It merely makes it reach out and take up other cases. That applies only to a specific class of citizens from whom the tax has been collected, and which this report says ought to have it paid back, and I fail to see how it can be transformed now and become a public act simply because it is made applicable to a number of citizens instead of a few who are mentioned in the pending bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. The gentleman from Tennessee himself has furnished the best reason in the world why his amendment should not be adopted. He has stated that it was hastily drawn. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a matter, as has been clearly stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend for a moment. The Chair desires the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin as to the point of order.

Mr. HENDERSON. Permit me to finish only a sentence. I simply say that the amendment really is in the nature of a general law, as stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin in making his point of order; and therefore it occurs to me that it is not properly in order here. When the cases come up let each one of them stand upon its individual merits, and not attempt to incorporate them into a general law on a private bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin insist upon his point of order?

Mr. BRAGG. I do.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I think the objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, as far as the point of order is concerned, has been clearly expressed by the gentleman from Wisconsin—that it changes this provision of a private bill into a general law as much as any act that is now upon the statute-book. The gentleman from Tennessee says that it applies to only a certain class. So, too, do all general laws apply to certain classes which come within the purview of the law. Murderers are a class, but the law punishing the crime of murder is a general law.

There is another objection to this amendment. It is that it does not define the persons who are to be the recipients of the benefits of the act should it become a law; and consequently, so far as the amendment is concerned, it cannot be in order on a private bill, nor can it claim to be a private matter. It must identify the recipients of the bounty of the Government in order to be enabled to confer the bounty upon these applicants. Here, however, there is no specific application.

There is a third objection, and that is that the persons not mentioned who are to be the recipients of this bounty, but who are indicated in the amendment in general terms, do not come themselves within the scope of the right which belongs to those that are mentioned specifically in the bill that is now pending before the committee. Why? The persons intimated in the amendment are barred by the statutes of limitations. Their claims are barred and there is no claim existing which they can now enforce.

Mr. HOUK. Are not the claims of those mentioned in this bill barred also?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No, sir; the report shows that. If they had been barred that report would not have been written. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue reports that the claims mentioned for refunding these taxes were filed in his office prior to June, 1873, and therefore claimants are not barred by the forty-fourth section of the act of June 6, 1872.

Mr. HOUK. If that be true, then everybody who has a proper claim can get his money refunded under the provisions of the amendment which I have offered; for the amendment provides that it shall be refunded to those who come under similar circumstances and conditions as those mentioned in this bill. Unless they come under its conditions they are excluded.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Well, it is evident that those persons have not done so.

Mr. PRESCOTT. May I ask the gentleman from Georgia a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Why are not all these claims covered by the general bill which we passed to-day providing for the consideration and allowance of such claims?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That bill has not yet been passed. It has to go through the Senate and meet the approval of the Executive.

Mr. PRESCOTT. It passed the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, but not the Senate, and has not been approved by the President, and may never be approved by him. The claims will then have to come back here and go to the Court of Claims.

So far as the facts here are concerned I cannot enter into that now, as the point of order must first be disposed of. If there is any further argument necessary upon the main report I am ready to speak to this and explain the bill at the proper time.

Mr. PRESCOTT. From all that the gentleman has said and from all that appears here, this is a large class of claims covered fully by the act which we passed here to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to inform the gentleman from New York that the question before the committee is upon the point of order. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order. We are now in Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar under the provisions of Rule XXVI. This amendment, as offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, would in effect establish a general law, and is not in the nature of a private act. It is therefore, in the judgment of the Chair, obnoxious to the point of order and cannot be entertained.

Mr. HOUK. If the Committee of the Whole will rise I will move to transfer it to the other Calendar.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I was saying that this seems to be one of those claims, of which there is a large number, covered by the act which we passed to-day, and which we all expect will become a law.

Mr. DIBRELL. The bill passed to-day had reference to war claims.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I say according to this bill there seems to be a very large number of these claims. It may be there are equities and justice in it; and if there are not, we certainly should not pass the bill. If there are, then no one can object to having these claims scrutinized by a court as provided for by that act. I ask whether it would not be judicious to-day to fail to consider this favorably that these claims may be analyzed and determined upon by a body that can know something of them, and of the justice, equity, and legality of them?

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PRESCOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is it not the fact that that has not become a law? And would he now destroy this Private Calendar with all of its reports, and refuse to consider any claim upon it because it might be embraced in that and considered in the Court of Claims if that bill should become a law?

Mr. PRESCOTT. I will only say in reply to the gentleman, the probabilities are that the bill will become a law before this can become a law by passage here.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will say I have no constituent interested in this, although it comes from a State I in part represent. But I do think that when the Secretary of the Treasury has recommended that certain taxes ought to be refunded, and when there is no officer of the Government who has ever denied the justice of the claim, when the Secretary has said in the strong language here—

> I fully recognize the hardship of the case and desire that such claimants may receive relief from Congress—

If that Secretary knew what he was talking about, this Congress cannot do itself justice in refusing a hearing to the claimants, because, forsooth, we have passed a bill through the House to-day that may never become a law.

I want to call the attention of the committee to another fact. And that is that long before the bill we acted upon an hour ago was reported to the House there was a bill on this Calendar for the relief of these people; that long before that bill was conceived in any man's brain there was a favorable report from the committee on this bill standing here.

Here are claims against whose justice not a man in the Government has ever offered a single objection; claims that are well founded and in whose favor the Secretary of the Treasury has written the strong words I have just quoted. And I say we ought not to refuse these men relief simply because they might have a remedy in a tribunal if that tribunal were ever constituted.

Mr. WARNER. I would say further to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PRESCOTT] that this bill passed the Senate unanimously six weeks ago, long before the general bill the gentleman speaks of passed the House to-day. The report in this case was made by the Committee on Claims last January. A favorable report was also made in the Senate, and the Senate bill six weeks ago came to this House and stands six weeks ahead of the one that passed to-day. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue recommends that these claims shall be paid. They are just and proper.

It is wrong to say that this relief shall not be extended to these citizens. They are loyal citizens, and you do them injustice if you withhold relief from them. For eighteen years the Government has had their money. They have had no interest during all those years. The money has been used by the Government. They ask for no interest. The claims are particularly set forth in the bill. Many of the amounts are small.

These citizens could not go into the court which has been spoken of even if it were established. The claims are too small; it would not pay the expenses to take them there. This is the first bill I have had before the House, and it has been here on the Calendar for twenty solid weeks. It is now the first bill on the Calendar; and I think it is due to these parties that they should get back their money some time. They are loyal citizens, and as loyal citizens they ought to get it.

Mr. RAY. Is this the same bill as I find on page 64 of the Calendar, in the list of bills from the Senate on their first and second reading—"A bill for the relief of certain citizens of Tennessee?"

Mr. WARNER. It is the same bill, the bill S. No. 1068.

Mr. NORCROSS. Why not move to substitute the Senate bill for this?

Mr. McMILLIN. There is a difference between the two bills, and the difference I understand is this: the Senate bill takes the precaution to set out the exact amount for each claimant, so there may be no doubt when you come to settle as to the amount to be given to each. In the House we can substitute that for the House bill if any member prefers it. We are willing to make the substitution.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The name and amount in each case are given in the Senate bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think when we go back into the House the Senate bill ought to be substituted, so that there may be no doubt about it.

Mr. RAY. I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BUCHANAN,] who I see reported this from the Committee on Claims. I do not recollect all the circumstances. I do not know that I was present when the bill was offered and considered in the committee. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue have recommended that these amounts be paid by the Government?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have quoted in the report from the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury; and I have the letter in full on my desk, if any one desires to see it. In the report I have made this quotation from the letter of the Secretary:

I fully recognize the hardship of the case, and desire that such claims may receive relief from Congress.

These men are identically specified in his letter.

I have therefore to suggest that you will, in your next annual report, or on any other occasion which you may deem more fitting, recommend the passage of a special act authorizing the refunding of all taxes paid by residents of the insurrectionary States, which, under the Department circular of June 21, 1865—

Which I have set forth in full in the report—should not have been collected. Such refunding to be made whether the tax in question was collected before or after the issue of the circular.

That is the letter of Secretary Richardson.

Mr. RAY. That explanation is satisfactory to me. I now wish to say a word, partially in reply to two of my friends on this side of the House, my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] and my friend from New York, [Mr. PRESCOTT.]

Let me remark that I think this House will make a great deal more progress, and better progress, toward the accomplishment of the public business or the private business before it if members when they get up in the House and undertake to object to or to favor claims would take pains to know more about them than some seem to do. Let me ask whether it is seriously claimed as a reason why the House should not now consider and act upon a claim which has been favorably considered and reported several times by committees of one or the other branch of Congress, and which has passed the Senate or the House, and perhaps both, but not concurrently, and which after an investigation by the Committee on Claims of the present House has been unanimously and favorably reported—was it ever before seriously suggested that because the House had passed a bill authorizing its committees to send private claims to the Court of Claims to find the facts concerning them that a claim in regard to which the facts have already been found and reported should not be considered but be indefinitely postponed to see whether the bill alluded to shall become a law? Of course not. The bill just passed is to enable committees of this House, in reference to other claims which have not been investigated, to call in the aid of the Court of Claims, so that there may be a judicial investigation of such claims not already considered and reported upon, and which are so tangled up in reference to the facts upon which they are founded and the evidence adduced in their support as to render it practically impossible for a committee of this House to come to a satisfactory determination upon their merits.

This is apparently one of that class of claims which have been investigated times enough, and which, if we have any confidence in the opinion of a Secretary of the Treasury and in the Commissioners of Internal Revenue, ought to be disposed of without further delay. Indeed, it appears that those officers would have adjusted these claims of their own motion except for the reason that they were destitute of the power and authority to do so, and hence have recommended that Congress should act upon them. And still we have some men here who say that because the House has passed a bill which, if it becomes a law, will hereafter enable committees of Congress, when they see fit to do so, to send private claims to the Court of Claims in order to obtain a finding of the facts, therefore action upon this bill should be indefinitely delayed. Are not all the facts in this case found in the committee's report? Then why delay action upon it? Why not consider it at once and either pass or reject it?

Mr. PRESCOTT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RAY. Certainly.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Where in this bill do you find any indication of who are to be paid or how much they are to be paid? Where do you find any means of determining or any power of determining what shall be paid?

Mr. BUCHANAN. There is no trouble about that. This bill says that such amounts shall be paid to these persons as they have paid into the Treasury. If this bill shall pass all that these persons will have to do will be to take the act of Congress to the Treasury, and such sums as have been paid into the Treasury by these individuals as shown by the records of the Treasury will be paid to them.

Mr. PRESCOTT. But should not that all have been set out in the report, so that gentlemen on this floor could learn from reading the report what were the facts in the case, and not be criticised for their ignorance?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is not necessary to do so; they could not get a dollar that does not appear on the records of the Treasury as having been paid in by them.

Mr. RAY. The gentleman starts a new objection, not the one that he raised before.

Mr. PRESCOTT. It is not a new objection.

Mr. RAY. It is one that occurred to me at the time, and I took the trouble to ascertain whether this was the same as the Senate bill.

Now, I grant that there may be a bill drawn with such looseness and uncertainty that it should be amended or it ought not to be passed. But if we can find out who was compelled to pay this money, have their names set forth in the bill, as it appears we can do in the House, after we go out of Committee of the Whole, by substituting the Senate bill for this bill, or by adding the names and amounts contained in the similar bill which has already passed the Senate, there would seem to be no reason why such a bill should not be passed.

And now I want to pay my respects for a moment or two to my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MILLER,] who, while he certainly well understands contested-election cases, is not so familiar with business before the Committee on Claims as some of the rest of us may be. He alludes to the claim of Luther made for the value of a yoke of oxen taken by the custom-house officer, as he says, in the State of Vermont. He is only one State out of the way; it was in my State, the State of New Hampshire, away up in the northern part among the White Mountains. He said the claim was for $75, in which he is wrong again; it was for $85; and seems to think it is small business for men paid a salary, as he says, of $5,000 a year to have to consider and legislate about such trivial matters.

Now, I have known bigger men than some members of Congress, and earning greater salaries than $5,000 per annum, to be in a great deal smaller business than trying to get Congress to refund money which had been unlawfully collected of a citizen and covered into the Treasury of the United States, especially when the Secretary of the Treasury reports that the money cannot be paid back again in any other way than by an act of Congress, and recommends the passage of such an act.

It is no reason why an honest claim should not be passed because it is small in amount or that it has been a long time pending. Gentlemen talk about the expense which attends the passing of these claims. They get that from some of the newspapers. I suppose members' salaries and the pay of most of the House employés go on all the same whether we are in session or not. All the expense in the matter of the Luther claim will not amount to $150, in my opinion. There was never any dispute about the absolute justice of the claim. The Secretary of the Treasury referred the claim to Congress and recommended that it should be paid. It was not the fault of the claimant in that case that he did not get the money back for eleven long years after Government wrongfully got it, but it was the fault of Congress. The money which he had deposited with the collector was sent here to Washington and put into the Treasury.

I think it is a shame that a man should not be able to get a just claim of $85, which the Government admits belongs to him, without being obliged to come here and call for it eleven years before an act is passed to refund his money.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I move to amend the bill by striking out the words "Commissioner of Internal Revenue," in line 3 of the bill, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of the Treasury." If we pass this bill as it now stands we shall lay ourselves open to the charge of careless legislation. The bill proposes to direct the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to refund a certain sum of money in the Treasury of the United States. Now, we all know that the money in the Treasury is not to be handled or paid out under the direction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, but is in charge of the Secretary of the Treasury; hence the bill should be corrected by the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. MILLER. In reply to the remarks of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. RAY] I will say that I only cited the case of the refunding of $85 to a claimant from New Hampshire in order to show that this House is called upon to legislate upon cases where the claimants have neglected to perform their duty at the proper time. The report in the case from the gentleman's State showed as the reason the money had not been already refunded that the party had not taken an appeal within the statutory period. For that reason he came to this House and we considered his case. At that time we were sitting here about four hours a day. I am told by persons who have the means of knowing that the expenses of this House are about $10,000 a day. We spent on that case in this House about twenty minutes; and any one can compute what it cost to pay back that sum of $87 because the party had not performed his duty at the proper time.

In the case now before us certain citizens paid a tax which was legally assessed against them. The Secretary of the Treasury, in the very letter which was read and which is printed in the report, states that the collections were not illegal and therefore would not be refunded. What are we doing here? We are sitting here to refund to persons whose names are not given in the bill sums of money which are not designated and the exact amount of which we do not know. The chairman of this committee says he cannot tell us; gentlemen on the floor cannot tell us. We are sitting here to pass a bill of this kind to refund taxes which, as the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury shows, were not illegally collected.

More than that: these taxes were paid in 1865. These claims have slumbered until almost everybody who knew anything about them has died. I observe that many of the claims that come here are, as respects age, almost or quite old enough to vote. The claims are often held back until the claimants themselves are dead; and I believe in this case the heirs of certain parties are substituted.

Mr. RAY. Is it the fault of the claimants that the money has not been paid before?

Mr. MILLER. It is the fault of the claimants that they do not come here in time; that they slumber on their claims until every person knowing anything of the facts of the case is dead. I want to cite a case stated to me by my colleague [Mr. CAMPBELL] who sits next to me. He was a commander in the Union Army in West Virginia upon one of the branches of the Potomac.

In 1882 the Quartermaster-General sent him a claim which had been filed and regularly proved to be examined and reported on. The amount claimed was over $20,000. The claim was all made up; the evidence was apparently complete; but he was written to in order to ascertain what he knew about it. The claim was for wood claimed to have been furnished to General Campbell's command. The claimants swore that they had furnished so many cords of wood. The evidence proved apparently that it had been delivered upon the order of the general in command. When General Campbell came to look at the case he found as a fact that the wood claimed to have been furnished to him must have been cut upon the opposite side of the river, must have been hauled two miles up the river to the ferry, and then hauled down to his camp, and yet it was a fact that he had been obliged to cut away the woods in order to establish his camp. He had not used a cord or a stick of wood furnished by these parties; there had not been a stick cut or delivered to him. Yet that claim was all made up in due form ready for payment. That is a sample.

I do not expect my speech will defeat this bill. I have learned in this House that about as good a way as any other to pass a bill is to oppose it. I recollect that when I opposed one day a bill of my friend from Maine—I only spoke five minutes—when the question was taken there were but six votes in the negative. If I had spoken a minute longer there would not have been any vote against it but my own. [Laughter.] I have no doubt that this bill will pass, because there are probably one hundred men on this floor, each one having his little bill in which his constituents are interested, and he thinks that unless it is passed he will never come back here. Thus members "log-roll" in order to get their bills through. This is no way to do business. Pass this bill if you choose. I care nothing about it. But I want to go on the record against it and against this whole system. I hope that the people will "ring the changes" in the ears of gentlemen of this Congress and other Congresses until they cease this business and get down to legitimate legislation for the country instead of sitting as a court of justice (and very small court at that) to pass such claims as this.

Mr. DE MOTTE. I wish to ask the gentleman having charge of this bill how large an amount of money is involved?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Between $15,000 and $17,000. The Senate bill shows the exact amount.

Mr. DE MOTTE. I was about to ask whether there was any bill specifying the precise amount.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir; the Senate bill does that.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SMITH, of Illinois, to strike out "Commissioner of Internal Revenue" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury," it was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move that the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to, there being—ayes 54, noes 21.

SAMUEL O. UPHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 688) for the relief of Samuel O. Upham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $414.10, to be placed to the credit of the Post-Office Department, and the proper accounting officers of the Post-Office Department are hereby directed to credit Samuel O. Upham, of Waltham, Massachusetts, in his account as postmaster, with the same, it being for loss sustained by robbery of his office on the night of the 9th of September, 1879, but without fault or neglect on the part of said postmaster.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is covered by the general law, and I move that it be reported to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

MORGAN RAWLS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2136) for the relief of Morgan Rawls.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $800 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay Morgan Rawls, of the State of Georgia, for a dwelling-house taken from the village of Guyton, Georgia, in the latter part of the year 1865, by order of the United States officer in command at Savannah, Georgia, through mistake for a Confederate building.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2136) for the relief of Morgan Rawls, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

During the late war a number of buildings were erected by the confederate authorities, for hospitals and quartermaster and commissary stores, at the village of Guyton, State of Georgia. Standing between and near these buildings was a small unoccupied dwelling-house belonging to Morgan Rawls, of the value of $800, not estimating the ground on which it stood. In the fall of 1865, during the absence of said Rawls while in attendance upon the constitutional covention of said State and as a member of said convention, and after he had taken the oath known as the "amnesty oath," a detail of United States soldiers was sent to Guyton, by the United States military authorities, from Savannah, with instructions to take down and remove said confederate buildings to Savannah, the materials to be used in the construction of school-houses for freedmen. In executing said instructions said soldiers destroyed by mistake said house belonging to Rawls. Said Rawls endeavored to obtain from the military authorities at Savannah compensation for his loss, but was never paid. A bill similar to this for his relief was introduced in the Forty-third Congress, and also in the Forty-fourth Congress, but no report was made in either Congress upon the bill.

The committee report the bill back with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. BROWNE. We are to have a session to-night, and I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. VALENTINE reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had the Private Calendar under consideration, and had directed him to report back sundry bills with various recommendations.

EVENING SESSION ORDER.

Mr. BROWNE. There has been some difficulty in construing the order for the session this evening, so far as it relates to Senate bills donating condemned cannon and cannon balls. I ask it be amended so as to allow those bills to be taken from the Speaker's table and acted on this evening. The Speaker pro tempore last Friday ruled otherwise.

The SPEAKER. The present incumbent of the chair thinks the ruling was correct. Such order should be strictly construed. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN CITIZENS OF TENNESSEE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 1633) for the relief of certain citizens of Tennessee, of Bedford, Rutherford, and other counties.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask by unanimous consent that be laid aside, and the bill (S. No. 1068) for the relief of certain citizens of Tennessee be substituted for it.

Mr. MILLER. I object.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope my friend will not object. The Senate bill makes it more certain.

Mr. DIBRELL. I make a parliamentary inquiry. Does it require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands objection is withdrawn. The Chair further understands this bill is the same in substance.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it be read.

Mr. DIBRELL. It gives all the names and amounts.

Mr. HOLMAN. It covers an amount only of $15,000 as I understand.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. There was an amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole House to substitute "the Secretary of the Treasury" for "the Commissioner of Internal Revenue."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. That will send it back to the Senate.

The Senate bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUCHANAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BUCHANAN, the House bill was then laid on the table.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand the amendment to the House bill was accepted to the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The Senate bill was passed.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is right as it is.

SAMUEL O. UPHAM.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. No. 688) for the relief of Samuel O. Upham is reported back with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It is a bill in reference to the robbery of a post-office. My colleague, [Mr. BOWMAN,] who has it in charge, is absent, and it may not fall within the provisions of the general law. I ask therefore it be passed over for the present.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to print in the RECORD some remarks on the sundry civil appropriation bill. [See Appendix.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. HARDENBERGH until Monday next, on account of important business.

To Mr. STEPHENS for ten days, to attend the annual meeting of the board of trustees of the University of Georgia, of which he is a member.

CORRECTION.

Mr. HOUK. I desire to make a correction. On the 10th of this month——

Mr. BRAGG. I would like to ask how this proceeding can go on with the motion to adjourn pending?

Mr. HOUK. I understood the gentleman to give way to correct the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman as insisting upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BRAGG. I do insist upon it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will understand that at five o'clock the House is to take a recess until eight.

Mr. BRAGG. My motion to adjourn was with a view to avoiding the recess.

Mr. BROWNE. I hope the motion to adjourn will be voted down.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HOUK. I desire now, Mr. Speaker, to correct the RECORD and the Journal. On the 10th day of July I reported from the Committee on War Claims some bills with favorable recommendations, one of which was for the relief of Ed. Wallace. Both in the RECORD and on the Calendar this is printed "Edward Wells." I ask that the correction be made.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the hour has now arrived when, under the standing order of the House, a recess must be taken.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] will occupy the chair during the evening session as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chair now declares the House in recess until 8 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired the House reassembled at eight o'clock p. m., Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the order under which the House meets to-night.

The Clerk read as follows:

The order of the House heretofore made directing evening sessions to be held on Fridays for the consideration of pension bills is so amended as to allow bills upon the Speaker's table granting condemned cannon and balls to be taken up for consideration.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. BROWNE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 3660) granting a pension to James Johnson; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PATRICK DRONEY.

Mr. BROWNE also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 718) granting a pension to Patrick Droney, with amendments.

Mr. BROWNE. I ask consent of the House for the present consideration of this bill. This case is one that is somewhat peculiar in its nature.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Patrick Droney, son of Matthew Droney, late a private marine in the United States Navy.

Mr. BROWNE. Let the amendments suggested by the Committee on Invalid Pensions be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, in lines 4 and 5, the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and add at the end of the bill the words "and pay him a pension of $8 per month from and after the passage of this act."

Mr. BROWNE. The circumstances in this case are briefly these: the father of Patrick Droney was killed in the line of duty in the naval service of the United States. Subsequently to his death the widow and the mother of the beneficiary of this bill received a pension, drew it for some time, and died. Patrick Droney is over the age of sixteen years, but he has been from the cradle a helpless invalid, dependent wholly upon the father during his lifetime, and upon the little pension of the mother during her lifetime. He has no relatives capable of rendering him any assistance whatever. He is now in the common poor-house in the State of Massachusetts. The committee believe he is a dependent child, more so in fact than if he had been under the age of sixteen. And under the circumstances we thought the dependent child of a soldier who lost his life in the service of his country should not be in the poor-house, but is a proper subject for the bounty of the Government.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I introduced the bill in behalf of this boy in December last, and if the members of this House could see him for a moment they would be entirely satisfied that he is utterly helpless and needs the care of somebody. He has no friends capable of helping him. He is a helpless cripple. I have known him ever since his father went into the service of his country, and during the lifetime of his mother. They live in my town and I know the facts in his case, which are certainly such as to warrant the belief that this is an exceedingly meritorious case. I hope the bill will be passed. His friends and relatives are very poor and were unable to support him, and they had to take him to the poor-house, where he now is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendments reported from the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BROWNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EMMA H. COLLINS.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (S. No. 984) increasing the pension of Emma H. Collins.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill was read. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Emma H. Collins, widow of Frederick Collins, late a lieutenant in the United States Navy, a pension at the rate of $40 a month during her widowhood, and from the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORINEL GILLETTE.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 6623) granting a pension to Orinel Gillette; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARGARET BEYMER.

Mr. CULLEN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. No. 604) granting a pension to Margaret Beymer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Margaret Beymer, widow of Elias J. Beymer, late lieutenant and adjutant of the One hundred and thirty-sixth Illinois Volunteers, and acting deputy provost-marshal of the eleventh Congressional district in the State of Illinois, and pay her a pension at the rate of $17 a month.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CULLEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH F. WILSON.

Mr. CULLEN also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. No. 6249) granting an increase of pension to Joseph F. Wilson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the amendment and report ordered to be printed.

DONATIONS OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. SPAULDING. I desire to report back from the Committee on Military Affairs with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 6679) donating condemned cannon to the town of Hatfield, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes, and ask that it be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BROWNE. I do not object; but it is a question whether, under the order of the House, this report can be received.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is inclined to think that the amendment made on April 14th on the motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JOYCE] to the special order, so as to make it include the consideration of bills granting condemned cannon, would allow the report to be made.

Mr. BROWNE. I have no objection.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPAULDING also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 6692) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cannon-balls and muskets for the soldiers' burial ground at Maquoketa, Iowa; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPAULDING also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 6718) to donate two condemned cannon and twelve cannon-balls to the A. E. Burnside Post No. 109 Grand Army of the Republic, of South Chicago, Illinois; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPAULDING also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 6695) granting four condemned cast-iron cannon to the post of the Grand Army of the Republic at Peabody, Massachusetts; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPAULDING also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 6721) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to Edward Pye Post No. 179 of the Grand Army of the Republic, four condemned iron cannon and four cannon-balls, for decorating the proposed soldiers' monument at Haverstraw, New York; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. No. 2057) granting condemned cannon, &c., to the city of Marshalltown, Iowa.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to deliver, if the same can be done without detriment to the Government, to the city of Marshalltown, Iowa, four condemned cast-iron cannon and twenty cannon-balls, to be placed on a monument to be erected in memory of deceased soldiers in the Marshalltown cemetery.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. At the request of my colleague, [Mr. FISHER,] who is necessarily absent to-night, I ask to take from the Private Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6149) donating condemned cannon for monumental purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, if the same can be done without prejudice to the public service, to deliver to the Soldiers' Monument Association of Chambersburgh, Pennsylvania, four condemned guns, to be used for monumental purposes.

The bill was reported with the following amendment:

In line 6, after the word "condemned," insert the word "cast-iron."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I offer the following additional amendment:

Add at the end of the bill the following:

"Also to the soldiers' monument at Lancaster, Pennsylvania, four condemned cannon and four cannon-balls, for mouumental purposes."

Mr. PRESCOTT. The word "cast-iron" should be inserted there also.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection that word will be inserted.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. CRAPO. I move to amend the bill by adding that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Also to William Logan Rodman Post No. 1 Grand Army of the Republic, four condemned cast-iron cannon, to be placed in their place of burial in the city of New Bedford, Massachusetts.

Also, to the post of the Grand Army at Fall River, Massachusetts, four condemned cast-iron cannon, to be placed in their cemetery lot in said city.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. I move to amend the bill by adding the following:

Also to grant four condemned cast-iron cannon with iron balls to Post No. 82 of the Grand Army of the Republic at Marblehead, Massachusetts.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I suggest that the gentleman should add "for monumental purposes."

Mr. STONE. I modify the amendment by adding "for memorial purposes." That leaves a little more scope.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I will ask the gentleman for what purpose these cannon are to be used? He says "for memorial purposes." That does not indicate the use.

Mr. STONE. They are to be used by the post for memorial purposes—which may be monumental or some other memorial purposes.

Mr. PRESCOTT. In connection with a cemetery?

Mr. STONE. Not necessarily.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move to amend the amendment as modified by striking out "memorial" and inserting "monumental," as this is the pupose for which we have heretofore made these donations and for no other.

The amendment of Mr. MCMILLIN was agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. STONE as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. I move to amend by inserting the following:

Also to the Soldiers and Sailors' Monumental Association of Delaware, Ohio, four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cannon-balls.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CHALMERS, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 4166) to divide the State of Iowa into judicial districts.

The message also announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. No. 6243) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes; and asked a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 803) granting a pension to Laban Connor;

A bill (H. R. No. 1048) granting an increase of pension to Bernard Brady;

A bill (H. R. No. 1147) granting a pension to Elizabeth Vernor Henry;

A bill (H. R. No. 1206) granting a pension to Mrs. Kate L. Usher;

A bill (H. R. No. 1451) granting a pension to Thomas W. Rothrock;

A bill (H. R. No. 1997) granting a pension to Joel R. Carter;

A bill (H. R. No. 2104) granting a pension to Mrs. Electa L. Baldwin;

A bill (H. R. No. 2278) for the relief of John H. Jackson;

A bill (H. R. No. 3581) granting a pension to Mrs. Lizzie M. Mitchell;

A bill (H. R. No. 4082) granting a pension to Ellen Gillespie;

A bill (H. R. No. 4372) for the relief of Robert P. Walker;

A bill (H. R. No. 4914) granting a pension to Emeline Pink;

A bill (H. R. No. 5382) granting a pension to Peter J. Welshbillig;

A bill (H. R. No. 5684) granting a pension to Newton Boutwell; and

A bill (H. R. No. 5809) for the relief of Jacob Humble.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 1543) granting a pension to Albert O. Miller;

A bill (H. R. No. 2005) to increase the pension of Elijah W. Penny;

A bill (H. R. No. 2349) granting an increase of pension to George J. Webb;

A bill (H. R. No. 2872) to increase the pension of James Hawthorne; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6401) granting a pension to Amelia Ann Wilson and her minor child.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 473) for the relief of William H. Morgan;

A bill S. No. 547) granting a pension to E. G. Hoffman, late a captain in the One hundred and sixty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers;
A bill (S. No. 1264) to increase the pension of Joseph N. Abbey;
A bill (S. No. 1437) granting a pension to Amos Chapman;
A bill (S. No. 1680) granting a pension to Ann Leddy;
A bill (S. No. 1796) for the relief of Elizabeth H. Spotts:
A bill (S. No. 2026) granting a pension to Mary E. Matthews; and
A bill (S. No. 2089) granting a pension to Caroline French.

MARY E. RYAN.

Mr. MORSE. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Private Calendar and put on its passage the bill (H. R. No. 703) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Ryan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary E. Ryan, widow of George Parker Ryan, deceased, late a commander in the United States Navy, and grant her a pension at the rate of $50 per month extra.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no objection to taking this bill up now for consideration, except for one reason. I desire to prepare an amendment to be inserted in this and similar bills. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that there has recently been a very remarkable ruling by the Attorney-General in reference to cases of this kind, which makes it necessary for us to pass these bills in a form which has not heretofore been adopted. We must to-night pass an amendment or bill to counteract the effect of his ruling. He has ruled in the Barnett case that where there has been allowed under the general law a pension of, for instance, $30 a month, and an increase to $50 a month is granted by special act, the pensioner takes not only the original pension of $30, but $50 per month additional. By this ruling pensions are doubled by special act where Congress never intended it. If we do not tack an amendment to some of these bills to remedy the evil flowing from that opinion tens of thousands never intended by Congress or expected by the pensioner till the Attorney-General's opinion will be taken from the Treasury.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] object to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. MORSE. I am perfectly willing, if the gentleman will allow this bill to be considered now, to accept any amendment which he may suggest to accomplish the purpose he indicates.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then I consent to consider the bill immediately. It is not my intention to postpone action to-night, and the course I suggest will not have that effect but will remedy an evil that will work an immense injury before the meeting of this Congress in December.

Mr. BROWNE. There need be no trouble about this matter. I have now in my hands a House bill which the Senate has passed with an amendment remedying the difficulty suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee. If I may be permitted to move concurrence in this amendment we shall avoid all trouble so far as the decision of the Attorney-General is concerned.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then I urge the gentleman from Indiana to move concurrence at once, and the House to concur. It is of much importance.

ALBERT O. MILLER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] asks unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table, that the amendments of the Senate may be concurred in, the bill (H. R. No. 1543) granting a pension to Albert O. Miller. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"And that no person who is now receiving, or shall hereafter receive, a pension under a special act shall be entitled to receive in addition thereto a pension under the general law, unless the special act expressly states that the pension granted thereby is in addition to the pension which said person is entitled to receive under the general law."

Amend the title of the bill by adding, "and for other purposes."

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. BROWNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARY E. RYAN.

Mr. MORSE. I now ask the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 703) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Ryan.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and the House proceeded to consider the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has already been read.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARTHA JANE DOUGLASS.

Mr. SIMONTON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 5985) granting a pension to Martha Jane Douglass; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EMILY THEADGILL.

Mr. SIMONTON also, from the same committee, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 5986) granting a pension to Emily Theadgill; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JORIAL ONKST.

Mr. PETTIBONE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 6457) granting a pension to Jorjal Onkst; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN C. FENSCKE.

Mr. PETTIBONE also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 3701) granting a pension to John C. Fenscke; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARGERY NIGHTENGALE.

Mr. PETTIBONE also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 5103) granting a pension to Margery Nightengale; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FRANCIS DUFFY.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4582) for the relief of Francis Duffy; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REUBEN MARSHALL.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 454) granting a pension to Reuben Marshall; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

H. E. VAN TREES.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 452) granting a pension to H. E. Van Trees; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGET HAMILTON.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 5034) granting a pension to Bridget Hamilton; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DENNIS SMITH.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 388) granting a pension to Dennis Smith; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH C. CUSTER.

Mr. WILLITS. I move by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 1819) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth C. Custer.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of $30 now received by Mrs. Elizabeth C. Custer, widow of General George A. Custer, to $50 per month, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. WILLITS. I move to strike out "C" wherever it occurs, and insert "B;" so it will read "Mrs. Elizabeth B. Custer."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILLITS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLITS. I move to amend the title by striking out "C" and inserting "B;" so it will read "Mrs. Elizabeth B. Custer."

The amendment was agreed to.

A. E. BURNSIDE POST, SOUTH CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask by unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6718) to donate two condemned cannon and twelve cannon-balls to the A. E. Burnside Post No. 109 of the Grand Army of the Republic, of South Chicago, Illinois.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to donate two condemned cannon and twelve cannon-balls to the A. E. Burnside Post No. 109 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at South Chicago, Illinois.

Mr. ALDRICH. Now read the amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "condemned," in line 4, insert the word "cast-iron."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALDRICH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPAULDING. I move to amend the title by inserting "cast-iron" after the word "condemned."

The amendment was agreed to.

CONDEMNED CANNON, HATFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. SPAULDING. I move by unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6679) donating condemned cannon to the town of Hatfield, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes.

There was no objection, and the motion was agreed to.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver, if the same can be done without detriment to the Government, four condemned cast-iron cannon to the selectmen of the town of Hatfield, Massachusetts, to be used to support a memorial tablet inscribed with the names of the soldiers and sailors who enlisted from said town and lost their lives in the war of the rebellion.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPAULDING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPAULDING. I move to amend the title by inserting the word "cast-iron" after the word "condemned."

The amendment was agreed to.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT, EAST BLOOMFIELD, NEW YORK.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move by unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 1886) donating four condemned cast-iron cannon for the soldiers' monument at the village of East Bloomfield, New York.

There was no objection, and the motion was agreed to.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, directed to deliver to the authorities of the town of East Bloomfield, Ontario County, New York, four condemned cast-iron cannon for the soldiers' monument erected at the village in said town.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WADSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANNIE W. OSBORNE.

Mr. CABELL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 2966) granting a pension to Annie W. Osborne.

Mr. CABELL. I ask unanimous consent to take up this bill and put the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Annie W. Osborne, widow of John W. Osborne, late a hospital steward in the United States Army.

Mr. CABELL. The committee recommend the following amendment:

Add to the end of the bill the words "said pension to take effect from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CABELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JACOB NIX.

Mr. CABELL also, from the same committee, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 6740) granting a pension to Jacob Nix; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. CABELL. I find, Mr. Speaker, that the Senate have passed a similar bill, S. No. 1201. I ask, therefore, to take the Senate bill from the Speaker's table and put it upon its passage at the present time.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let it go over until we go into committee.

Mr. CABELL. I hope there will be no objection to passing it now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Senate bill will be read.

The Senate bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Jacob Nix, who served in the Brown County (Minnesota) Militia during the attack upon New Ulm, Minnesota, in August, 1862, by the Indians, upon the pension-roll, with the rank of captain, at the rate of one-third disability.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CABELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. What becomes of the other bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It goes upon the Calendar.

Mr. ALDRICH. It ought to go to the table. It seems to me that we might some time be passing two bills on this same subject.

Mr. CABELL. I ask leave, inasmuch as we have passed the Senate bill for the relief of Jacob Nix, to take the House bill from the Private Calendar and lay it upon the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill indicated by the gentleman from Virginia for the relief of Jacob Nix, and the same will be laid upon the table.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

JAMES HAWTHORNE.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. No. 2872) to increase the pension of James Hawthorne, for the purpose of moving to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the amendment will be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Hawthorne, late a private in Company H, Twentieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of his present pension."

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MATSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONDEMNED CANNON, KNOXVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Mr. HOUK. I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5978) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cannon for the soldiers' cemetery at Knoxville, Tennessee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to furnish such number of condemned cannon and shot as may be required to Sergeant Thomas Ridge, for the use and adornment of the soldiers' cemetery in the city of Knoxville and State of Tennessee.

The committee recommended the following amendments:

In line 4 insert, after the word "condemned," the word "cast-iron;" and in line 5, after the word "required," the words "and can be spared."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HOUK. There is another amendment which has been suggested to me to offer, and that is to fix the number of cannon and balls which are to be furnished; I therefore move that the word "four" be inserted in line 4; so as to read, "four condemned cast-iron cannon;" and also in the same line to add the word "balls" and strike out the word "shot" in this line; so that it will read, "four condemned cast-iron cannon and balls," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOUK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. BROWNE. I must ask that we now go into the consideration of the Private Calendar; and I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. BRIGGS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering pension bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BROWNE. I believe that we commence the consideration of pension bills on the Calendar with House bill No. 3737, on page 47.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the consideration of pension bills on the Calendar will be commenced at the point indicated by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. DAWES. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to modify his motion so that House bill No. 1218, on page 29, may take the same course as several other bills have taken by agreement; that is, that it be allowed to go to the House for a vote with a quorum present.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the nature of that bill?

Mr. DAWES. It is the bill for the pension of the widows of the persons who lost their lives in the Life-Saving Service.

Mr. McMILLIN. That will not pass.

THOMAS M'CLAIN.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the consideration of the Calendar will be commenced at page 47, with the bill (H. R. No. 3737) granting a pension to Thomas McClain.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $6 per month from the date of his discharge from the Army of the United States, subject to the limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas McClain, late a private in Company I, Ninety-seventh Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions with the following amendment:

In lines 4, 5, and 6, strike out the words "at the rate of $6 per month from the date of his discharge from the Army of the United States."

Mr. ALDRICH. What rate of pension will the bill give as amended in that way?

The CHAIRMAN. No rate being specified, the bill will carry the rate of $8 per month.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY E. TAYLOR.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3733) granting a pension to Mary E. Taylor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the conditions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary E. Taylor, widow of James Taylor, late an ordnance-sergeant in the United States Army.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HANNAH E. ALDEN.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 6218) granting a pension to Hannah E. Alden.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hannah E. Alden, widow of Abram V. Alden, late a corporal of Company H of the One hundred and forty first Regiment of Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, and pay her a pension from and after the 1st day of December, 1876.

The following amendment was reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

Strike out these words at the end of the bill: "and pay her a pension from and after the 1st day of December, 1876."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRESCOTT. The bill does not say that the pension shall be paid from and after the passage of the act. I move to amend by adding these words:

And to pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANTHONY B. GRAVES.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4387) granting a pension to Anthony B. Graves.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Anthony B. Graves, late a private in Company E, One hundred and thirtieth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BARBARA MARQUARDT.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4357) granting a pension to Barbara Marquardt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Barbara Marquardt, widow of John M. Marquardt, late a soldier in Company E of the One hundred and ninth Regiment of New York Volunteers during the war of the rebellion; and that she be allowed a pension on the papers now on file in the Pension Office the same as though the divorce of said Barbara Marquardt from said John M. Marquardt had not been granted.

The following amendment was reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

Strike out the words at the end of the bill "and that she be allowed a pension on the papers now on file in the Pension Office the same as though the divorce from said John M. Marquardt had not been granted" and add "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Mr. PRESCOTT. I ask for the reading of the report in that case.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4357) granting a pension to Barbara Marquardt, has had the same under consideration, and begs leave to submit the following report:

The petitioner claims pension as the widow of John M. Marquardt, who served in Company E, One hundred and ninth Regiment of New York Volunteers, and died November 15, 1863, of typhoid fever, while home on sick furlough.

The claim has been rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the claimant, on the 16th of April, 1862, obtained a divorce from the soldier which divorce was never set aside or annulled.

While it is true that the claimant was divorced at the time stated, it is, nevertheless, also shown that she visited the soldier while sick in camp, took him home, and nursed him until he died.

In view of these facts, the committee is of opinion that the relief asked for should be granted, and therefore reports favorably on the bill, amended, however, by striking out all after the word "rebellion," in lines 7 and 8, and inserting thereafter the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and, thus amended, asks that it do pass.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ROWLAND WARD.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 6728) granting an increase of pension to Rowland Ward.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Rowland Ward, late private in Company I, Fourth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery, to $30 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by him, the increase hereby granted to commence from the passage of this act.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS F. BAKER.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1874) granting a pension to Thomas F. Baker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas F. Baker, late of Company G, Thirteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ROBERT CARY.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4367) granting an increase of pension to Robert Cary.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Robert Cary, late a private in Company I, Ninety-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at $72 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4367) granting an increase of pension to Robert Cary, has had the same under consideration, and begs leave to submit the following report:

The claimant is now a pensioner at the rate of $24 a month on account of disability from gunshot wound of urethra and bladder received in action while serving as a private in Company I, Ninety-ninth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers. This rate is allowed because of his inability to perform any manual labor. Applications for increase have been rejected by the Pension Office because total and permanent helplessness must be shown to entitle the pensioner to a higher rate. He presented his claim for increase to the Forty-fifth Congress, and the following report was made to the House by the chairman of the Invalid Pensions Committee:

"The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Robert Cary, asking for increase of pension, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report:

"John M. Hawkey, captain of claimant's company, says that Robert Cary was a prompt and faithful soldier, a private of Company I, Ninety-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteers; that at three o'clock on the morning of the 15th day of July, 1863, at McMinnville, Tennessee, he was wounded by the accidental discharge of his musket in taking it from his bunk, while getting in line of battle, the opinion of the surgeon at the time being that it was fatal.

"Claimant was first placed on the pension-roll July, 1865, to draw from October, 1863, at $8 per month; increased to $15 from February, 1869; increased to $20 from September, 1870; increased to $24 from June, 1872. Application for further increase rejected July, 1877.

"The evidence is complete as to the permanent total helplessness, requiring the regular personal aid and attendance of another person.

"The committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill increasing his pension to $50 per month."

The committee adopts this report with the exception of the recommendation therein contained, and recommends the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN HAZLEWOOD.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3047) granting a pension to John Hazlewood.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Hazlewood, late of Company F, Seventh West Virginia Cavalry.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LANDON B. GRIMES.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 5959) reissuing the pension of Landon B. Grimes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reissue to Landon B. Grimes, late of Company K, Fifteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, pension-certificate numbered 21685, giving him the following rate of pension, namely: $2 per month from March 26, 1863; $15 per month from June 6, 1866; and $18 per month from June 4, 1872.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I would like to hear the report in this case.

The report was read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. No. 5959) reissuing the pension of Landon B. Grimes, has had the same under consideration, and begs leave to submit the following report:

An examination of the papers in the case shows the following facts: Landon B. Grimes served in Company K, Fifteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, from September 23, 1861, to March 26, 1863, when discharged on account of disability by reason of gunshot wound through upper third of left arm, received in battle of Stone River, December 31, 1862. For this disability he was pensioned originally at $2 per month from date of discharge, at $6 from October 23, 1867, at $15 from April 15, 1871, and at $18 per month from June 4, 1872.

The pensioner claims a rerating at $15 per month from June 6, 1866, to June 4, 1872, instead of the rate received for that period.

Medical examinations had of the pensioner during the period for which additional pension is claimed show the following conditions:

"Ball entered the left arm about two inches below the shoulder-joint and passed directly through under the deltoid muscle, partially fracturing the humerus, occasionally suppurating and discharging small pieces of bone. There is a great deal of pain along the whole course of the arm; there is difficulty in elevating the arm, and loss of strength. The disability is permanent."

The same conditions are shown in subsequent medical examinations, which formed the basis of increase to $15 and $18 per month respectively.

The law does permit the allowance of $15 per month for a disability equivalent to the loss of a hand, from June 6, 1866, and inasmuch as the Pension Office did recognize the disability as in that degree in 1871, although no greater disability is shown by the medical examination in that year than was shown by previous examinations, and as the committee is of opinion that the degree of disability in this case has not changed since 1866, the same reports favorably on the bill and asks that it do pass.

Mr. MATSON. I move to amend by adding these words:

Deducting all payments heretofore made.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to know of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. RICE] if it would not be sufficient to provide that the pension shall commence from the present date.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, The man gets $18 a month now. He is suffering from a gun-shot wound, and the evidence shows that his condition during the period for which the additional pension is allowed was as bad as it is now. It has been the same ever since he was wounded. The original rate of pension was $2 per month, which was subsequently increased to $6 and $15, and finally from $15 to $18, because the law was changed.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Why does this bill provide that the pension-certificate shall be reissued? Is the pension now out?

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. He is now receiving a pension of $18 per month.

Mr. PRESCOTT. What does he ask?

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. That he shall receive $18 per month during the whole time.

Mr. McMILLIN. Did he get during all that time the full amount allowed by law for that character of disability?

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I am not prepared to say.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is this to provide for arrearages?

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. The injury has been the same from the beginning. It was a case of gunshot wound, and it was presumed that as time elapsed the case would improve. But it did not, and the Pension Office has been increasing the allowance of pension.

Mr. RAY. Without any change of the law?

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. Without any change of the law, except one allowing a pension for a disability equivalent to the loss of a hand at the rate of $18 per month.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is there any feature in the case that brings it within the objection of being in fact a bill to pay arrearages of pension?

Mr. MATSON. This is one of a class of cases of which the Committee on Invalid Pensions and this House are not at all uninformed. There are some few cases in which the Pension Office has made mistakes in regard to the rating. I understand that this bill is simply for the purpose of correcting a mistake in the rating, so that the pensioner shall receive the pension for all the time he was entitled to receive it for the disability under which he labored.

The amendment I have offered simply provides that the sums heretofore received shall be deducted from the sums provided in this bill. Otherwise, he would receive his old pension over again, as set forth in the bill. The objection to paying arrearages does not obtain in this case, I think. I remember two or three cases of this character that have passed the committee and the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest the propriety of an amendment so as to make it clear that this act shall not be construed as increasing the rate of pension for this degree of disability at any time. I think that would make it clear.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I think the amendment should be so worded that the amount to be deducted should still leave him $18 per month from the time he was first pensioned.

Mr. McCOOK. From the time he first received $15 per month?

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. McCOOK. It seems to me from the report, as it was read, that the disability increased steadily.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. RICE] and this committee to the peculiar wording of this bill. I certainly do not understand what is intended by it. It reads:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reissue to Landon B. Grimes pension certificate No. 21685.

Now, why should that pension certificate be reissued? It then provides "giving him the following rate of pension, namely, $21 per month from March 26, 1863." I understand that he has already received $2 per month from that time. Do you wish to give him $2 per month over again?

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I wish to give him $15 a month more.

Mr. PRESCOTT. You will not do it by this bill; "$2 per month from March 26, 1863, and $15 per month from June 6, 1866, and $18 per month from June 4, 1872." Now, during part of that time he has been receiving fifteen and part of the time eighteen dollars per month. By this bill he would get just double what he has received during the entire time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] has offered an amendment to deduct the amounts heretofore received.

Mr. PRESCOTT. If you deduct all payments heretofore received you would be deducting what is here given to him, and the result would be that he would get nothing in addition, for he has received exactly the money which this bill provides for, and if that amount is to be deducted from amounts allowed by this bill then he would get nothing more.

Mr. PEELLE. For the time he received less than $18 a month he would get something.

Mr. PRESCOTT. He received $18 a month for all the time that this bill names.

Mr. PEELLE. He received $2 per month for a portion of the time, $15 per month for another portion of the time, and $18 per month for another portion of the time.

Mr. PRESCOTT. That is what this bill says.

Mr. PEELLE. Then you would be giving him $18 a month for one portion of the time and $15 for another time.

Mr. BROWNE. I think gentlemen are a little confused about what this bill intends to do.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I ask that this bill be passed over informally for a few minutes until a proper amendment can be prepared.

Mr. BROWNE. I see no necessity for passing over this bill either formally or informally, or in any other way. This man was granted a pension during a portion of the time at $2 per month. Subsequently his pension was increased to $15 a month, and later on it was increased to $18 a month.

Now, the bill does not propose to increase the pension during the time for which he drew $2 a month, but it does propose to increase the pension during the time that he drew a pension at the rate of $15 a month up to the time when the Pension Office put him on the pension-roll at $18 a month. And that is for the reason that during all the time that he received only $15 per month he should have been rated at $18 per month. That is all there is of it. The bill simply rerates during a portion of this time the pension granted by the Pension Office.

Mr. PRESCOTT. From June 4, 1872, how much do you propose to pay him?

Mr. BROWNE. If the gentleman will let me have the bill I will try to answer his question.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. The bill had better be laid aside informally for a while.

Mr. BROWNE. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PRESCOTT] criticises in the first place the language of the bill where it speaks of the pension certificate being reissued. It is to be reissued in a certain sense; that is inasmuch as the pension is increased the certificate is changed; and this may be regarded as a reissue.

Now, the certificate to be issued or reissued is to give this man a pension at the following rates: first, $2 per month from March 26, 1863, (this is what he received;) secondly, $15 a month from June 6, 1866, (I understand he received that;) and $18 a month from June 4, 1872.

Mr. PRESCOTT. He has received that.

Mr. BROWNE. That he has not received; it is an increase of the rate of pension during the last period. Then the bill provides that there shall be deducted from these payments such sums of money as he has already received.

Mr. PRESCOTT. The report says that he has received $18 a month from June 4, 1872, to the present time.

Mr. BROWNE. If that be true the bill is certainly harmless.

Mr. PRESCOTT. If it is harmless and useless, why take up time in considering and passing it?

Mr. BROWNE. I have stated that this bill, if I understand the case—and I remember when it was discussed in committee—proposes to change the rating during the last period named in the bill.

Mr. McCOOK. From June 4, 1872?

Mr. BROWNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCOOK. Giving $3 a month additional?

Mr. BROWNE. Yes, sir; because the committee believed that in view of the disability existing at that time and under the law then applicable to the case his rating at the Pension Office should have been in that sum. I do not care particularly whether the bill be passed or laid aside.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have prepared an amendment which will doubtless obviate the objection I suggested. It is to add:

Provided, That this act shall not be so construed as to give the pensioner a greater rate of pension than was allowed under the general law to others suffering from equal disability.

Mr. BROWNE. Say "like disability."

Mr. McMILLIN. I accept the gentleman's suggestion and make that modification.

Mr. BROWNE. That amendment is all right.

Mr. PRESCOTT. With that amendment I think the bill harmless and useless.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

SARAH J. CAMERON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. No. 3414) granting a pension to Sarah J. Cameron.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah J. Cameron, widow of Henry A. Cameron, late a private in Company C, Twenty-fifth Missouri State troops.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3414) granting a pension to Sarah J. Cameron, having had the same under consideration, report as follows:

It appears from the papers on file in the Pension Office that the claimant is the widow of Henry A. Cameron, who was a private in Company C, Twenty-fifth Regiment Missouri Enrolled Militia. The record of the adjutant-general of the State of Missouri shows that Cameron was enrolled on the 29th day of July, 1862; was relieved from service September 12, and died October 6, 1862. The captain of the company testifies that Cameron was a sound and able-bodied man at the time of his enlistment, and that he died on the 24th of September, 1862, while at home on sick furlough, for a disease the nature of which is unknown to affiant; that the company was ordered on duty by the commanding officer of the United States forces in that section of the State to guard the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Railroad bridge over the Platte River, near Saint Joseph, Missouri.

Burr H. Cox, surgeon of the regiment, the attending physician of the soldier, makes oath that the latter was under his treatment from the 19th to the 24th day of September, 1862, for typhoid fever, contracted in the service and in the line of his duty, and that he died of the said disease; also that the soldier at the time of his enlistment was an able-bodied and sound man. The claim has been rejected by the Pension Office because there is no provision of law under which a pension could be granted on account of disease contracted while serving as a member of the militia of a State.

Since the filing of the bill additional evidence has been presented to this committee corroborative of the statements of the captain and surgeon heretofore referred to.

In view of the fact that the Missouri enrolled militia were, under the arrangement between the State authorities and the General Government of the United States, in service, subject to the orders of the officers of the United States, it should be held that the claimant's husband was virtually in the service of the United States, and as it is shown beyond a doubt that the disease of which the soldier died was contracted in and because of said service the committee are of opinion that the relief asked for should be granted, and therefore report favorably on the bill and recommend that it pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

THEODORE RAUTHE.

The next business was the bill (S. No. 1040) granting a pension to Theodore Rauthe.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Theodore Rauthe, late a private in Company K, Thirteenth New York Cavalry, whose name was stricken from the pension-roll on September 30, 1878, and pay him a pension of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I would like to hear the report in this case, so that we may know why this man was dropped from the roll.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 1040) granting a pension to Theodore Rauthe, having examined the same, makes the following report:

The committee finds the facts in this case correctly set forth in Report No. 221 of the Senate Committee on Pensions, made at the present session of Congress, as follows:

"Theodore Rauthe enlisted as a private in Company K, Thirteenth New York Cavalry, January 5, 1864, having then recently arrived from Germany, of which country he was a citizen. He was mustered out with his company September 21, 1865. He was pensioned November 1, 1867, at the rate of $15 per month, for loss of both feet, amputated in Harewood Hospital, District of Columbia, in March and June, 1866, having been admitted to said hospital as a discharged soldier. His pension was subsequently increased to $31.25 per month. He was dropped from the rolls September 12, 1878, upon the ground that the disability for which he was pensioned was not due to his Army service. He has since applied for restoration, which the Pension Office, after consideration, has refused.

"The amputation of claimant's feet was rendered necessary by reason of their having been frozen, and the question in the case is, whether such amputation was rendered necessary in consequence of his feet having been frozen while in the service, or in consequence of subsequent exposure and freezing. Claimant and six comrades testify that his feet were frost-bitten in January, 1865, while on picket duty, at night, near Camp Lovell, Virginia, and while the same did not necessitate hospital treatment, the claimant frequently complained of the condition of his feet, resulting therefrom. The Army records furnish no evidence of the fact. Claimant further alleges that when cold weather came on in the fall, after his discharge, his feet in consequence of having been frost-bitten in the service, broke open, and grew worse until the amputation thereof. In this he is also corroborated by his six comrades. But the committee doubt whether they had personal knowledge of that fact. After his discharge in September, 1865, he came to Washington and worked as a cigar-maker. The next that is known of him is that he was found, in December, 1865, in a tobacco barn in Prince George's County, Maryland, by the owner of the barn nearly "frozen to death," sick, "and his feet in a very bad condition from being frosted." He was taken the next day (having been cared for mean time) to the almshouse, and afterward to Washington, and was soon admitted to Harewood Hospital.

"The farmer who found him says: 'I do not think he could have been lying in the barn for any considerable time, as the weather was very cold. There was no appearance of drunkenness about him. I am unable to say of my own knowledge whether he had been previously frosted, but his feet were in a wretched condition when he was discovered by me.' He was dropped from the rolls upon a letter purporting to have been written by Robert Lamprect, a sergeant of the Twelfth United States Infantry, alleging that his feet were not frozen in the Army, but were frozen after his discharge, while lying out-doors all night near the corner of Twentieth and K streets, in Washington, where he was found and taken to the police-station. The letter Lamprect denies having written, and its allegations are found to be untrue, and Lamprect testified subsequently that he did know of his own knowledge that claimant's feet were frozen while in the service. The investigation set on foot in consequence of the receipt of this letter brought out the fact that claimant was found in the barn in Maryland in the condition described.

"The case is one of considerable doubt. The claimant does not speak English. It appears to be sufficiently established that claimant's feet were frozen while in the service. Whether their condition at the time he was found in the barn naturally resulted therefrom is not so clearly proven; but upon the whole case, in view of the fact that the claimant does not speak English and may not have understood clearly the necessity of particularity upon this point, and in view of the established fact that his feet were originally frozen in the service, the committee have concluded to recommend the passage of the bill, (S. No. 1040,) amended so as to pay said Rauthe a pension of $50 from and after the passage of this act, and that bill S. No. 952 be indefinitely postponed."

Upon this report the Senate passed the bill for the relief of Theodore Rauthe. Your committee concurs in this action and recommends the passage of the bill by the House.

Mr. McCOOK. This bill, as I understand, provides for a pension of $50 a month from and after the passage of the act. I understand from the report that the highest pension this man ever received was $31.25. Now, as the gentleman who prepared the report seems to believe there is a good deal of doubt about this case, it seems to me it would be a proper thing to amend the bill, if we are to pass it, so as to place this pension at the highest figure that the man received prior to being dropped. Certainly there seems to be no reason for increasing the rate to $50 a month. It may be a rather ungracious thing for me to do, but I am inclined to move that amendment. There seems to be a grave doubt whether the man's disability was incurred in the service. His feet were amputated after the war; and the indications are that the man was drunk and in consequence of his intoxicated condition had his feet frozen after leaving the service. Therefore, unless the gentleman who prepared this report has something to say to convince me to the contrary I will move the amendment I have indicated.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I would not undertake to convince any person that it is clearly established this man's injuries were received to their entire extent in the Army. I have no doubt that while in the Army he suffered from severe frost-bite. Everybody knows that the parts injured by frost-bite are very susceptible to cold ever afterward. I have no doubt that he suffered from extreme cold when exposed in the barn, according to the account given in the report. But I believe there is substantial merit in the case, though I shall not oppose the amendment. I have obtained a favorable impression of this case on account of an investigation made by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. DEUSTER,] who became interested in the matter. The man is a German and was unable to explain himself satisfactorily to any member of the committee. He has appeared, upon what is left of his legs, at the door of our committee-room almost daily for months past, and we have felt like doing something for his relief.

Mr. BROWNE. The Senate bill restores him to the pension-rolls, taking him back to the time when he was dropped, which would give him a considerable sum, perhaps more than he would receive under the House bill.

Let me say to my friend from New York that the time when he was pensioned the highest rate of pension for disability resulting in the loss of both legs or arms was $31.25 per month. Since that time the general law has increased that to $50, and in some instances where they require the constant attendance of one person to $72 a month. If this man is entitled to a pension at all it is as one having lost both legs. He has practically lost both legs, as amputation occurred below the knees. He would be entitled at the rating of the Pension Office to $50 a month.

Mr. PRESCOTT. The report does not say that he lost both his legs in the service. It says "had a tendency that led to the loss of his legs."

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. When was he dropped from the rolls?

The CHAIRMAN. September, 1878.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Let the Senate bill be again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. DAWES. In answer to some remarks of the gentleman from New York let me say that this case has been adjudicated in the Pension Office on the two points which he raised: first, that the disability was contracted in the service; and in the second place his rating was that of a pensioner who lost both his legs, which is now $50 a month. There was a question of doubt which was thoroughly investigated by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that committee unanimously decided this man is now and always was entitled to the rating of a man who had lost both his legs in the service.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. We will make no mistake by giving this man $50 a month from and after the passage of this act. He was a good soldier and lost his feet in consequence of disability received in the service. Fifty dollars a month from this on would be more to him than to give him back pay.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY J. HANNAFORD.

The next business was the bill (H. R. No. 5849) granting a pension to Mary J. Hannaford.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary J. Hannaford, widow of Robert H. Hannaford, late of Company C, Ninety-third Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the words "from and after the — day of —, 1870, the date of the death of her said husband."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES BENNETT.

The next business was the bill (H. R. No. 6317) granting an increase of pension to James Bennett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the regulations and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Bennett, late a sergeant of Company L, Second Regiment New York Cavalry, at the rate of $72 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by him.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out "$72" and insert "$50."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH WEINSTEIN.

The next business was the bill (H. R. No. 5118) granting a pension to Elizabeth Weinstein.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $8 per month, to commence March 13, 1863, and to continue during her widowhood, the name of Elizabeth Weinstein, the foster mother of Peter Weinstein, deceased, late a private in Company G, Forty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out "at the rate of $8 per month, to commence March 13, 1863, and to continue during her widowhood" and in lieu thereof insert "said pension to begin from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to; and as amended the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FRANCIS DUFFY.

Mr. DAWES. I move by unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. No. 4582) for the relief of Francis Duffy.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Francis Duffy, father of Patrick Duffy, late a private Company E, Tenth Ohio Volunteers, to draw a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BROWNE. Now take up the bills in their order.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be done.

MARTHA JANE DOUGLASS.

The next business on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions was the bill (H. R. No. 5985) granting a pension to Martha Jane Douglass.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha Jane Douglass, widow of John T. Douglass, late a private in Company B, Third Tennessee Cavalry.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

Add to the end of the bill the words "to take effect from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EMILY THEADGILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was the bill (H. R. No. 5986) granting a pension to Emily Theadgill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emily Theadgill, widow of Nathaniel Theadgill, who was a private in Company B, Third Tennessee Cavalry.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

Add to the end of the bill the words "to take effect from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JORIAL ONKST.

The next business on the Private Calendar, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was the bill (H. R. No. 6457) granting a pension to Jorial Onkst.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jorial Onkst, late a private in Company F, Eighth Tennessee Cavalry.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

Add to the end of the bill the words "to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN C. FENSCKE.

The next business on the Private Calendar, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was the bill (H. R. No. 3701) granting a pension to John C. Fenscke.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That a pension be, and is hereby, granted to John C. Fenscke, late an employé of the United States Government, on account of wounds received while in the discharge of his duties as such employé; and that the Commissioner of Pensions be, and he is hereby, instructed to place the name of said John C. Fenscke on the pension-roll.

The committee recommended the following amendment:

The pension to take effect from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the report in that case read.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

It appears from the evidence in this case that the petitioner, John C. Fenscke, of New Ulm, Minnesota, was a wagon-maker at Lower Sioux agency, in the employ of the United States, on the 18th day of August, 1862, at which time said agency was surprised and attacked by the Sioux Indians. It further appears that in assisting to defend the agency he received a severe wound from an Indian arrow which passed through the muscles of his back, near the spinal column and between the third and fourth ribs, penetrating his left lung.

He was treated for this wound by Dr. Alfred Miller, acting assistant surgeon at the military hospital at Fort Ridgley, Minnesota, from the 20th of August to 30th of September, 1862.

Dr. Miller in his sworn statement testifies that he treated petitioner in hospital aforesaid for arrow wound above described, and that it was received as above stated; that arrow-head remained in the wound until removed by him, dangerously injuring the lung; that since the receipt of said injury affiant has seen petitioner, and that he has never fully recovered, and never can, from the injury received, the lung remaining in a diseased condition.

It also appears from the statement of Governor L. F. Hubbard, present governor of Minnesota, and other reputable citizens, neighbors of petitioner, that he was a robust and healthy man prior to the receipt of the injury, and is now greatly disabled for the performance of manual labor.

After a careful consideration of this case your committee are of opinion that it is a meritorious one and recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. McMILLIN. This is another of the civil employés of the Government. Let the bill take the course of those which were laid over at the last meeting to be reported to the House and considered when there is a quorum present. I shall make no question of a quorum now, but I do not want it to be put upon its passage to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be laid aside with a favorable report to be acted upon as suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee.

There was no objection.

JOSEPH F. WILSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions was the bill (H. R. No. 6249) granting an increase of pension to Joseph F. Wilson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph F. Wilson, late a corporal of Company E, Eighth Regiment of Illinois Infantry Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $72 per month in lieu of that which he now receives; this act to take effect from and after its passage.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out "seventy-two," in line 8, and inserting "forty;" so that it will read "and pay him a pension of $40 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARGERY NIGHTENGALE.

The next business on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions was the bill (H. R. No. 5103) granting a pension to Margery Nightengale.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Margery Nightengale, widow of Michael Nightengale, late of Company D, Fifty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, upon the pension-roll at the rate of $8 per month, and pay her said pension from and after the date of the death of said Michael Nightengale.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "the date of the death of said Michael Nightengale" and inserting "the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

REUBEN MARSHALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions was the bill (H. R. No. 454) granting a pension to Reuben Marshall.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Reuben Marshall, late a private in the Kansas Volunteer Militia.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

H. E. VAN TREES.

The next business on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions was the bill (H. R. No. 452) granting a pension to H. E. Van Trees.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of H. E. Van Trees, late a first lieutenant in the Kansas Volunteer Militia.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

M. H. CLEMENTS.

The next business on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions was the bill (H. R. No. 447) granting a pension to M. H. Clements.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of M. H. Clements, late a private in the Kansas Volunteer Militia.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BRIDGET HAMILTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions was the bill (H. R. No. 5034) granting a pension to Bridget Hamilton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Bridget Hamilton, of the city of Washington, District of Columbia, who shall, from and after the passage of this act, be paid a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend this bill by striking out "eight," in line 7, and inserting "twelve;" so that it will read "to be paid a pension at the rate of $12 per month." I understand that soldier served for thirty years in the Army. He served in three wars, the Florida war, the Mexican war, and the late war of the rebellion. I think his widow is entitled to this pension.

Mr. BROWNE. I do not understand the gentleman's motion.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. To strike out "eight" and insert "twelve," for the reasons that I have stated.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the committee knew of those facts, did they not?

Mr. BROWNE. The gentleman from Ohio will remember that under no general law is she entitled to any pension; and further, that if the husband had been injured to the extent of total disability by casualties on the battle-field the widow would have been entitled to only $8 per month.

We do not think that we ought to place a soldier's widow on the pension-roll when the soldier has died a natural death, even after long service, at a higher rate than we would put the widow of a soldier who died with his gun in his hands on the battle-field. I do not believe that discrimination should be made against the widows of men who died with their faces to the foe.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I do not know, although I agree with the committee, and wrote this report recommending that this woman should be pensioned at the rate of $8 per month, I do not know but I may consistently favor the amendment of my colleague from Ohio, [Mr. ROBINSON.]

This man served for thirty-two years in the Army; through the Florida war, the Mexican war, and the war of the rebellion. He was a famous drill-sergeant. He has instructed thousands of soldiers and officers to discharge their duties. He also was a man of the highest character. He was a good example as a soldier in the Army. The papers that were supplied to the committee contained numerous certificates from officers under whom he served, going to show his high character and faithful services. Besides all this, this wife of his accompanied him to Florida. She did her duty faithfully as a soldier's wife. She bore him four sons. Three of those sons served through the war of the rebellion. One of them died recently on account of disease contracted in the war. He left a child which this poor old wife of Robert Hamilton has adopted and is caring for in her poverty. She is now aged and poor.

I am certain if this were the widow of some officer, some regular Army officer, some naval officer, no objection would be raised to increase the amount. We know how easily we do that thing in behalf of the high and mighty ones of the land. But when some poor body comes along it is natural to object, and everybody does object, as is done in this case. I certainly think that this poor woman ought to be helped along, considering the manner in which her husband did his duty and the manner in which she did her duty, with this pittance of $12 a month. She is about seventy-five years old, and she will not want it very long.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. ROBINSON.]

The amendment was agreed to; there being—ayes 12, noes 9.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DENNIS SMITH.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 388) granting a pension to Dennis Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Dennis Smith, late of Company A, Sixth Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, on account of disability incurred in the line of duty.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions reported the following amendment:

Strike out the words "On account of disability incurred in the line of duty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BROWNE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BRIGGS reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration sundry pension bills, and had directed him to report the same to the House with various recommendations.

PENSION BILLS PASSED.

The following Senate bill, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. No. 1040) granting a pension to Theodore Rauthe.

The following House bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments were taken up, the amendments agreed to, and the bills severally ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. No. 4357) granting a pension to Barbara Marquardt;

A bill (H. R. No. 5959) reissuing the pension of Landon B. Grimes;

A bill (H. R. No. 5849) granting a pension to Mary J. Hannaford;

A bill (H. R. No. 6317) granting an increase of pension to James Bennett;

A bill (H. R. No. 5118) granting a pension to Elizabeth Weinstein;

A bill (H. R. No. 5985) granting a pension to Martha Jane Douglass;

A bill (H. R. No. 5986) granting a pension to Emily Theadgill;

A bill (H. R. No. 6457) granting a pension to Jorial Onkst;

A bill (H. R. No. 3701) granting a pension to John C. Fenscke;

A bill (H. R. No. 6249) granting an increase of pension to Joseph F. Wilson;

A bill (H. R. No. 5103) granting a pension to Margery Nightengale;

A bill (H. R. No. 5034) granting a pension to Bridget Hamilton; and

A bill (H. R. No. 388) granting a pension to Dennis Smith.

The following bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendments, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. No. 3733) granting a pension to Mary E. Taylor;

A bill (H. R. No. 4387) granting a pension to Anthony B. Graves;

A bill (H. R. No. 6728) granting an increase of pension to Rowland Ward;

A bill (H. R. No. 1874) granting a pension to Thomas F. Baker;
A bill (H. R. No. 4367) granting an increase of pension to Robert Cary;
A bill (H. R. No. 3047) granting a pension to John Hazlewood;
A bill (H. R. No. 3414) granting a pension to Sarah J. Cameron;
A bill (H. R. No. 4582) for the relief of Francis Duffy;
A bill (H. R. No. 454) granting a pension to Reuben Marshall;
A bill (H. R. No. 452) granting a pension to H. E. Van Trees; and
A bill (H. R. No. 447) granting a pension to M. H. Clements.

Mr. BROWNE. I move to reconsider the various votes just taken; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GRANTING CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. BROWNE. I ask consent to take up for consideration at this time Senate bill No. 2050, donating four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cast-iron cannon-balls for a soldiers' monument at Ironton, Ohio. It is a bill in which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] is interested, and he is not able to be here to-night.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to deliver to Post Dick Lambert, of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Ironton, Ohio, four condemned cast-iron cannon and four large cast-iron cannon-balls, for a soldiers' monument to be erected in said city by the said post of the Grand Army of the Republic.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIJAH W. PENNY.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. No. 2005) to increase the pension of Elijah W. Penny, returned from the Senate with an amendment, for the purpose of concurring in the amendment.

The amendment was to add to the bill the following:

Said increase to take effect from the passage of this act.

There being no objection, the amendment was concurred in.

DONATIONS OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On behalf of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. HEPBURN,] I ask to have taken from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. No. 1942) granting condemned cannon to Abe Lincoln Post No. 29 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, for monumental purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to furnish to Abe Lincoln Post No. 29 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, four condemned cast-iron cannon, for the adornment of a monument in memory of the deceased soldiers of Iowa, at Council Bluffs, in said State.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was read three times, and passed.

Mr. WADSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPAULDING. I ask that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of a bill which was reported this evening, the bill (H. R. No. 6695) granting four condemned cast-iron cannon to the post of the Grand Army of the Republic at Peabody, Massachusetts.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to furnish to the post of the Grand Army of the Republic at Peabody, Massachusetts, four condemned cast-iron cannon, to be used at the soldiers' and sailors' lot at Cedar Grove Cemetery, in Peabody aforesaid.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. STONE. I move to amend by inserting after the word "cannon" the words "and four cannon-balls."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEELLE. I move to amend the bill by adding the following:

Also granting to George H. Thomas Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Indianapolis, Indiana, two condemned cast-iron cannon and four cannon-balls for monumental purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPAULDING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPAULDING. I also ask that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6692) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cannon, balls, and muskets for soldiers' burial ground at Maquoketa, Iowa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to deliver to the A. W. Drips Post No. 74 Grand Army of the Republic, at Maquoketa, Iowa, four condemned cast-iron cannon, four cannon-balls, and two hundred and fifty condemned muskets, for the use and adornment of the soldiers' burial ground in the cemetery at Maquoketa, Iowa.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs to strike out, in lines 6 and 7, the words "and two hundred and fifty condemned muskets," and to insert, after the words "cast-iron cannon," the word "and," was agreed to.

Mr. McCOID. I move to amend by adding to the bill the following:

Also, four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cannon-balls to the George Strong Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Fairfield, Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. I move to amend by adding the following:

Also granting to the Grand Army of the Republic, Lawrence, Massachusetts, four condemned cast-iron cannon for monument purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPAULDING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPAULDING. I ask that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6721) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to Edward Pye Post No. 179 of the Grand Army of the Republic, four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cannon-balls, for decorating the proposed soldiers' monument at Haverstraw, New York.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed, if the same can be done without prejudice to the public service, to deliver to Edward Pye Post No. 179 of the Grand Army of the Republic four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cannon-balls, to be used in the decoration of the proposed soldiers' monument in the cemetery at Haverstraw, New York.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPAULDING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BROWNE. I now move that we go to the Speaker's table to take up several House pension bills returned from the Senate with amendments. I desire that the amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

AMELIA ANN WILSON.

The bill (H. R. No. 6401) granting a pension to Amelia Ann Wilson and her minor children was taken from the Speaker's table, and the amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "the" where it occurs the last time in line 3 and insert "name of Amelia Ann Wilson, widow of the late Marcellus Wilson, who was a private in the war with Mexico, and pay her a pension of $8 per month and $2 per month for her minor daughter, Alice A. Wilson, until she arrives at the age of sixteen years.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting a pension to Amelia Ann Wilson and her minor child."

The amendments were concurred in.

GEORGE J. WEBB.

The bill (H. R. No. 2349) granting an increase of pension to George J. Webb was taken from the Speaker's table, and the amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Such increase of pension to commence from the passage of this act.

The amendment was concurred in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This concludes the House pension bills on the Speaker's table with Senate amendments. Several bills of this character were taken up and the amendments concurred in before the House went into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BROWNE. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BELTZHOOVER: The petition of citizens of York, Pennsylvania, for an appropriation of $50,000 for educational purposes in Alaska—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. BROWNE: The petition of 10 citizens of Hendricks County, Indiana, praying that a pension be granted William H. Milan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, July 15, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PENDLETON. I present a telegraphic communication in the nature of a petition from R. M. Bishop & Co. and 12 importing business houses of Cincinnati, praying the Senate to retain what is known as the rebate clause adopted by the House in the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation. As that bill is before the Senate, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER presented a memorial of the State board of health of Michigan, in favor of the passage of a law extending the powers of the National Board of Health so as to include small-pox and to make sufficient appropriation to enable them to effectually perform their duties and publish the reports; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I have received some papers in the form of petitions and protests against striking out the rebate clause in the internal-revenue bill, which I ask to present. One of them is from the Tobacco Association of Richmond, Virginia; another is from S. W. Venable & Co., manufacturers, of Petersburgh, Virginia. I move that these papers lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I will send them all in to save time. Let them all be entered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred the subject of printing the census, have instructed me to report a bill to provide for the publication of the Tenth Census, with a written report which I ask may be printed. I will not ask for the present consideration of the bill, as I understand the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has an important amendment to propose to it.

The bill (S. No. 2151) to provide for the publication of the Tenth Census was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

THE LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 174) for printing the report of the Life-Saving Service, have instructed me to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides that there shall be printed 10,000 copies of the report of the operations of the United States Life-Saving Service for the year ending June 30, 1881, including the instructions to mariners in case of shipwreck and the tables showing the locations of stations, but without the other accompanying tables, for distribution among the officers of our merchant marine, through the collectors of customs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ANTHONY. This document is an important adjunct to the Life-Saving Service. It gives instructions to mariners how to cooperate with the life-saving stations for the salvation of life.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report a concurrent resolution for printing Professor Baird's report upon the food-fishes and the fisheries of the United States, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. HOAR. Let that go over.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be read for information.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

The Acting Secretary read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the Public Printer be, and is hereby, instructed to print in quarto form a report by the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries upon the food-fishes and the fisheries of the United States, the engraving to be in relief and to be contracted for by the Public Printer, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, and to receive the approval of the Commissioner before being accepted; the work to be stereotyped, and 5,500 extra copies printed, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of the House, and 1,500 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries. There shall also be printed 1,000 extra copies for sale by the Public Printer, under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe, at a price equal to the additional cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereon added.

Mr. COCKRELL. I see the proportion is one-fourth for the Senate and three-fourths for the House. I did not know that was the usual proportion of such documents.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that should be amended so as to provide for the printing of 1,500 for the Senate and 3,000 for the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be so modified.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understand, that document is not the annual report.

Mr. ANTHONY. No.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is a specific report.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is a specific report prepared with great care.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is an exceedingly valuable document, and ought to be published in larger number I think than is provided for by the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I see that this resolution contains one very important improvement on the practice of the Government, the old provision that people may order in advance so many copies on paying cost with 10 per cent. added. Nobody will ever make such an order of a public document in advance. This resolution provides for a small edition for sale at cost. If at the end of the year this edition is not taken up, the amount on hand will then be distributed to public libraries by a new order of Congress. As the resolution contains one of the provisions which I was desirous to have inserted in all such resolutions for printing, I will withdraw my request that this lie over.

Mr. MAXEY. I move to amend the concurrent resolution as presented by the Senator from Rhode Island so as to increase the number to 10,000, and to be distributed as follows: 2,500 to the Senate, 5,000 to the House, 1,500 to the Commissioner, and 1,000 for sale.

I will state my reason for moving the amendment. In my own State I happen to know that the demand for the fish report is very great indeed and is constantly increasing. Gentlemen there are making their pools for the purpose of receiving fish, and they desire light on the subject. I make the motion to amend on my personal belief that there is a demand for a larger number than the resolution calls for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read as proposed to be amended.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the Public Printer be, and is hereby, instructed to print, in quarto form, a report by the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries upon the food-fishes and the fisheries of the United States, the engravings to be in relief, and to be contracted for by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, and to receive the approval of the Commissioner before being accepted; the work to be stereotyped, and 10,000 extra copies printed, of which 2,500 shall be for the use of the Senate, 5,000 for the use of the House, and 1,500 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries. There shall also be printed 1,000 extra copies for sale by the Public Printer, under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe, at a price equal to the additional cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereon added.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas, [Mr. MAXEY.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 6695) granting four condemned cast-iron cannon to the post of the Grand Army of the Republic at Peabody, Massachusetts;

A bill (H. R. No. 684) to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government;

A bill (H. R. No. 6149) donating condemned cast-iron cannon for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 5978) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for the soldiers' cemetery at Knoxville, Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. No. 6679) donating condemned cast-iron cannon to the town of Hatfield, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6692) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6718) to donate two condemned cast-iron cannon and twelve cannon-balls to the A. E. Burnside Post No. 109 of the Grand Army of the Republic, of South Chicago, Illinois; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6721) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to Edward Pye Post No. 179 of the Grand Army of the Republic four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cannon-balls for decorating the proposed soldiers' monument at Haverstraw, New York.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 1819) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Elizabeth C. Custer; and

A bill (S. No. 1068) for the relief of certain citizens of Tennessee.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 2050) donating four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cast-iron cannon-balls for a soldiers' monument at Ironton, Ohio;

A bill (S. No. 604) granting a pension to Margaret Beymer;

A bill (S. No. 984) increasing the pension of Emma H. Collins;

A bill (S. No. 1040) granting a pension to Theodore Rauthe;

A bill (S. No. 1201) granting a pension to Jacob Nix;

A bill (S. No. 1886) donating four condemned cast-iron cannon for a soldiers' monument at the village of East Bloomfield, New York;

A bill (S. No. 2057) granting condemned cannon, &c., to the city of Marshalltown, Iowa.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 2872) to increase the pension of James Hawthorne;

A bill (H. R. No. 2005) to increase the pension of Elijah W. Penny;

A bill (H. R. No. 2349) granting an increase of pension to George J. Webb;

A bill (H. R. No. 1543) granting a pension to Albert O. Miller; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6401) granting a pension to Amelia Ann Wilson and her minor child.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 82) to provide for extra work in the Government Printing Office in cases of emergency, have instructed me to report a bill as a substitute therefor.

The bill (S. No. 2150) to provide for extra work in the Government Printing Office in case of emergency was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That for extra work ordered in emergencies and performed on Sundays or legal holidays or between the hours of midnight and eight a. m., excepting that done by regularly organized night forces, the Public Printer is hereby authorized to pay such extra prices as the customs of the trade and the justice of the case may require.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will explain this measure if Senators desire.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to interpose in the Senator's remarks, but I think that the bill had better go over. It had better not be discussed this morning. It is not a report for any printing, I understand.

Mr. HAWLEY. No; it is an instruction to the Public Printer as to certain matters of employment. I will explain it in a moment. An old standing statute that appears on page 47 of the Revised Statutes directs that the Public Printer shall cause work to be done at night as well as by day in case of emergency; and then afterward, in volume 19 of the Statutes at Large, page 231, Congress declared that the Public Printer should pay no more than forty cents per hour or fifty cents per thousand ems. That applies to all kinds of work, day and night. Last December the Public Printer, Mr. Defrees, in a decision afterward sanctioned by the present Public Printer, declared that the law compelled him to pay no more than that, even for extra work. Previous to that time it had always been the custom when day hands, ordinary hands, were ordered on extra work after night that they received, in accordance with the custom of the trade, additional compensation. That the Public Printer cannot give now; so that the Government Printing Office differs from every other printing office in this, that the hands ordered to extra work on Sundays or legal holidays or after midnight have no additional compensation.

We propose to give the Public Printer discretion to give such extra compensation in such cases as the custom of the trade and the justice of the case may require, not allowing this arrangement, however, to apply to regularly organized night forces. Some of the men are employed to work at night regularly. Their wages are fixed and remain as the statute has directed, but the Public Printer, in case he calls all his day hands to work at night or on Sundays, as he is sometimes obliged to do, has no discretion to give them any extra compensation. That has been only since last December, on renewed attention being attracted by Mr. Defrees, and now by Mr. Rounds, to the existing statute.

It is proposed to correct the inequality of the existing statute so as to allow the Public Printer to give a fair extra rate of compensation in cases of extra work.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask the Senator whether the regular compensation now paid is not equivalent to that which is paid by any private office in the city?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think it is somewhat in excess; but that was settled by Congress in 1877 by statute and after discussion and upon what seemed to be sufficient reasons, a good rate of compensation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Does the Senator know any city in the United States where the compensation for night service is greater than that paid now for regular service in the Government Printing Office?

Mr. HAWLEY. That I am sure I do not know; but the printers have always held, and Congress has yielded in general to the justice of their claim, that the printing in the Government Printing Office ought to be paid a little more than any other in the city for the reason that it is quite irregular. In the case of the day hands, the ordinary compositors, sometimes they are worked day and night, and then again hundreds of them will be suspended for weeks or for several months. The force fluctuates therefore in numbers very greatly according to the demands of the public service, and they think that this extra rate while they are at work and this little advance on what is given in ordinary private establishments does not make in the long average anything more than a fair rate of compensation. Congress has legislated in accordance with that general view.

Mr. PLUMB. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A bill has been reported from the Committee on Printing, which the Senator from Connecticut has explained. He asks for its present consideration.

Mr. PLUMB. I object to its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed under the rule.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ANTHONY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2145) for the repeal of so much of the "act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes," as provides for the retirement of General W. T. Sherman and Lieutenant-General P. H. Sheridan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSTON (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2146) for the relief of Nancy Hale; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2152) for the relief of Isaac H. Marks and Samuel Stone; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2147) for the relief of Benjamin Blankenship; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MORGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2148) granting a pension to Letitia Tyler Semple; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2149) granting a pension to John W. Wright; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, it was Ordered, That William R. Mason have permission to withdraw from the files of the Senate certain papers in support of his claim, subject to the rules of the Senate.

THE CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY.

Mr. WINDOM submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish the Senate with copies of the declaration of Sir Henry Lytton Bulwer and Mr. Clayton on the exchange of the ratifications of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty on the 4th day of July, 1850, and any other documents referred to in the instruction of Mr. Frelinghuysen to Mr. Lowell, dated the 8th day of May, 1882.

REFUNDING OF INCOME TAX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 1068) for the relief of certain citizens of Tennessee, which was, in line 1, to strike out "Commissioner of Internal Revenue" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. HARRIS. The Senate bill authorized the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to remit and refund certain direct taxes that had been improperly paid, and the House amended only by striking out the "Commissioner of Internal Revenue" and inserting the "Secretary of the Treasury." I ask the Senate at this time to concur in the House amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

HOUSE PENSION BILLS.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 388) granting a pension to Dennis Smith;

A bill (H. R. No. 447) granting a pension to M. H. Clements;

A bill (H. R. No. 452) granting a pension to H. E. Van Trees;

A bill (H. R. No. 454) granting a pension to Reuben Marshall;

A bill (H. R. No. 703) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Ryan;

A bill (H. R. No. 1874) granting a pension to Thomas F. Baker;

A bill (H. R. No. 718) granting a pension to Patrick Droney;

A bill (H. R. No. 2966) granting a pension to Annie W. Osborne;

A bill (H. R. No. 3047) granting a pension to John Hazlewood;

A bill (H. R. No. 3414) granting a pension to Sarah J. Cameron;

A bill (H. R. No. 3733) granting a pension to Mary E. Taylor;

A bill (H. R. No. 3737) granting a pension to Thomas McClain;

A bill (H. R. No. 4357) granting a pension to Barbara Marquardt;

A bill (H. R. No. 4367) granting an increase of pension to Robert Cary;

A bill (H. R. No. 4387) granting a pension to Anthony B. Graves;

A bill (H. R. No. 4582) for the relief of Francis Duffy;

A bill (H. R. No. 5034) granting a pension to Bridget Hamilton;

A bill (H. R. No. 5103) granting a pension to Margery Nightengale;

A bill (H. R. No. 5118) granting a pension to Elizabeth Weinstein;

A bill (H. R. No. 5849) granting a pension to Mary J. Hannaford;

A bill (H. R. No. 5959) reissuing the pension of Landon B. Grimes;

A bill (H. R. No. 5985) granting a pension to Martha Jane Douglass;
A bill (H. R. No. 5986) granting a pension to Emily Theadgill;
A bill (H. R. No. 6218) granting a pension to Hannah E. Alden;
A bill (H. R. No. 6249) granting an increase of pension to Joseph F. Wilson;
A bill (H. R. No. 6317) granting an increase of pension to James Bennett;
A bill (H. R. No. 6457) granting a pension to Jorial Onkst; and
A bill (H. R. No. 6728) granting an increase of pension to Rowland Ward.

The above pension bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

DOUBLE PENSIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The routine morning business is closed, and the regular order is the consideration of the Calendar under the Anthony rule.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 94) directing the Secretary of the Interior to withhold action in payment of double pension to General Ward B. Burnett.

Mr. PLATT. I do not make any objection to the motion of the Senator from Nebraska, as he is on the Committee on Pensions, and this relates to a pension matter, but I wish to give notice that as soon as the joint resolution is disposed of I shall ask the Senate to continue the consideration of pension cases as we did yesterday.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I offer the following amendment——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. VOORHEES. I object to the consideration of the joint resolution unless it is properly before the Senate, and in doing so I should like to make a statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves to set aside proceedings under the Anthony rule and to take up the joint resolution. That requires a majority vote of the Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not wish to be captious; I never am, I hope, to any Senator; I certainly would not be to the Senator from Nebraska; but I fail to see the necessity of any hurry about this matter.

I have conferred with the pension department, and no one there is under any impression that the public interests are about to suffer. They are asking for nothing of this kind. When the question comes up in a regular way I think it will be shown that no wrong has been done by the opinion of the Attorney-General, and that the Secretary of the Interior is quite competent to protect the Government in this as in other pension matters.

For that reason, and without any disposition at all to obstruct any Senator who desires to have such a measure passed, I shall not give my consent to displace the entire Calendar for the purpose of legislating, as it were, against this aged, helpless, bed-ridden old soldier.

Mr. VAN WYCK. When I wished to call up the joint resolution yesterday I understood from the Senator from Indiana that he desired it to lie over for one day, and it was then understood that the measure would be moved this morning.

Mr. VOORHEES. I thought myself that it would come up in its regular order, and when I rose just now I was not certain that an objection would stop its consideration, but I did not understand myself as agreeing that it might displace the entire Calendar and vacate the Anthony rule. At the same time I do not wish to be factious about it, and I am willing for it to come up when it can do so properly; but I do not think we ought to displace the entire business of the Senate to legislate as if the Departments were derelict in their duty and were allowing a scheme of plunder like the Chorpenning claim or something of that kind.

This is a little matter, but a few dollars one way or the other to one of the most helpless and at the same time most deserving men who lives. I talked with the Secretary of the Interior yesterday, and I betray no confidence when I say that he feels he is quite competent to protect the public interests; and he is not only not asking it but it would not be desirable for interference on the part of Congress. He feels that there is no necessity for it whatever. The Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney-General have this matter in hand, and they feel, as they ought to feel, that they are quite competent to decide what the law is, and that there is no danger of this old man plundering the Government.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The attention of the Committee on Pensions was called a few days ago to the fact that there was an attempt being made of an unprecedented kind, the effect of which was to put General Burnett upon the pension-rolls as drawing a double pension, a thing which is not known in the Government to-day. No man of all its brave and gallant officers and soldiers, from the beginning of the Government until now, has ever been granted that privilege. Neither was the privilege intended to be granted.

I will say to my friend from Indiana that his position is merely a begging of the question. No matter how many thousand dollars may be taken from the Treasury by reason of the decision of the Attorney-General, that is not the point under consideration, no matter how brave and meritorious General Burnett may be. The Senator from Indiana can say nothing in his eulogy too strong that will not be echoed by any gentleman on the floor of the Senate. The Senator from Indiana stated the other day that General Burnett carried the snuff-box of Andrew Jackson, and certainly he is entitled to carry it. But that is not the question. The question is not whether General Burnett is receiving too much or too little; the question is whether an executive officer of this Government can step in and annul a law passed by Congress.

It is strange that there should be any obstruction placed upon the immediate action by Congress in this matter. Senators ask us to wait a few days, when the object of waiting is that there may be accomplished what is sought to be by this opinion, that this money, great or small, may be taken out of the Treasury not only in defiance of law but against the express declaration of Congress itself.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. MAXEY. Suppose the effect of the laws be to raise a question as to the rights of General Burnett under them, can that question be settled constitutionally by Congress, or is it a question to be settled by the courts, being a case at law or in equity arising under the Constitution and laws?

Mr. VAN WYCK. The opinion settles no question of law. There is no construction of law in this case. There is first an absolute settlement of facts by the Attorney-General before they were presented to the Commissioner of Pensions. It is not a construction of law in this case, and I think I can satisfy——

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to inquire whether this discussion on the merits of the joint resolution is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order.

Mr. BLAIR. I differ very fundamentally from the views expressed by the Senator from Nebraska. I have investigated the question, probably not more than he has, but considerably, and I think the Attorney-General is right. If the case is to be discussed, I want to be heard on the merits.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It was proper that I should answer the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would not have interrupted the Senator from Nebraska, but the Senator from New Hampshire inquired whether the debate on the merits was in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I want the statement. I want to know why it is that this question which is supposed by the Committee on Pensions, probably with the exception of my colleague on the committee, [Mr. BLAIR,] to be important to be considered by the Senate, and I want to show why it is important. It seems to be a race, if the Senate will allow me just a moment——

Mr. BLAIR. I do not make any objection, but I desire to reply, if this discussion is going by unanimous consent.

Mr. VOORHEES. So do I.

Mr. BLAIR. This matter may as well be ventilated now as at any other time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On a motion to take up a bill a discussion of its merits is not in order.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Senator allow the joint resolution to be read again? I think the question can be disposed of by reference to the action of Congress yesterday.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let it be read.

The Acting Secretary read the joint resolution.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Now let my amendment be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, after the word "decision," the remainder of the joint resolution, and to insert:

> The President shall have acted upon a bill passed July 14, 1882, by Congress entitled "A bill granting a pension to Albert O. Miller, and for other purposes."

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I did not observe the amendment. I was going to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the fact that the Senate did act yesterday on the bill granting a pension to Albert O. Miller, in which the receiving of double pensions is prohibited, and the House acted upon it last night.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I understand that bill is a law except that it requires the signature of the President. We have obtained that much of what we struggled for on the start, to hold this matter until Congress could pass a law. The bill passed both Houses yesterday in defiance of this remarkable persistence. If the President should take one or two days before he signs the bill, those interested may yet accomplish what they are seeking to do, and all we ask by the joint resolution is that the Secretary of the Interior shall suspend action until this matter is disposed of.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have but one interest in this matter, and that is of feeling. It so happened that I was a member of the Pension Committee of the House and saw a great deal of General Burnett, who was not quite so helpless then as now. He is now totally disabled, needing the attention of a nurse to take care of him; he cannot walk at all without assistance. He first obtained, if I am accurate in my recollection, a pension at the rate of $30 a month. Afterward Congress passed a bill giving him $50 a month. It became a question whether the one increased the other or was in lieu of the other. The late President of the United States, Mr. Garfield, referred the matter by an executive order to the Attorney-General of the United States to determine which it was. The Attorney-General of the United States has decided, if I am correct in my recollection, that the two pensions go together, that is to say that one is an increase of the other; not that they are two pensions, but that he gets, if I have the amounts correct in my mind, $80 a month, which is less than other men have got for services not more distinguished and for sufferings not half so great as his.

I am perfectly frank with the Senate and before the country. I am very glad the Attorney-General has so construed the law, and that is the reason why I do not want it disturbed. So there can be no doubt about my position.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask my friend from Indiana whether this principle affects any other pensioner?

Mr. VOORHEES. Nobody else in the world. It is just special legislation.

Mr. BUTLER. It does not affect any other pensioner?

Mr. VOORHEES. Of course not. It affects no other pensioner, because there is no other case like it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I wish to ask a question before the Senator sits down.

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from South Carolina asks whether this applies to other cases. It applies to other cases similarly situated, and there may be hundreds.

Mr. GROOME. Thousands.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir; there may be hundreds and thousands of them. In every case where there is a special pension which Congress declares the pensioner shall receive in lieu of any other pension, if the Attorney-General can by his opinions say the party becomes entitled to both pensions in this case, he may say so in every other case where there are special pensions granted. Besides, if the Senator will go over the papers submitted here he will find that the Attorney-General has given this opinion, and then the Secretary of the Interior has said he will not apply it in any other case. What right has he to say that?

Mr. VOORHEES. I yielded for a question.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask that.

Mr. VOORHEES. The interruption is too long for a question. The Attorney-General only decided that one pension has been increased by the other.

Mr. BLAIR. I raise the question that debate on the merits is not in order.

Mr. VOORHEES. Only let me say a word to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BLAIR. I was pretty late in raising any point. I will acquiesce, but wish to be heard on the same principle.

Mr. VOORHEES. I want to say one word more, and then I shall not detain the Senate further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate on the merits of the bill is not in order; but the merits are discussed all the time. The Chair would not have interrupted the debate had not the Senator from New Hampshire raised the point.

Mr. BLAIR. I raise no point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point is withdrawn.

Mr. VOORHEES. Does anybody on this floor suppose that legal rights, if they have become vested in General Burnett by this legislation, can be divested now? As a matter of course not. Whether this decision is right or wrong, certain rights have been held by the proper authorities to be vested in him; that is the end of it, and he can go into court and enforce his remedy. In that view the Secretary of the Interior gave the order to pay this money without any compunction of conscience at all, believing it to be the fair and proper thing to do. That is all I wish to say.

Mr. BUTLER. Does it last only during the lifetime of General Burnett?

Mr. VOORHEES. Of course; and that will not be long.

Mr. GROOME. Mr. President, I know the rules of this body too well and respect them too thoroughly to attempt to discuss the merits of this joint resolution on a motion to take it up, but I wish before that motion is put that the Senate may understand that the Attorney-General has given a solemn opinion under which two pensions are to be paid to this man, although the Congress of the United States has expressly declared that one of them should be in lieu of the other; that under that opinion the Secretary of the Interior has issued a positive order to the Commissioner of Pensions to pay both pensions, with arrears upon the pension under the general act, and that the Commissioner of Pensions will be compelled at a very early day to obey the order of his chief unless this resolution is passed by Congress, and if he does obey it it will make a precedent which will come back to haunt the Committee on Pensions, giving to it trouble almost without limit, because of the constant claims of other pensioners that they ought to be treated with equal liberality.

I hope, therefore, while I shall not discuss this question unless the Senate takes it up, that it will take it up in order that it may be fully heard and considered.

Mr. BLAIR. I have been perhaps somewhat pointedly alluded to as the only member of the Committee on Pensions who is in favor of the payment of this double pension, as gentlemen please to call it, to General Burnett. This matter might just as well be met. I would rather see it met now than to be pressed with this continual innuendo, and, from my stand-point of view, misrepresentation of the facts of the case. So let us have this thing fought out.

Mr. VOORHEES. I withdraw all objections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to taking up this joint resolution? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 94) directing the Secretary of the Interior to withhold action in payment of double pension to General Ward B. Burnett.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. VAN WYCK,] which will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 4, after the word "decision," it is proposed to strike out:

Until Congress shall have acted upon a bill this day introduced, entitled "An act to prevent the payment of double pensions."

And insert:

Until the President shall have acted on a bill passed July 14, 1882, by Congress, entitled "An act granting a pension to Albert O. Miller, and for other purposes."

Mr. GARLAND. Let the Miller bill be read.

Mr. PLATT. I can read it from the RECORD, if that will do. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] yesterday offered this amendment to the bill granting a pension to Albert O. Miller, which was agreed to and has been concurred in by the House of Representatives:

And no person who is now receiving or shall hereafter receive a pension under a special act shall be entitled to receive in addition thereto a pension under the general law, unless the special act expressly states that the pension granted thereby is in addition to the pension which said person is entitled to receive under the general law.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, there is a great deal of misapprehension as well as most extraordinary zeal and haste in the pressure of this resolution, as it seems to me. I need not say anything of General Burnett. That he was a hero in five wars is as true as that he was the most distinguished among the brave in the Mexican war, and to him was awarded, as has been stated, the golden snuff-box of President Jackson, which he left to be given to the man who in the next foreign war after his death should most distinguish himself for his gallantry. General Burnett is now seventy-three or seventy-four years of age. In the last war he was too helpless, by reason of wounds and infirmities produced by exposure and extraordinary service, to perform active duty in the field; but what he could do he did, and throughout the war he was very efficient in the recruiting service. For the last fifteen or sixteen years he has been helpless or nearly helpless all the time, and much of the time bedridden and in extreme poverty. He and his wife have occupied rooms, hired apartments in this city and in other places, and they have had a very severe time in order to procure the actual necessaries of life. She has devoted herself to him with extraordinary zeal, and in every regard has demonstrated that she is a model of wifely virtues and devotion.

General Burnett for some time received a pension at the rate of $30 per month, and he received it under what was known as the disability clause. That is the highest pension given to any man whatever, no matter what his rank may have been in the service, unless he shall prove under more recent enactments that he is more than what the Department considers totally disabled; that is, besides being utterly disqualified for earning a living, he is at expenditure in the way of hiring servants, extra help, nursing, care, and attendance. Then he not merely stands upon an equilibrium, but he is at a positive expense in order to live at all. The general law as it has been modified from time to time during the last ten or twelve years has given to a man situated as General Burnett was $31.25, then $50, and now $72 per month. But General Burnett, until very lately, has never drawn under any of these provisions of the general law, but has drawn his $30 per month under this other section to which I have alluded.

I read now from the opinion of the Attorney-General in order to fix these dates and to show precisely the dues from the Government to General Burnett. He says in his opinion, dated June 29, 1882, in a communication to the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Teller:

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 24th instant concerning the case of General Ward B. Burnett, I have the honor to advise you that according to the opinion rendered by this Department on the 10th of April last the rates of pension which should be allowed General Burnett are as follows:

From June 4, 1872, to June 4, 1874, $31.75 per month. (Act of March, 1873, fourth section.)

This, bear in mind, is under the general law, the act of March, 1873, section 4.

From June 4, 1874, to June 17, 1878, (act of June 18, 1874,) $50 per month.

Under the general law.

From June 17, 1878, $72 per month, (act of June 16, 1880.)

So much for his right under the general law.

Under the special act of March 3, 1879, General Burnett has drawn and is entitled still to draw $50 per month.

This was given him "in lieu of the pension he now receives." But, as I have stated, the pension which he was then receiving was the $30 pension and not the pension to which he was entitled under what is known as the general law, and which varied according to what the general law was during those different periods.

Now, I ask the attention of Senators to this point, for it is an important point, and perhaps in the opinion of the Attorney-General it is the prevailing point. The question is whether by these words

"in lieu of the pension he now receives," to be found in the special act, he is deprived of the right to receive any pension whatever under the general law. It is conceded that at that time he was receiving nothing under the general law. He was receiving a pitiful pension of $30 a month, and that was all that he was receiving, all that he ever had received. Under the general law nothing whatever had been drawn by him at any time, and at the time of the passage of this special act containing these words, "under the general law," he was entitled to receive pension at the rate of $50 under the general law. Having that right under the general law, Congress passes a special act stating that he shall receive pension by virtue of its provisions at the rate of $50 per month, precisely the amount that he would have been entitled to under the general law. To say that Congress passed a statute giving him by virtue of its provisions precisely the same amount he was entitled to then under the general law is to say that we indulge ourselves in superfluous legislation. That could not have been the design of Congress, to simply, by a special act, confer on him rights that he already had under the general law. So these words, "in lieu of the pension he now receives," must be applied in their literal sense, as relating to the only pension that he was then receiving, which was the pension of $30 a month, which he did not derive under the general law.

It is upon that ground, to make the legislation of Congress sensible, and to give the natural construction to the language itself, that the Attorney-General holds that those words, "in lieu of the pension he now receives," are not to be construed as applicable to whatever rights he may have had under the general law.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Before discussion proceeds any further I desire to inquire whether this resolution is being considered under the Anthony rule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is being considered without reference to the Anthony rule, having been taken up on special motion.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I understood the resolution was being considered under the Anthony rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MILLER, of California, in the chair.) The President of the Senate holds that it was not. It was ordered to be taken up without reference to the Anthony rule.

Mr. BLAIR. If this opinion of the Attorney-General is correct General Burnett would be entitled to receive from 1872 down to the present time such amounts as were due him under the general law, deducting the payments that may have been made to him: for a portion of that time he would be allowed but $31.25, from which would be deducted the $30 that he was then receiving; for a subsequent portion of the time he would be entitled to $50, from which would be deducted the $30 already paid to him, and for the remaining portion of the time $72 per month, from which would be deducted the payments made him until his special pension commenced in 1879; and at the present time and for the future, unless legislation should interfere, he would be entitled to draw as I would construe the law—though that perhaps has not been decided, but I think it is a fair inference that the Attorney-General would so hold—the $50 granted him by the special act and the $72 per month which he is entitled to under the general law.

That would make him $122 a month; and considering his age, considering the character of his services, I do not think when we are paying retired officers who have done nothing for years, who have their physical health as yet unimpaired, two and three and I do not know but in some instances more than three thousand dollars annually, it is an extravagant sum to give to this veteran who is now seventy-three years old and who was in the service some forty-five years.

But, Mr. President, whatever may be his rights under the general law, it is as I hold entirely impossible for legislation to change them, certainly so far as the past is concerned. We may interfere and deprive him of all pension for the future; but so far as his rights have accrued and have vested under existing laws, it is as impossible for us to affect them as it is to change the course of nature by an act of Congress, because they are vested rights. It is very true that we may put a cloud over his title; we may pass an act that would intimidate the executive department, so to speak, in the discharge of its duty; we may trouble this old gentleman who is unable to fight us in the courts and who cannot very well perhaps get his rights around here by subsequent and remedial acts of Congress; we may practically deprive him of what belongs to him; but it is a practical robbery in which the Congress of the United States does itself no credit, in my opinion, to be engaged. Leave him to the courts; at all events give him his rights there; and do not encumber his case by clouding it with such legislation as is attempted here.

Mr. President, for about two years or over, one year at all events, General Burnett has been anxiously endeavoring to ascertain at the Departments what his rights might be. He has met with adverse decisions from the Committee on Pensions, from which he has appealed to two former Secretaries of the Interior, and by them his rights under the law have been overruled; but he has finally succeeded in obtaining the opinion of the highest law officer of the United States, and that opinion, arrived at after mature and careful consideration of a matter that had been long in controversy, and which he must carefully have examined for that reason if for no other, is favorable to General Burnett, and does give to him some arrears of pension—much of which has already been paid to him—and fixes his rights for the future at $122 per month. I admit that we can stop him and deprive him of those rights by legislation, and I have not objected to resolutions and to bills, if it is thought best to introduce them, of that character. In our committee-room the bill which had been prepared by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GROOME] was ordered to be reported by the committee unanimously at my suggestion, so that there might be immediate action that would save any rights of the Government, if it needs any protection, in reference to other cases. But after that bill has been reported, and by a remarkable zeal and adroitness, of which I make no complaint, attached to a private pension bill and put through both Houses of Congress yesterday and hurried to the President, so that to-day the Treasury is as safe as though it was surrounded by the entire standing Army of the United States—after that has been done it does seem to me the very height of folly and of littleness to waste our time here in this warfare on General Ward B. Burnett. For my own part I fail entirely to share in the zeal with which my colleagues on the committee, some of them at least, are pressing this joint resolution upon the attention of Congress.

Mr. GROOME. Mr. President——

Mr. VOORHEES. Before the Senator from Maryland proceeds I desire to have the opinion of the Attorney-General read, in order that we may know exactly what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The opinion will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., April 10, 1882.

SIR: The late President Garfield submitted to Hon. Wayne MacVeagh the question whether General Ward B. Burnett should be allowed the increase of pension granted by the act of June 16, 1880, to a certain class of pensioners. The Attorney-General referred the matter to the Solicitor-General.

In a memorandum made and submitted to the Attorney-General on the 15th of June, 1881, the Solicitor reaches a conclusion favorable to General Burnett's claim, and says that it is very meritorious, adding that it is "met by objections that are perhaps only inter apices juris."

On the 23d of June, 1881, the Secretary of the Interior addressed a letter to the Attorney-General propounding several questions touching the case, involving nice points of law.

This letter also was referred to the Solicitor-General, who answered each of the questions put by the Secretary in the negative, without assigning reasons.

This answer went to the Interior Department as the opinion of the Department of Justice upon the whole case. Its effect was to reject General Burnett's application.

General Burnett has again appealed to the President, who again, March 25, 1882, refers the case to the Attorney-General, and, noting the "seeming conflict of opinion in the two communications upon the subject from the Department of Justice," desires a further examination.

It is upon this second appeal to the President that the case is now before me.

After looking carefully into the case, I am inclined to concur in the first opinion intimated by the Solicitor-General in his report made to the Attorney-General on the 15th of June, 1881.

It is admitted that General Burnett was entitled to a pension of $50 per month under the law of June 18, 1874, though it is under a special act that he has received that sum as a pension.

The intent and spirit of that act of June 16, 1880, is that all those soldiers and sailors whose present right it was at the time of its passage, to demand and receive a pension of $50 a month under the law of 1874, should have the same increased to $72. To say that only those who on the 16th of June, 1880, were upon the pension-roll under the act of 1874 are entitled to the increase, is to put too literal and narrow a construction upon the statute. The words "now receiving" in the act of 1880 should be construed to mean now entitled to receive. For, if the precise literal meaning is insisted on, only those who on that day, the 16th of June, 1880, actually received their pensions under the law of 1874 could have the increase; but this is absurd.

The intent and purpose of Congress in passing the act should be considered, and a reasonable and liberal construction given to it. It could never have been the intention of Congress to shut out from its bounty veterans who, like General Burnett, totally disabled and helpless from wounds received in battle, had, through ignorance, neglected to put themselves upon the pension-roll.

It is, however, objected that if General Burnett's name was placed on the roll under the general law, an increase of pension could not be allowed him except from the date of an examination surgeon's certificate made under a claim for such increase. The objection is founded upon sections 4698, 4698½, Revised Statutes. The answer is, that General Burnett is within the exception of that law. His disability is and has been for more than ten years specific and permanent.

Again, it is objected that if General Burnett's name should be placed on the roll under the law of 1874, to receive pension under that law from a date subsequent to June 16, 1880, his pension could not be increased under the act of the later date. This is clearly inter apices juris.

If his name were placed now upon the pension-roll he would not receive his pension under the act of 1874, but under the act of June 16, 1880. The act of 1874 was an amendment of the fourth section of the general pension law of March 3, 1873, (section 4698, Revised Statutes,) in this particular only, that it raised the pensions of those who were entitled to $31.25 per month under the law of 1873 to $50. Then the act of June 16, 1880, comes in, and simply increases the pensions of the same class of pensioners to $72 per month. It is a substitute for the act of 1874, and abrogates it.

It appears that the pensioners who, under the general law, were on June 16, 1880, entitled to receive $31.25 per month, (which is General Burnett's case,) are, under the act of June 16, 1880, entitled to $72 per month. There is no doubt that this was the intention of Congress.

Cases like General Burnett's are entitled to the increase, no matter when they make application for it. The facts showing his right to be upon the pension-roll, not the time when his name is placed there, are the important and governing considerations.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

The PRESIDENT.

Mr. GROOME. Now, Mr. President, before I proceed, that all the opinions may be fresh in the memory of the Senate, I ask for the reading of the later opinions, which will be found in the RECORD of Tuesday's proceedings.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., June 29, 1882.

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 24th instant concerning the case of General Ward B. Burnett, I have the honor to advise you that according to the opinion rendered by this Department on the 10th of April last the rates of pension which should be allowed General Burnett are as follows:

From June 4, 1872, to June 4, 1874, $31.75 per month. (Act of March, 1873, fourth section.)

From June 4, 1874, to June 17, 1878, (act of June 18, 1874,) $50 per month.

From June 17, 1878, $72 per month. (Act June 16, 1880.)

Under the special act of March 3, 1879, General Burnett has drawn and is entitled still to draw $50 per month.

True, this was given him "in lieu of the pension he now receives," but the pension he was then receiving was $30 per month. This was not the sum which he was entitled to receive under the general law.

The $30, it is presumed, was paid him under section 4695 Revised Statutes, as for total disability, and in lieu of this the special act gives him $50. It provided also that nothing "in this act" (the special act) shall entitle General Burnett to arrears of pension.

It is not under this act that back pay of pension is claimed, but under the general laws cited above, which entitle him to the rate of pension prescribed therein.

I do not think the special act can be so construed as to deprive General Burnett of these.

It should be considered as a law by itself, intended to show the estimate by Congress of the great services of General Burnett to the country, having regard also to his helpless condition.

I am of opinion that two pension certificates should be issued to General Burnett, one under the act of June 6, 1880, the other under the special act of March 3, 1879.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

Hon. H. M. TELLER,
Secretary of the Interior.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., July 7, 1882.

SIR: In the pension case of General Ward B. Burnett, I have the honor to observe, in reply to your letter of the 3d instant, that the said pensioner, under the general act of 1874, was entitled to, though he was not receiving, a pension of $50 a month. While so entitled, Congress passed a special act giving him another pension. This did not take away his right under the general law, nor was his pension merged in that granted by the special act.

The case is exceptional. In the law under the title "Pensions," as enacted in 1873, nothing can be so construed as to allow more than one pension at the same time to the same person. But subsequently, Congress having the power, stepping beyond the rule prescribed in section 4715, by a separate, independent law gives to a pensioner already entitled to a pension of $50 another pension of the same amount. Section 4715 has, in my judgment, no application to a case of this kind. The special act of March 3, 1879, has not been repealed or its force and effect taken away by any subsequent legislation.

I adhere to the opinion expressed in my letter of the 29th ultimo.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

Hon. H. M. TELLER,
Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GROOME. Mr. President, I will endeavor briefly to state the facts and the reasons which induced the Committee on Pensions on Tuesday last to direct me to report the bill to prevent the payment of double pensions, and which led that committee to instruct the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] to report the resolution which is now under consideration.

Upon that morning while the committee was in session the fact was brought to its attention that the Attorney-General had made a decision in the matter of the pension application of General Ward B. Burnett, which was considered as fraught with most serious consequences to the Treasury of this Government; for while that decision professed to treat the case as one sui generis, the grounds upon which that opinion was based were sufficiently broad to cover, as the committee readily discovered, a vast number of other cases, and if that opinion was allowed to stand as unchallenged law it was plain that it would result in the depletion of the Treasury ultimately to the extent of many millions of dollars. Hence the introduction of the bill to which I have alluded and of the resolution now under consideration.

General Ward B. Burnett was one of the bravest of the brave in the war with Mexico, and in the battle of Churubusco he was seriously wounded in the left leg; and as the result of that wound, it is said, and I have no doubt correctly, that he is now permanently and totally disabled to such an extent as to require the constant care and attention of another person.

In September, 1848, he applied for a pension under the general law, and was granted a pension at the rate of $30 a month from August 1, 1848, that being the highest rate of pension allowed to officers of the rank of lieutenant-colonel and upward who were totally disabled in battle. That pension he continued to draw from August 1, 1848, until March 3, 1879, when, having applied to the Congress of the United States to grant him a pension of $100 per month in lieu of the pension which he was receiving under the general law, Congress, instead of so doing, did upon the day last named grant him a pension at the rate of $50 per month, which pension expressly stated upon its face that it was in lieu of the pension which he was then receiving. In the mean time, upon June 8, 1872, Congress had passed a law in which it declared that those soldiers who had lost in the service both feet, both hands, or both eyes, or who, having lost one eye from causes not incident to the service, lost the other eye in the service, should be entitled to a pension at the rate of $31.25 per month. This act was afterward re-enacted into the act of March 3, 1873, which is now known as the general pension act.

Later on, upon June 18, 1874, Congress passed another act by which it gave to soldiers such as I have named a pension of $50 per month, which pension was to date from June 4, 1874. Upon June 16, 1880, it increased the pension of this class of pensioners to $72 a month, to date from June 17, 1878. By these several acts it also gave pensions to a like extent to other soldiers not suffering from the specific disabilities named therein, but who were suffering from other disabilities of such a character as permanently and totally to disable them, and to require that they should have the constant care and attention of another person.

But in the very section of the pension laws which follows the clause giving these pensions, in section 4698½ of the Revised Statutes, it is expressly declared that no soldier who is not suffering from one of the specific disabilities named in these acts shall have the benefit of the increased pension until he has applied for that increased pension, has been examined by an examining surgeon, and has procured the certificate of that surgeon that he is entitled to the increase, and then the increase shall only date from the giving of the examining surgeon's certificate.

General Burnett never applied for any of these increases until June 24, 1880. So it is perfectly plain by the express provisions of the pension laws that he could not have any of these increases which were mentioned in the act of March 3, 1873, in the act of June 18, 1874, and in the act of June 16, 1880, because he had refused or had failed to comply with the conditions upon which alone he could become entitled to those pensions under the express provisions of section 4698½ of the Revised Statutes.

However, when in 1880 he did make this application, and when he was refused for the reason that I have indicated, the Attorney-General of the United States was applied to to decide as to the pension rights of General Burnett. He has now given the extraordinary opinion that General Burnett, being on the pension-roll at $30 per month at the time of the passage of the special act, was not on that roll in accordance with law; that the pension then being paid to him was an illegal pension; that in the eyes of the law it was a mere nullity; and that that being the case the provision of the special act, which declared that that pension was in lieu of the pension he was then receiving, could have no application to his case, and he has decided that General Burnett was entitled to $72 a month, notwithstanding he had never made application as required under section 4698½ for the increase. He further decided that he was also entitled to the $50 a month under the special act which declared that that pension was in lieu of the other, and that he should have in the future $122 per month, with arrears upon the $72 per month, and that from those arrears should be deducted no part of the payments which had been made to him under the special act at $50 per month.

Mr. President, in making this decision, remarkable as it is, the Attorney-General showed that he lacked the courage of his convictions or that he was unwilling, having taken an untenable position, personally to give to it the reductio ad absurdum; for if it be true that when Congress passes a special act giving a pension of a certain rate per month in lieu of the pension the party is receiving under the general law that party is entitled to both pensions, then the Attorney-General has not gone far enough in the opinion, and General Burnett's rights are much greater than those which he has chosen to accord to him.

The pension act of 1880 says in express terms that the pension thereby granted of $72 per month is in lieu of the pension granted under the act of 1874 of $50 a month, and the act of 1874 says that the pension of $50 per month thereby granted is in lieu of the pension of $31.25 per month granted by the act of 1873. So, then, if the language that one pension is given in lieu of another is to be construed as meaning that the one pension is to be in addition to the other, then General Burnett is entitled to three pensions under the general law, and to the pension under the special act, and should receive in the aggregate a pension of $203.25 per month instead of the pension of $122 per month, to which the Attorney-General has said that he is entitled.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will excuse me for asking if he pretends that the Attorney-General has decided any such thing as he now states?

Mr. GROOME. No, sir. I said expressly, though, and I repeat it, that that proposition follows logically from the position the Attorney-General has taken.

Mr. BLAIR. Permit me to ask how that can be if one act repeals the other? If the act giving the larger pension only goes into effect when the previous one ceases to have effect, how can he manage to cipher it out that both acts are in effect all the time, so that now, to-day, according to his theory or construction the act allowing $72, we have that which it repealed giving $50, making $122, and the act which that repealed giving $31.25, and thus cumulatively we have one hundred and fifty odd dollars all in force by the provisions of acts which have severally each repealed the other until the last.

Mr. GROOME. The Senator from New Hampshire mistakes my position utterly if he understands me as claiming that that is the true construction of the pension laws.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will excuse me. I understood him to say that the Attorney-General had rendered a decision which was tantamount to that.

Mr. GROOME. That I say without any hesitation in the world, and for that reason I have stated——

Mr. BLAIR. Then I did not misapprehend the Senator's point.

Mr. GROOME. These acts do not repeal one another unless they are to be construed as repealing one another for the reason that the one pension is said to be in lieu of the other. I consider that as making a repeal of the former pension. The Attorney-General does not so consider it in the Burnett case; and if it is not to be so considered in the Burnett case, then I say without any hesitation it is not to be so considered in any other case. I used that simply to illustrate the false and untenable position in which the Attorney-General had placed himself in giving this opinion.

In attempting to decide at what rate General Burnett is entitled to be pensioned, the Attorney-General has disregarded the express provision of the special act which declared in so many words that the pension thereby granted was in lieu of the then existing pension.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator quote that clause precisely as it is in the act? "In lieu of the pension he is now receiving," not what he is entitled to receive under the general law.

Mr. GROOME. Precisely; that was what I said.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator state what pension General Burnett was then receiving and the only pension he was then receiving? Was it not $30 per month?

Mr. GROOME. It was $30 per month, which I have already shown was the pension which the party was entitled, and the only pension which the party was entitled, under the general law, to receive; nor did I misquote in the least, for I am not in the habit when I rise of misquoting in the least the precise substance of the act to which I allude. I did not say that that special act declared that it was in lieu of the pension under the general law; I said in lieu of the pension that he was then receiving. That was the precise substance of the language.

Mr. BLAIR. I beg the Senator's pardon. That was not his expression as I understood it. Probably the Reporter's notes will show.

Mr. GROOME. The Reporter's notes will show whether I am correct, as I know those were the words I used.

Mr. BLAIR. There is no occasion to refer to the notes, if the Senator knows that he is correct.

Mr. GROOME. I was very cautious as to my expression. I trust I shall not be further interrupted. I have been a member of the Senate for upward of three years, and I have never yet interrupted any Senator in the course of a speech unless I was directly appealed to, and I do not think it is unreasonable to ask that the same rule which I apply to every Senator upon this floor may be applied to me when I am in the discussion of this question.

I say that in rendering this decision the Attorney-General utterly disregarded the express provision of the special act, which special act declares that the pension thereby granted is in lieu of the pension which the party was then receiving; that he disregarded the express provision of section 4698½ of the Revised Statutes, which declares that no pensioner shall have the benefit of any law providing for an increase where his disability is not one of the specific ones named in the statute until he has applied for the benefit of the increase and the examining surgeon had declared him entitled thereto. He resolutely closed his eyes to the light shed upon the question by section 4715 of the Revised Statutes, which declares that the true rule of construing pension laws is that no man shall have two pensions, and that where having one pension he becomes entitled to another he shall make his election as to which of the two he will thereafter receive. He refused to call to his aid any of the recognized canons of construction which have been laid down by the eminent jurists and text-writers of our own and other lands, and he invented a new and a remarkable canon of construction, which is that these special pension laws are to be construed as laws by themselves intended to show the estimate of Congress of the great services of the pensioner, and as having regard also to his helpless condition; and he seemed to deduce as a corollary from this rule of construction that the special pension acts are to be construed with such liberality as to give to the pensioner what the construing officer may regard as a liberal support, even if that can only be done by construing the words "in lieu of" to mean "in addition thereto."

In applying this new rule of construction he rejected all the accustomed vestments of the law and bedecked himself in the fantastic ruffles and frills of sentimentality.

He says that this case is exceptional. It is not exceptional. It is his opinion which is exceptional. That opinion is more than that; it is astounding; it is bewildering. Well did a distinguished Senator the other day say that it was hard to understand how any official of the Government in the full possession of his senses could render such an opinion; and it is equally difficult for me to understand how one not in the full possession of his mental faculties can be in the full and unchallenged possession of the high office of Attorney-General of the United States. The keenness of a Philadelphia lawyer has long passed into a proverb; but when the Attorney-General solemnly rendered this deliberate opinion he eclipsed all his fellows and proved himself to be without a rival at that or at any other bar. When the poet declared—

> Optics sharp it needs, I ween,
> To see what is not to be seen,

he had no adequate conception of the wonderful perspicacity of the present Attorney-General, who has experienced no difficulty in finding upon the face of the statute a meaning which is precisely the opposite of that which it in plain and unambiguous terms expresses.

I say the case is not exceptional. General Ward B. Burnett was a soldier of very great gallantry in the war with Mexico and he deserves all the praise which can be bestowed upon him for his services there, and perhaps elsewhere; but it is the pride and boast of our country that in its wars it has produced thousands of heroes, many of them humble privates in the ranks, who have done acts of reckless daring, who have proved themselves ever ready to incur any risk, ready to do and die, if need be, that their country might live. If the daring exploits of these men were as well known to the historian and to the poet as they are to those who surrounded them in those hours of mortal danger many of them would be perpetuated in our prose chronicles and in our songs. One of these nameless heroes was before the Pension Committee within the last few months, who, by his individual daring upon the field of battle, testified to by his commanding officer, had turned the tide of battle, and who was asking but the humble pension which the laws give in a case of ordinary disability to a private soldier, but who had to be denied because, being under no bodily disability, your committee thought it would be dangerous to treat his case as exceptional.

While I recognize General Burnett as a soldier whose bravery was most distinguished, most soul-inspiring, most worthy of the emulation of the youth of this land who may hereafter be called to rally around our country's flag; while I would not pluck one leaf from his laurel crown—in simple justice to the known and to the nameless heroes of our wars, I must insist that it was not exceptional. Nor is his case exceptional in its legal bearings. The Attorney-General says—and I prefer quoting literally from his opinion:

> The case is exceptional. In the law under the title "Pensions," as enacted in 1873, nothing can be so construed as to allow more than one pension at the same time to the same person. But subsequently, Congress, having the power, stepping beyond the rule prescribed in section 4715, by a separate, independent law gives to a pensioner already entitled to a pension of $50 another pension of the same amount. Section 4715 has, in my judgment, no application to a case of this kind.

Take that very proposition of the Attorney-General, look at it, read it literally, and according to it every man who is upon the pension-roll receiving a pension and who afterward receives a pension by a special act is entitled to receive both, for he makes the point expressly that section 4715 does not apply where there have been special acts since the passage of the general act, and that in such cases the pension is to be construed as in addition to that given by the general law. Certainly there is no class of cases in which the Pension Committee is oftener called upon to grant pensions than that in which the pensioner complains that he is improperly rated under the general law, that being entitled to a higher rate of pension he is receiving a smaller one; and there is hardly a meeting of the Pension Committee in which that committee, being inclined to think that there is some solid foundation for the applicant's complaint, does not declare that he shall have the higher rate of pension in lieu of the smaller one.

Now, if the Attorney-General's opinion is right that when a man receiving $30 a month, who he chooses to say ought to have received at one time $31.25 and at another $50—an assumption which I have shown is utterly unfounded in fact—is raised to $50 by special act, the words "in lieu of" mean "in addition to," then in all these cases the pensioners under special acts are entitled to claim the double pension, the one under the general law at the highest rate they can establish, and the one under the special act. So then this case is not exceptional.

Mr. President, the bill which was passed by the unanimous consent of Congress through the two Houses yesterday shows us plainly what was the original intention of Congress in passing these special acts; and it is hard to believe that it can by possibility be disregarded; but it is a matter of extreme importance that this ruling of the Attorney-General should not be allowed to affect this particular case and to make a precedent which will come back, as I said earlier in the day, to haunt the Pension Committee.

Our committee has found that no bad precedent has ever been made that has not led to applications by the dozen, if not by the hundred, in cases which are really like the one in which the bad precedent was established or where the party claiming the pension thinks his is case like the one allowed; and it is a matter of the greatest possible importance that this opinion of the Attorney-General should not be allowed to stand even as to this particular case.

But, says the Senator from New Hampshire, this pensioner has under this opinion a vested right in the pension which is granted him. I say without any hesitation that he has no such thing. There is no such thing as a vested right in a pension granted subsequent to the service rendered, which would prevent our Government under proper circumstances from repealing the pension act.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will not object to an interruption, do I understand him to assert that under existing law a pensioner obtains no vested right until some repeal of the law, so that General Burnett, if for the last year or two years he had failed to collect his pension, and Congress should to-day see fit to enact that he should be deprived of it, would have no remedy in the courts?

Mr. GROOME. I say, sir, that where a pension act has been passed providing that a soldier shall receive a certain rate of pension after the service of that soldier has been rendered, that act has no element of contract, and any subsequent Congress can at its pleasure repeal the act granting the pension, and that after the act has been repealed all rights under it fall with it, unless they have been reserved in the repealing act.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator then hold that if Congress to-day should get frightened, as some members have got most seriously frightened about this matter, and should forthwith between now and two o'clock, the expiration of the morning hour, repeal all the pension laws and the President should be induced in hot haste to sign that bill, the pension list of the country so far as it was uncollected to the present date would be extinguished, that there would be no right in the soldiers of the country to take from the Treasury that which they supposed they were entitled to up to the present time?

Mr. GROOME. I hold that if Congress were to pass an act of the character suggested by the Senator from New Hamsphire, it would be extremely bad legislation. If Congress were to enact a law repealing the existing pensions and not granting others of at least an equal amount in their stead, after a large proportion of our soldiers have received the regular pensions given them by the pension laws, and when others of them, to the number of many thousands, have filed their applications, made their proofs, and taken all proper steps to entitle them to their pensions, and are awaiting the final actions of the Pension Bureau upon their applications, it would be most unjustifiable legislation—I say such a law would be of such a bad character that it could not be successfully defended before the American people; but I say, nevertheless, that if Congress chooses to do such a thing, it has the undoubted right to do it.

But, Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire seems not to be aware that Congress has already done the very thing of which he complains. I do not say under the circumstances of the case that it was not justified in doing it, but it has done it and its legal right to do it has never been, nor can it be successfully, questioned. I refer to section 4716 of the Revised Statutes. That section reads:

No money on accouut of pension shall be paid to any person, or to the widow, children, or heirs of any deceased person, who in any manner voluntarily engaged in, or aided or abetted, the late rebellion against the authority of the United States.

I do not say that Congress did not do right in passing that law, but I do say that if the position of the Senator from New Hampshire is correct, it had no right to pass it, for the pensions of those people were vested and could not be interfered with by any subsequent legislation of Congress, a legal position which in my opinion would not stand for a single moment of time.

So I will simply say in conclusion that this pensioner has received already under this ruling of the Attorney-General a pension under both the special and general act up to this time with arrears under the general act, subject only to the deduction of the sum received under the special act out of the allowance for arrears. If this resolution does not pass, and pass promptly, he will receive under this ruling of the Attorney-General, at the lowest estimate, an additional sum of $2,950. I say that payment ought to be stopped, because brave and noble as I concede General Burnett to be, he ought not to be in a different position from any other soldier who has rendered distinguished service to the country. He ought not, in other words, to receive, under the pretext that it is in accordance with law, a pension which Congress showed in plain and unambiguous terms it did not intend him to have.

Let us then pass this joint resolution; let us pass it at once, and if on any future day the Senator from New Hampshire shall introduce a bill, as he may do under the bill which was passed yesterday, to give General Burnett in express terms a pension in addition to that which he is receiving under the existing law, then it will be for us to consider the question, and if we think his services are of such a character as to entitle him to two pensions there will be no difficulty about his obtaining them; but do not allow him because of an improper ruling of the Attorney-General to receive a pension which neither House of Congress ever intended him to receive and which he is not entitled to receive under any proper construction of the law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no speech to make. I know not, I care not whether this is a double pension or an increase of pay. I am unwilling to rob this gallant old soldier of the bounty of a generous Government. Why, sir, this is the most extraordinary proceeding I have ever seen in a legislative body. This resolution is in the nature of an injunction to restrain this brave old soldier, on the brink of the grave, from receiving his just dues from his Government which its Department of Justice has decided the law gave him. We have as much right to pass a resolution restraining the Supreme Court of the United States from rendering decisions in causes before it until the Legislature can change the Supreme Court.

Ah, sir, let me tell you no man but a true soldier knows how he feels, and an effort to deprive this brave old man, by whose side I stood thirty-five years ago, strikes me in one of the tenderest parts of my nature. There is no tie that binds men together in life as strong as that of common hardships and common dangers. I was with General Burnett thirty-five years ago. I saw him with his splendid regiment, the most magnificently equipped and dressed that I ever saw go to war, on the burning sands of Mexico, march up to those desperate battle-fields around the city. He fell there on the battle-field of Churubusco, covered with honor, and he covered his country with honor; and the Senate of the United States is higgling to-day about whether this is an increase of pension or whether it is a double pension. I do not care which it is; I am against taking it from him; I am for his having it. If the law gives it to him we have no right to take it from him, and the Department of Justice, the highest officer in it, has decided that he is entitled to it. Why, then, attempt to rob him of it?

That man is the bravest of the brave. He is near seventy-five years old. I saw him this morning, unable to walk, unable to dress himself even, leaning on the shoulder of his aged wife, and I would not rob him of one cent of his pension. I would rather give it to him a thousand times. Why shall we attempt here by an injunction to restrain him from getting it? Sir, it is a business that does not come up to the dignity of the Senate of the United States, and I hope the resolution will be rejected. I move to lay it on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of two o'clock has arrived, and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation. Before it is considered, however, the Chair begs indulgence to present some House bills for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. No. 6695) granting four condemned cast-iron cannon to the post of the Grand Army of the Republic at Peabody, Massachusetts;

A bill (H. R. No. 6149) donating condemned cast-iron cannon for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 5978) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for the soldiers' cemetery at Knoxville, Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. No. 6679) donating condemned cast-iron cannon to the town of Hatfield, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6692) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6718) to donate two condemned cast-iron cannon and twelve cannon-balls to the A. E. Burnside Post No. 109 of the Grand Army of the Republic, of South Chicago, Illinois; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6721) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to Edward Pye Post No. 178 of the Grand Army of the Republic, four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cannon-balls, for decorating the proposed soldiers' monument at Haverstraw, New York.

The bill (H. R. No. 684) to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to ask that the bill which was pending yesterday be laid aside informally for the purpose of taking up the general appropriation bill for pension so that it may be acted on. I do not think it will take long.

Mr. MORRILL. That bill will not take much time, as I am informed, and as it is important it should pass at once, I yield to it; but I give notice that I will not yield to any other appropriation bill or anything else.

Mr. SHERMAN. As the remark has been often made that appropriation bills always have preference, I desire to remark that the rules of the House give revenue bills always precedence, and the same practice has been adopted in the Senate. There is no contest about this matter, however.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the pending measure will be laid aside informally, and the pension appropriation bill taken up. The Chair hears no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6243) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes; it agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. FRANK HISCOCK of New York, Mr. G. M. ROBESON of New Jersey, and Mr. S. S. COX of New York, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to submit an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and I call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to the amendment, so that it shall not be neglected. It is in line 1233 of the bill, making a provision for the Togus home. The amendment is as follows:

And no alcoholic or fermented liquors shall be sold on the territory ceded to the United States for the said home, the sale of which would be a violation of the laws of Maine if no such cession had been made.

It is a great trouble to the temperance people of Maine to know that within their own borders liquor is sold in open violation of the law of Maine on territory ceded by that State to the United States for this soldiers' home. There is no reservation by which they can control it. No reservation was made at the time of the cession in any way, and it seems to me that it is proper that the United States territory there in the State of Maine should conform to the laws of the State. I do not know whether this amendment will do it or not; there is no penalty; but it seems to me that a direction of Congress would have sufficient control over the general in charge of that home. I hope the committee, and especially my colleague from Maine, who knows all about it, will see that the matter is attended to before the committee and that something is done, if anything can be. I move that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD, Mr. CHILCOTT, Mr. GORMAN, Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. JONAS, Mr. LAPHAM, Mr. MCMILLAN, (by request,) Mr. MILLER of California, Mr. MORGAN, Mr. SLATER, and Mr. VOORHEES submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KELLOGG and Mr. MAHONE submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation; which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. ROLLINS. I offer an amendment to the naval appropriation bill, which I move be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed. It is a portion of a bill reported favorably by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 1432) abolishing the military reservation at Fort Abercrombie, in the State of Minnesota, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to have the lands embraced therein made subject to homestead entry and sale the same as other public lands; and

An act (S. No. 1723) to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for the printing in quarto form of a report by the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries upon the food-fishes and fisheries of the United States, &c.

The message further announced that the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, having been unable to agree, the House asked a further conference with the Senate, and had appointed Mr. J. G. CANNON of Illinois, Mr. FRANK HISCOCK of New York, and Mr. JOHN D. C. ATKINS of Tennessee, managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask that the river and harbor bill be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. MCMILLAN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. JONES of Nevada, and Mr. RANSOM as the conferees.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6514) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will be acted on as they are reached in the reading of the bill, if there be no objection.

Mr. BECK. I have an amendment to offer to the pension bill which I suppose I shall be compelled to offer before the bill is read through, or be cut off perhaps on a point of order, and I do not want to lose that right. I propose to offer an amendment to section 2 of the House bill when it is read, which is new legislation relative to the pension laws.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator that as far as I am concerned, when the proper place is reached for offering his amendment, I shall make no objection to its being offered.

Mr. BECK. That is enough.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course it will be a question as to adopting it.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 2, line 9, after the word "party," to strike out the word "found" and insert "appearing;" and in line 10, before the word "guilty," to strike out "have been" and insert "be;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That section 4744, title 57 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4744. The Commissioner of Pensions is authorized to detail from time to time clerks or persons employed in his office to make special examinations into the merits of such pension or bounty-land claims, whether pending or adjudicated, as he may deem proper, and to aid in the prosecution of any party appearing on such examinations to be guilty of fraud, either in the presentation or in procuring the allowance of such claims; and any person so detailed shall have power to administer oaths and take affidavits and depositions in the course of such examinations, and to orally examine witnesses, and may employ a stenographer when deemed necessary by the Commissioner of Pensions in important cases, such stenographer to be paid by such clerk or person, and the amount so paid to be allowed in his accounts."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. That section being new legislation by the House, I propose to amend it by an additional clause, either in an independent section or as a proviso attached to it. I have no objection to the amendment offered by the House, nor to the amendment proposed by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, but I do propose to add as a proviso to the section, which would perhaps be a better way, what I now send to the desk.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will turn over to line 45, in section 4 of this bill, he will find that the very provision which he proposes to amend is annexed to that section. When we reach that it will be more in order than it is at the present time. He will find in line 45 of section 4 that the amendment of the committee is proposed, and that point would be the proper place for his amendment either as a substitute or in addition.

Mr. BECK. The Senator now refers to an amendment of the committee adopted after they had voted against the amendment I now propose. That is all right as far as it goes, but it does not approach what I want, and I am not sure that that itself may not be ruled out on a point of order except as an amendment to the legislation proposed by the House; and therefore I desire, in order to make sure that whatever there may be in the amendment that I offer will be considered and not ruled out on a point of order, to add it to the legislation of the House in section 2 of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I shall make no point of order on it so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BECK. I do not desire to have it limited as a substitute for the action of the Senate Committee on Appropriations. Their amendment at the end of section 4 was in fact a substitute for mine. What I want is to be sure that the amendment that I now offer will be considered in connection with the legislation of the House in section 2.

Mr. LOGAN. I say to the Senator that after the other amendments have been either adopted or disagreed to, when we come to that point in section 4, prior to agreeing to the amendment of the committee he can offer his amendment and it can be discussed and be agreed to or not agreed to by the Senate, and there can be no objection.

Mr. BECK. At either point?

Mr. LOGAN. At the other point.

Mr. BECK. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, to strike out the following words:

SEC. 3. That sections 184 and 185, title 4, of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

That in addition to the authority conferred by section 184, title 4, of the Revised Statutes, any

So as to read:

SEC. 3. That in addition to the authority conferred by section 184, title 4 of the Revised Statutes, any judge or clerk of any court of the United States in any State, District, or Territory shall have power, upon the application of the Commissioner of Pensions, to issue a subpœna for a witness, being within the jurisdiction of such court, to appear, at a time and place in the subpœna stated, before any officer authorized to take depositions to be used in the courts of the United States, or before any officer, clerk, or person from the Pension Bureau designated or detailed to investigate or examine into the merits of any pension claim and authorized by law to administer oaths and take affidavits in such investigation or examination, there to give full and true answers to such written interrogatories and cross-interrogatories as may be propounded, or to be orally examined and cross-examined upon the subject of such claim.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "claim," in line 16 of section 3, to add:

And witnesses subpœnaed pursuant to the preceding section shall be allowed the same compensation as is allowed witnesses in the courts of the United States, and paid in the same manner.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out, at the end of section 3, the following clause:

SEC. 185. Witnesses subpœnaed pursuant to the preceding section shall be allowed the same compensation as is allowed witnesses in the courts of the United States, and paid in the same manner.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I make the point of order on the succeeding amendment proposed as section 4. I desire to say, however, that I am not tenacious about the point except as to the last clause of that section, but I make it to the entire amendment in order to save what I am after.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment to line 44, as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Commissioner of Pensions is hereby authorized to appoint surgeons who, under his control and direction, shall make such examination of pensioners and claimants for pension or increased pension as he shall require; and he shall organize boards of surgeons, to consist of three members each, at such points in each State as he shall deem necessary, and all examinations, so far as practicable, shall be made by the boards, and no examination shall be made by one surgeon excepting under such circumstances as make it impracticable for a claimant to present himself before a board: Provided, That the Commissioner may, when in his opinion the exigencies of the service require it, organize a board of three surgeons, who, under his direction, shall review the work of any regularly appointed board or surgeon: Provided further, That all examinations shall be thorough and searching, and the certificate contain a full description of the physical condition of the claimant at the time, which shall include all the physical and rational signs and a statement of all structural changes.

The fee for each examination, and satisfactory certificate thereof, shall be $2 to each member when made by a board, and $2 when made by one surgeon: Provided, That when a claimant is so disabled as not to be able to present himself to a board of surgeons for examination, the Commissioner may order a surgeon to make the examination at the claimant's residence; and the fee for such examination shall be $2, in addition to the payment of the actual traveling expenses of the surgeon: Provided further, That no fee shall be allowed or paid to any member of such board of examining surgeons who does not actually participate in such examination and sign the certificate thereof.

The Commissioner may, when in his judgment the degree of disability cannot be determined truthfully or satisfactorily excepting by expert examination, employ an expert, not a regularly appointed surgeon, to make the examination; and the fee for such examination shall be $5: Provided, That the fee for an expert examination shall not be paid to any regularly appointed examining surgeon.

The fee for the examination of claimants who reside out of the United States shall not exceed $10, which shall be paid, upon the presentation of satisfactory vouchers, out of the appropriation for the payment of the examining surgeons, and through the United States consulate nearest to the claimant's place of residence.

Mr. LOGAN. On what ground is the point of order?

Mr. PLUMB. That it is legislation on an appropriation bill, and all the other grounds that may be found in the rules applicable to appropriation bills.

Mr. LOGAN. This part of the section that has been read is very important. The objections of the Senator from Kansas is to that part from line 45 to line 50, which has not yet been read. By common consent I can change it so as to make the clause from line 45 to line 50, section 5, and then change section 5 to section 6, so that when we reach that section the objection will apply to that and not to the rest of the section, because the remainder of it is very important. If there be no objection, I will change it in that way.

Mr. PLUMB. I am not particular about the transposition of sections. I made the point of order to the entire fourth section as being legislation.

Mr. LOGAN. The point of order, I understand, applies alone to that clause embraced from line 45 to line 50.

Mr. PLUMB. I made my point of order to the whole section; but, as I said, my objection is especially to that part from line 45 to line 50.

Mr. BECK. So I understand.

Mr. PLUMB. Now, if the point of order will be just as good to these lines put in the shape of a separate section I have no objection to withdrawing the point of order to the remainder.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will apply just the same; and by unanimous consent section 5 will commence with line 45, after section 4. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, as section 4 to line 44, as read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section 5:

SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Interior shall annually hereafter transmit to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, a list of persons borne on the pension-roll, classified according to their post-office address by States and counties, the amount paid annually to each, and also a statement each year of those dropped from the rolls and those added to the rolls.

Mr. PLUMB. On that I raise the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. LOGAN. That is all there is of it, then.

The next amendment was to add as section 6:

SEC. 6. That no person who is now receiving or shall hereafter receive a pension under a special act shall be entitled to receive in addition thereto a pension under the general law, unless the special act expressly states that the pension granted thereby is in addition to the pension which said person is entitled to receive under the general law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. Now, Mr. President, I propose to amend section 2, under the suggestion made by the Senator from Illinois, by adding at the end thereof what I send to the desk. The amendment is printed and on the desks of Senators, but I have modified it as I have interlined in the copy I send to the desk.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment, as follows:

Provided, That the Commissioner of Pensions shall, as soon as practicable, and once in each year thereafter, cause separate, distinctly printed lists of all pensioners and applicants for pensions and increase of pensions, both Army and Navy, to be made out for each county in the United States in which pensioners or claimants reside, containing the names of each pensioner and claimant whose post-office address is at any post-office in said county, and furnish said list to the postmaster at the county seat at each county, whose duty it shall be to keep said list posted in some conspicuous place in his post-office, so as to be accessible to the public for inspection.

Each list shall contain the full names of the pensioners and claimants, whether they claim to be invalids, widows, minor children, dependent relatives, or survivors or widows of the war of 1812, stating the amount of pension now paid to and claimed by each, and the total amount heretofore paid; and the Commissioner of Pensions shall append to each list a general request for information in regard to the justice of said pensions and claims, stating that all communications to him on these subjects may be sent to him free of postage.

And the Commissioner of Pensions shall also cause the lists for each county to be inserted at least once in each year in the newspaper published in said county which has the largest circulation therein; and if no newspaper is published in any county, then in the newspaper published nearest thereto; and in all counties containing a town or city of 10,000 population or upward the Commissioner of Pensions shall cause the lists aforesaid to be inserted in the two newspapers, representing different political parties, which are published in said county having the largest circulation; and in all cities of 50,000 population and upward he shall cause said lists to be inserted at least once each year in three of the leading daily papers published in said city.

The Commissioner of Pensions may use any money herein appropriated to pay the necessary expenses incurred in carrying out the foregoing provisions, and may so organize in his office such clerical force as will in his judgment best utilize the information he may receive, so as to protect the Government against fraudulent claims. The Commissioner of Pensions shall keep on file in his office the post-office address of each pensioner and claimant, and shall suspend the payment of any pension or the consideration of any claim unless the post-office address of the pensioner or claimant is furnished.

Mr. PLUMB. I make the point of order on that. If the Senator from Kentucky desires to address the Senate on the subject, I will waive it for the time being.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas raise the point of order?

Mr. PLUMB. I make the point of order, but I reserve it in order to hear the Senator from Kentucky if he wishes to be heard.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I suppose it is very well understood that no point of order can be made in the Senate upon any legislation that has been incorporated into a bill by the House of Representatives. Neither House can make any point of order against what the other has done. That has been too often decided to make it necessary to make any comments upon that point. The House of Representatives in this bill has incorporated new legislation which I think is open to amendment in the Senate, no point of order lying thereto. Section 2 of the bill as sent from the House of Representatives provides:

The Commissioner of Pensions is authorized to detail from time to time clerks or persons employed in his office to make special examinations into the merits of such pension or bounty-land claims, whether pending or adjudicated, as he may deem proper, and to aid in the prosecution of any party found on such examinations to have been guilty of fraud, either in the presentation or in procuring the allowance of such claims; and any person so detailed shall have power to administer oaths and take affidavits and depositions in the course of such examinations, and to orally examine witnesses, and may employ a stenographer when deemed necessary by the Commissioner of Pensions in important cases, such stenographer to be paid by such clerk or person, and the amount so paid to be allowed in his accounts.

That is all new legislation; it is legislation inserted by the House of Representatives which cannot be reached by the Senate upon a point of order. So it must be accepted or rejected on its merits. Otherwise either House might dictate to the other what they should insert or what thay should leave out. As I said, that has been too well settled for any person to deny it. Therefore, that new legislation is in the bill; and the question then comes, can that be amended by the Senate before it is stricken out or agreed to? They have a right to strike it out of course, but I propose to amend it. In addition to the power and authority given to the Commissioner of Pensions to send his clerks and other persons employed in his office to different parts of the country to inquire whether or not persons claiming pensions have been guilty of frauds in the presentation or allowance of their claims, and to the provision that the official so detailed shall have power to administer oaths and take affidavits and depositions in the course of the examination and to orally examine applicants and to employ a stenographer when deemed necessary by the Commissioner of Pensions in important cases, and to pay the stenographer and have the amount allowed in his account, I propose to require the Commissioner of Pensions once in each year to cause a list of the applications for pensions and increases of pension of every class to be sent to the postmaster at the county-seat of each county, describing the character of the pension asked, stating whether the applicant is applying in his own right as an invalid or as a widow or minor child or dependent relative or survivor of the war of 1812, setting forth all the facts in regard to it, and to insert it once in a county newspaper in the county, and in places where there is a population of over 10,000 in two newspapers, and in cities having over 50,000 in three of the public papers of the county, and to authorize him to act upon the information that he may receive in consequence of the publication.

Why do I propose this? Some gentlemen will assume that it is done because of hostility to the great amount of pensions allowed, or to pensioners generally perhaps. That is not the fact. What I desire, and all I have ever desired, is that the men who honestly are entitled to pensions shall receive them, but that men who are not entitled to pensions shall be detected, that the pension agent who undertakes to work up false and fraudulent claims shall not do it successfully if I can prevent it.

It is proposed to have clerks and agents sent out by the Pension Bureau to ascertain whether frauds are being committed. Why not, in addition, have an authorized list of all the pensioners or applicants for pension whose post-office is within a particular county published at the county-seat, with all the facts in regard to them, so that the agent can have the benefit of the information he can derive from the people who live in the neighborhood who know all the facts?

The Pension Office has got to be a matter well worthy of careful consideration. No one denies that, I presume. I have a list made out carefully by the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations of the cost of pensions, which shows that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, we paid for the clerical force in the Pension Office, and for that connected with pensions in the Second Comptroller's Office, the Second Auditor's Office, the Third Auditor's Office, the office of the Secretary of War, the office of the Adjutant-General, and the office of the Surgeon-General, and for traveling examiners, contingent expenses, rent of buildings, &c., a total of $892,910; for the fiscal year 1882 we paid for the same items $1,240,700; for the year which commenced the first day of the present month, for which we are now appropriating, we pay for the same items $2,962,300, an increase this year over 1881 of $1,721,600; an increase in the force connected with pensions alone of a million and three-quarters of dollars.

We paid in the fiscal year 1881 for pensions $32,404,000 in the original appropriation, and for deficiencies $18,302,031.69, making a total of $50,705,031.69. For the fiscal year just past, 1882, the pension appropriation bill was $50,000,000, and the deficiency appropriation $16,000,000, making a total of $66,000,000. For the year 1883, for which we are now appropriating, which has already begun, we are to pay $100,000,000 for pensions, and $2,962,300 for clerk hire and rents, the total being $102,962,300.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion right here if it will not interrupt him, because I think it ought to be stated?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I believe that there will be required in addition to the amount which is appropriated now a very large sum to make up a deficiency during this year; I should say twenty-five or thirty million dollars. I think that ought to be stated in connection with the statistics which the Senator is giving.

Mr. BECK. I desire the exact facts to be stated. What I desire to show is only that the matter is immensely important because of the amounts involved being enormously large, and the statement of the Senator from Connecticut only makes it more apparent that we ought to be extremely careful to see that we pay only the pensioners who are entitled to the money, and that every possible safeguard ought to be thrown around these immense payments to see that men who are not entitled to the money do not receive it. That is what I am seeking to do as far as I know how.

An extremely careful man, Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON, of Illinois, in a speech made the other day—I am not allowed to say where, but I hold the speech in my hand that he made—gives in detail the amount which will be required for pensions, which he averages at about seventy-three millions for the next ten years, and he asserts, apparently upon authority, for he gives statements made by the Commissioner of Pensions, that it will cost us to pay off the present pensions two thousand million dollars, several hundred millions more than the total national debt.

Whether frauds have been committed or not in the payment of pensions, one thing is absolutely certain that the present mode of obtaining pensions upon ex parte affidavits has been regarded at all times as an extremely dangerous system to the Government. I think the present Commissioner of Pensions unites with the former Commissioner in making that statement; and the very fact that in section 2, for I presume this bill passed with his approval, he proposes that clerks and others in his bureau should be authorized to make special examinations into the merits of pension and bounty cases there pending and adjudicated, and to aid in the prosecution of persons found guilty of attempting fraud upon the Government, shows that he too desires to have all the information possible.

I know of no mode that will be so efficient in obtaining positive information as to have lists of the pensioners presented before the people among whom they live. I assume, further, that no soldier, that the widow of no soldier, that the children of no soldier will feel any humiliation, any degradation, in having a list published such as I propose; nor will they imagine that they are suspected of any dishonesty by having the fact that they are pensioners on the Government or claimants for pensions avowed in the face of the world. We publish to-day a Blue Book which contains the name of every person in office who draws a dollar from the Government. That contains the names of probably 75,000 people, certainly over 70,000—I have looked over it but have not counted them—connected with the Post-Office Department, and from the highest to the lowest their names are published. The name of every man and woman in every Department of this Government in Washington, down to the women who sweep out the floors, is published and the amount that each receives. In the internal revenue and the customs departments books are published by the Register of the Treasury, showing the name of every man who does anything for or draws any money from the Government, and the amount that he receives.

There is not a man in any county in any State in the Union who does the humblest service for the county court, who when he goes before the court and gets his money has not his name published by the county, with a statement of the amount paid him and what it is paid for. The pensioner of the Government, when his name is published and the amount he receives and the service he rendered, with a statement of the honorable wounds that he bears, or the disease he contracted while endeavoring to serve his country, that man, his wife, and his children will feel no thought of humiliation or degradation in having that done. He will transmit it in the years to come as a proud monument of the fact that he did serve his country in its hour of trial.

But there is a class of men who will and do seek to avoid publication, and seek to conceal the information that we want. I am no spy or informer, and do not propose to give names, but I know cases, and there are plenty of them, which will illustrate the class of men I am after. I know a man in the city of Louisville—I have the information from a very intelligent surgeon—who is to-day drawing a pension and who drew arrears of pension, a one-armed man. He was a soldier who lost an arm in a disreputable brawl in a disreputable place, and the surgeon who cut off his arm, if my amendment passes, will tell the Commissioner where he lost it, how he lost it, and that he cut it off in that very place.

Mr. LOGAN. Why does he not tell him now?

Mr. BECK. Because he is neither a spy nor an informer. Make it legal to furnish such information, and see what the result will be. I have letters in my possession from men in Illinois and in Ohio and in New Hampshire and all over the country, asking me for information as to whether this man, that man, and the other is drawing a pension, because if they are, and they believe they are, the proof is abundant that they are not entitled to them. I have a letter in my desk from a colonel of one of the Kentucky regiments, as brave a man as was in the Federal Army——

Mr. BLAIR. Any one of the Senator's correspondents could ascertain that fact by addressing the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. BECK. I do not know whether he could or not, or whether he knows that he could or not; but if you will publish the lists of the pensioners and the claimants—for they are quite as important as the men who are drawing pensions, and 180,000 or 190,000 of them have sprung to the front since the arrears-of-pension act was passed who never thought they were entitled to pensions until that great sum was given to them—the neighbors will know who is applying, and they will know the merits of the case. It is as important to stop fraudulent claims as it is to develop those already passed of a fraudulent nature.

As I have said, I have been inquired of as to whether certain persons were drawing pensions, with the suggestion that if they were they could be deprived of them. There are a few men that I will name who have given me information, though I have no right to do it, because they are men of such high character and position that they can afford to have their names mentioned. I will mention General Harris of Ohio and General McMahon of New York, who have said to me that men have come to them and asked them to certify that they were entitled to pensions and they knew they were not, and they have gone to the shyster agents who are going around getting up false affidavits, and they had every reason to suspect that they had obtained pensions, although their corps commanders and their regimental commanders had refused to certify their right, and so they had obtained pensions upon affidavits that were not reliable. If the names were published, I have no doubt that the manly friends of the honest pensioner, men like General Harris and General McMahon, would go at once to the Commissioner and say "these men applied to us and we refused to indorse their right to a pension, but they have got it through by false testimony." There is not an agent who is engaged in this fraudulent business and who is dividing with the dishonest pensioner who will tell on him or dare tell on him, and the dishonest claimant dare not tell on the agent. There is not an agent who has a fraudulent claim who will not fight this amendment that I offer to the death, because his exposure will necessarily follow the very moment the truth is told in regard to any person that he has imposed upon the pension-roll fraudulently and by false affidavits.

I avow here that I have no object or motive in offering this amendment to the section added by the House except to protect every honest pensioner and every honest right, and at the same time to detect and punish every dishonest man and every dishonest agent who has falsely imposed a person upon the Government who was not entitled to a pension or is now seeking to do so.

When we understand, as the record shows, that $103,000,000, lacking a fraction, is to be expended this year, surely we ought to be careful that it is honestly expended. One hundred and three million dollars paid all the expenses of this Government from the day of the inauguration of General Washington down to the year 1808 or 1809. I think $110,000,000, until the war of 1812, was all the expenditure of the Government, for the Army, the Navy, the Indian service, the revenue service, the miscellaneous expenses, and everything. Look at your financial reports and make the calculation. One hundred and three million dollars that we are paying for pensions this year paid all the expenses of the administrations of Washington and Adams, and I believe nearly all of the administration of Jefferson; and surely it is of importance to us, to every tax-payer in the country, to every honest pensioner, that he shall not be mixed up and scandalized by charges of dishonesty and fraud; that every facility should be given to the Commissioner of Pensions to see that men are detected who are making false claims.

"Dependent relatives" is a very wide class. The widows of soldiers who have married again and do not tell of it, because if they did their pensions would be forfeited, form also a large class. The neighbors know, and the neighbors will tell, and if you make it the law that they shall have the right to tell the Commissioner, he will know that Sally Jones was married at such a time and still draws a pension as a widow. If a pensioner is not in fact a dependent relative of a soldier as he claims to be, that can be told. If any frauds have been perpetrated, they will be told. The information that I have from very highly respectable sources makes it conclusive to my mind that there is nothing that would aid the Commissioner of Pensions so much, nothing that would aid the agents that he is authorized by section 2 of this bill to send out so much, as to do what is done with everybody else who draws a dollar of money out of the public Treasury, namely, publish his name in the county newspaper with his local address, and allow the neighbors and persons there who know the facts to tell the Commissioner what to do and whose case to look into. No honest man will be hurt by it, but every dishonest man will be, and every dishonest agent who aided him will oppose it to the death; of course he will.

In the face of the present condition of things I am not going to say a word about the arrears-of-pension act. I said some unkind things about that act once, and was called to task sharply enough by the Senator from Kansas. Perhaps the language I then used was not altogether proper; but what I want now is a law that will enable the Commissioner to obtain information that will enable him to prevent frauds being perpetrated on the Government. I do not say that the former Commissioner was entirely right; perhaps he may have been wrong in many things; but the reason why I believe much wrong has been done is that the former Commissioner used this language in a report made to us in 1878:

A comparatively small number of professional claim agents and claim firms at Washington and some other points in the country, through the intervention of sub-agents and by extensive advertising, employing for that purpose in some instances sheets issued in the form of periodical newspapers purporting to be published in the interest of the soldiers, the columns of which contained matter in which apparent anxiety for the soldiers' welfare and appeals to their love of gain were cunningly intermingled, always representing the advertisers as in the enjoyment of special and peculiar facilities for the successful prosecution of claims, and usually adding the suggestion that no charge would be made unless a pension should be obtained.

These methods have withdrawn a large proportion of the pension-claim business from the local resident magistrates and attorneys and concentrated it in the hands of the agents and firms above referred to, whose offices have become great claim bureaus.

Under this system these claim agents and their clients are strangers to each other. The agent having no personal knowledge in relation to the merit of the claim nor of the truthfulness of the testimony which he files in its support is therefore relieved of personal responsibility to the office as to the good faith of the claimant, and has no care except to secure a favorable consideration of the claim presented by him; and unmeritorious and fraudulent claims and false testimony have been flooded upon the office to such an extent that almost all claims are alike suspected, and, for the protection of the Government, the office has been forced to the adoption of very stringent rules to govern the consideration of the cases, and the honest claimant is not infrequently a sufferer thereby, and he is always a sufferer on account of the delay entailed upon the consideration of his claim by reason of the time consumed in the consideration of the claims which are without merit.

When the best means of arriving at the true mode of preventing fraudulent claims was being considered, the chairman of the Committee on Pensions in the last Congress, the then Senator from Virginia, Mr. Withers, on the 1st day of February, 1881, said:

We have the assurances of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions for several years, certainly for four years or more, that the present system is burdensome to those who are engaged in administering it, unjust to pensioners, and unjust to the Government, inasmuch as no adequate protection exists against fraudulent claims, the testimony being wholly ex parte in every one of these cases. To-day we have a pension bill which appropriates $50,000,000 to the payment of this class of claims. I undertake to assert here to-day that the Government is not protected in the slightest degree against frauds for the payment of the whole of this vast amount of money.

Again he said:

To-day we have a pension bill which appropriates $50,000,000 to the payment of this class of claims. I undertake to assert here to-day that the Government is not protected in the slightest degree against frauds for the payment of the whole of this vast amount of money.

He said further:

A collusion between two or three parties only can present a claim to the Commissioner of Pensions for a pension which is so perfect in all its parts that it will not challenge investigation and it will be passed upon favorably and ex necessitate rei. Surely, then, it is the part of wisdom for Congress to devise some method by which this great danger can be averted and by which the claims of pensioners themselves can receive that fair, impartial, and prompt consideration which their services to the country so richly entitle them to expect.

Again he said:

It is therefore in the interest of the honest pensioner and of the Government alike; and the only classes of persons who are injured by it will be the dishonest pensioners and the dishonest claimants, whose facilities for fraudulent claims will be very much curtailed if this amendment should become a law, and the pension-claim agents who throng around this city and have been lobbying so actively for so many months to defeat the passage of this bill.

It will be readily understood by Senators who have paid any attention to the character of the memorials and petitions which are daily presented that there are, perhaps I might say, two machines in operation intended to influence the decision of this body upon the bill which has just been moved as an amendment. The pension-claim agents of this city appeared before the Committee on Pensions when this bill was under consideration. They were granted a full and free hearing, and for days occupied the attention of that committee in arguments against the provisions of this bill. Every facility was afforded them of representing their side of the question; but when it was seen that if this bill were to go into effect they become at once insignificant in the prosecution of a claim, when gentlemen who came before us and claimed to represent 40,000 pension claims recognized the fact that if this bill should be passed Othello's occupation would be gone, and that the opportunity of erecting palatial residences in our cities on the profits derived from such business would no longer exist, it is not remarkable that they should oppose—they would be more or less than human if they did not oppose—with might and main the enactment of a provision which would interfere so seriously with their business and with their profits.

What has been the consequence of this activity? Blank forms of petitions have been circulated all over the country far and wide to every correspondent that they had, and they come up here every morning from the East and from the West, from the North and from the South, and no matter how widely separated may be the localities from which they hail, every one of them has precisely the same phraseology. Every one of these petitions, therefore, has emanated from the pension agents of this city or others interested with them in perpetuating the existing condition of things.

The late Commissioner of Pensions in a subsequent report, perhaps the last one he made, went on to assert:

Besides being cumbersome and expensive, the present system is an open door to the Treasury for the perpetration of fraud. The affidavits in support of the claims have the same appearance to the officers of the bureau, whether false or true. The rules which are established in relation to the production of evidence in attempting to exclude the frauds often work a hardship upon the honest claimant. He finds himself, through the death or imperfect recollection of witnesses, or for some other cause, unable to comply with them, is often defeated, while the fraudulent claimant, who will manufacture the necessary testimony to meet them, succeeds in his claim.

The large sum of money which the claimant will receive upon the allowance of his claim, and the ease with which a fraudulent claim may be manufactured, constitute a powerful inducement to dishonest persons to present fraudulent claims, and these occupy the attention of the office in attempting to determine their merits, which ought to be given to the meritorious claims, and thus, by the encouragement of fraudulent claims, the system operates to delay the others to such a degree that, in many cases, it results in a practical denial of justice. And the pursuit of the necessary medical inquiries is little better than a farce.

Again he says in the same report for 1879:

It would seem that the fact that ex parte methods in the ascertainment of truth in doubtful or disputed questions have been condemned by the civilized world for centuries, and that open public proceedings, bringing parties and witnesses face to face that they may be interrogated, such as are proposed by the new plan, have been adopted by the unanimous judgment of enlightened people, based upon the common observation of mankind, ought to leave no question as to the propriety of discontinuing the ex parte system in pension claims.

There is another aspect of the ex parte system which should receive the most earnest consideration on the part of the Government, and that is its fruitfulness of crime against the laws, in the nature of perjury, forgery, and false personation.

The following table shows the number of the two first-named offenses committed in the cases of five hundred pensioners whose names have been dropped from the rolls since July 1, 1876, because the pensions were obtained by fraud:

Class.	Number of claims.	False affidavits made by—				Total number of affidavits filed in the cases.	Number of forgeries.
		Officers.	Comrades.	Civilians.	Total.
Invalid	229	291	179	763	1,233	1,581	6
Widows, &c	271	95	69	1,687	1,851	2,816	86
Total	500	386	248	2,450	3,084	4,397	92

He then adds that out of a number of investigations he had made upon information he had received, getting it the best way he could, he had ascertained that nearly 70 per cent. of all those he had investigated were fraudulent. The present Commissioner, speaking of his predecessor, says in Mr. Bentley's behalf:

Great credit is due to him for the industry, ability, and watchful integrity with which the business of this office has been conducted under his management, and the increase of work accomplished and results reached during the past year call for warmest commendation.

Owing to his foresight and recommendation the laws were so amended and supplemented as to enable me to effect changes in organization and management of the clerical force of this office, which it is hoped will to some extent alleviate the difficulties surrounding an ex parte system which has been so long in vogue.

Mr. President, I believe I have said about all I care to say on the provision of the House which is now before the Senate, and it must be adopted as it is or amended as I propose, or stricken out altogether. With the legislation proposed by the House to detail from time to time clerks or persons employed in the office of the Commissioner to make examination into the merits of the cases charged with fraud, to take affidavits and employ stenographers, to do what is necessary to guard the Government, what better adjunct can there be, what better means of information can the Commissioner have upon which to detail from time to time clerks and persons in his office than the neighbors of the man, the comrades of the man who is about to be investigated? If he will call on the people who live around him by advising them of the fact that this man is drawing a pension or applying for one, he will get all the information that he cannot otherwise obtain.

I will state the difficulty about our present legislation. We have properly furnished all money necessary to pay all the men who are supposed to be entitled to pensions. We have furnished an adequate force to the Commissioner. We have said, "Organize your office as you like," and when the House had given him, I believe, nearly all he desired, and he wanted some modification before the Committee on Appropriations, I do not wish to say anything the Senator from Illinois may not agree to in that regard, but my recollection is that I said to him, "Put it in the best shape you can," and we gave it to him. But what he wants is not to be left to the chance of finding out by spies or detectives or informers that he may send quietly around to see about this, that, or the other case, attention never being called to it, but to have the opportunity furnished to him, by being informed by the whole neighborhood as to the condition of the man, whether he has dependent relatives, whether the woman is still a widow, whether the man was shot in battle or shot otherwise, or whether he is a fit subject for pension or not. None of these things can come before him now and nobody can know whether cases ought to be investigated. When that information comes and the men in his bureau look into it and say to him, "here is information coming of a character that ought to be looked into," then the clerk detailed will have some place to go, some information on which he can rely, and something that will put him on the track if there is any fraud to be looked after, either on the part of the agent or a fraudulent claimant or both.

I make my amendment apply to the war of 1812, thus applying it to all pension cases. The Senate will be amazed when they come to look into the war of 1812 at the number of people drawing pensions for services in that war. In the city of New Orleans there are men to-day drawing pensions as having helped General Jackson in that battle who were not born on that day. When the list is made and the neighbors come to tell what they know about the names on it, the Senate will be amazed at the ingenuity of the pension agents and the fraudulent men who have done more to bring disrepute upon the pension-list than anything else; men all over the country who have had themselves forced upon the pension-rolls upon the most flimsy pretexts.

I desire to say in addition that from the information I have no set of men will be as earnest and zealous in giving information to the Commissioner of Pensions or to any agent that he may send as the very best soldiers who fought in the Federal Army. I believe I mentioned since I rose (if I did not I will now) that I have a letter in my desk from, I think, the bravest man in Eastern Kentucky, one of the most gallant soldiers, in which he stated to me that if the names were given all through his region of country where he knew them, and from all West Virginia, he could save this Government $250,000 a year by having fraudulent cases looked into that he himself would know about. This is a cheap and easy way of going at it.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, this is largely threshing over the old straw. The Senator from Kentucky has addressed the Senate upon the same tenor and to the same effect a number of times. It brings up the whole question practically as to the integrity of the pension-roll. I do not think the Senator from Kentucky would be willing to say that he makes this proposition in order to decorate somebody. I do not think he means that the roll he seeks to have published shall be considered to be a roll of honor. That is not the idea he has about it. He is not interested in decorating these men at all; he is interested in maintaining the theory which he has maintained ever since I have been here, that essentially, for all practical purposes, the pension-roll is a fraud.

Mr. BECK. I deny that. I say there are great frauds upon it in my opinion.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Kentucky is interested, then, in publishing the list to support the theory which he has always announced here and now adheres to, that there are great frauds being perpetrated on the Government by means of the pension list.

Mr. BECK. I do.

Mr. PLUMB. He therefore is interested in getting up a hue and cry. He wants to send to some remote post-office in the country the name of a pensioner there in order that the prejudice of every person in that neighborhood may be focused upon that poor pensioner and that it may result in giving information to the Commissioner of Pensions in order to displace that person from the pension-roll.

Mr. BECK. No, sir.

Mr. PLUMB. If the persons he speaks of as having written to him with a knowledge of what was going on are truthful, and reliable, and honorable men, they have one plain duty before them, and only one, and that is to give that information, not to the Senator from Kentucky, not at large, not as a general scandal against all the men who are getting pensions from the nation, but to give that information in detail to the Commissioner of Pensions. I say the man he speaks of as being the bravest man on the soil of Kentucky is not brave enough to give information to the Commissioner of Pensions in regard to one single pensioner of the State of Kentucky or elsewhere, and he will not put over his signature his belief that the man is not entitled to a pension.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Kansas does not know that gentleman. If he did he would admit that he was his peer anywhere, in any regard.

Mr. PLUMB. Undoubtedly. I am cowardly enough myself, no doubt, to fail to do that same thing, but I am not coward enough to add to that by writing an anonymous letter to somebody about it.

Mr. BECK. It was no anonymous letter.

Mr. PLUMB. It was anonymous in point of fact, because it was anonymous in reference to the subject of it. He may have signed his name, but he did not dare to put upon that paper the name of one single person whom he would say was drawing an illegal pension.

I do not object to publicity in connection with pensions. Any proper measure for that purpose, inspired by a proper feeling, will get my vote; but at the close of a session of Congress which was opened by a general denunciation of the pension-roll, where the general allegation was supported by a long speech on the part of the Senator from Kentucky to show that the arrears-of-pension act was a fraud, and that persons who had been put upon the roll by reason of that act were largely persons who were not entitled to pensions, I do not mean if I can help it that a session opened thus shall close by giving effect to his insinuations in the shape of such proof as he has offered or any other.

I have no doubt there are fraudulent persons on the pension-roll. We pass fraudulent claims here every session. You cannot construct a pension-roll of 250,000 names without there being fraud upon it. There is now and then a person upon it who, as the Senator from Kentucky said, incurred his disability somewhere else than in the Army. There is now and then a widow upon the roll who has since married; there is now and then a person upon it probably who was not in the Army at all; but such cases are constantly being ferreted out. Never until the millennium comes shall we be without fraud under the best possible system of legislation; but I say that the pension-roll as a whole, not only as a whole but in nearly all its parts, with few and minor exceptions, represents men who were disabled in the service of their country and who are legally and equitably entitled to every cent they get.

It is asked if these men are fairly entitled to pensions why do they object to having their names published. I do not know that they do object; but I know men who are drawing pensions who seem to be just as healthy as I am. I thought I knew every man in my regiment as well as it was possible for the officer commanding a regiment to know the men in it. I have been applied to by members of my regiment to certify to disability or to facts which would constitute disability in their cases, and I have declined. Why? Not because necessarily I did not feel the strongest sympathy with those men, but because I did not know about them. I have been applied to in some cases where I believed the man was not disabled in the service; but what did that amount to? No officer could tell as to any thousand men under him, or even as to any hundred men under him, whether any one of them was disabled or not in the war under all the circumstances which led to disability in the military service.

Suppose now we pass this provision and it has the effect which the Senator from Kentucky desires it shall have, there are six men in a particular township put down as having received a pension from the Government. When it is believed that the Commissioner of Pensions desires information from the people of the neighborhood in regard to those men, every man in the neighborhood who has a prejudice on account of party, on account of personal feeling, or on account of any other thing, will lift up his voice to say that those men are not entitled to pensions. Against the judgment of the medical officers and the investigation being carried on in the Pension Bureau it is proposed to take the judgment of laymen, of the man's neighbors, and to say to a man, "Unless you parade your wound, unless you parade your illness, unless you exhibit your body and all its frailties and imperfections and disabilities to this trial by the hundred, to the inspection of your neighbors, you are not fit to be borne upon the pension-roll."

Mr. President, there is not a sound man in this Chamber, not one. There is not a man in this Chamber who is wholly sound, and never has been. There is not a man in this Chamber who does not know himself his weaknesses of body, as no other man knows them, and as no other man can know them, concealed, perhaps, even from his family physician, and between him and his family physician there is an abundance of knowledge in regard to his physical condition which no other man would suspect. If my honorable friend from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] were to say to me "I am sick," "I am disabled, growing out of circumstances that occurred during service in the war," or "Because I fell from on board a steamboat some fifteen or twenty years ago," when I looked at his face and saw there what I believed to be the color of health, must I say, against the judgment of his family physician, against the sworn testimony of men who examined him, that he is not entitled to a pension, that he is not sick, that he is shamming?

It is that kind of trial which the Senator from Kentucky desires to submit these men to who wore the Federal uniform, who marched under their country's flag and carried it to victory.

We have heard a good deal about these expenses. The expenses of the war to its close are said to have been, in round numbers, $6,000,000,000. It was an expensive job. Thank God, it was well done; and if it costs $6,000,000,000 more to repair the damages to the men who carried that flag and who planted it on the ramparts of rebellion, let us appropriate the money. It was money well spent, and it will be money well spent as long as there is one of those veterans to drag his emaciated body over the country that he helped to keep intact.

It was an expensive war, and the fact that it was expensive is evidenced to-day. It is wise for this country, it is a good thing for this country that it appreciates to-day in this large pension-roll that it had a war of that kind on its hands with the magnificent result which followed it. It is not only a stimulus to patriotism, but it is a warning against treason as well. I do not want to hear, I hope I shall never hear any man speak of the size of the pension list, or any man speak of the number borne on its rolls, or any man state the dollars it costs to keep it up as any reason for any kind of restriction whatever or to show why the appropriation should not continuously and always be made.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say to the Senator from Kansas that he will always hear me, as long as I have the honor to have a seat here, insisting that no set of men who pretend to have been soldiers and were not, and no class of agents who can associate with them to foist bad men on the rolls, shall be placed there. I want nothing but the honest soldiers on the roll.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator from Kentucky during the time he has been here had exercised himself in regard to the perfection of legislation for the purpose of preventing such men getting on the roll, he would have exercised himself wisely, but he has not done it.

Mr. BECK. I am doing it now.

Mr. PLUMB. He now seeks to publish to the world these men, saying prima facie, "You are frauds."

Mr. BECK. No, sir.

Mr. PLUMB. You express in every locality, in every county, that the people are expected to come up and advise the Commissioner of Pensions that the pensioners were improperly on the rolls, and have them talked about as beneficiaries of the Government in the shape of pensioners.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator allow me to say a word to him, if he can keep his temper, as I know he can? Does any other man or woman except the pensioner draw out a dollar from this Government without having his or her name published publicly and the amount he or she receives? If so, where?

Mr. LOGAN. I merely want to say that there is this distinction, the employés of the Government are published in reports that are made to Congress. I tried to have an amendment put in this bill of the same nature as to pensioners. The Senator from Kentucky did not agree to it, but he wants the names published in the newspapers to give the newspapers a chance to charge the Government for the publication. That is the difference.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator allow me to say to him that he did propose to publish those on the pension list, but he did not, although I urged it, agree to put the nineteen hundred and odd thousand who are claiming a pension and who held back for sixteen years without making the claim and come in now because the arrears-of-pension act makes it worth while. He would not allow that class to be published.

Mr. LOGAN. Coming in now? The Senator does not understand the law.

Mr. BECK. All that were filed before a given day this year, and a hundred and ninety-odd thousand filed their applications and will get the arrears of pension. That is the light I want. I wish to expose the frauds of those people and their agents.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator should have moved that as an amendment to the amendment in the bill.

Mr. BECK. I did do it in committee, but I knew from the warning given by the Senator from Kansas he would make the point of order.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator is very much mistaken. I assured him I would not make any point of order.

Mr. BECK. I know the Senator from Illinois said that, but I knew the Senator from Kansas would make the point.

Mr. LOGAN. He made the same point of order on the amendment I proposed in the bill, as well as on that of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BECK. Certainly; and therefore my amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois would have been of no value. Hence I took the precaution to put mine as an addition to the new legislation put in by the House, which he could not rule out.

Mr. BAYARD. Why can it not be by unanimous consent agreed that the list shall be published? It ought to be published. I am very sure the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Illinois have the same feeling we all have in regard to this matter. You wish to perform a public duty to meritorious men, but you wish to exclude those who are fraudulently endeavoring to obtain the benefit of the pension list?

Mr. LOGAN. What does the Senator mean by saying we wish to exclude them?

Mr. BAYARD. Anything like a publication of this list ought to be made a roll of honor, and if men ever put their names upon it who are dishonest, it is due to those who ought properly to be there to have them stricken off, and such men punished. I am sure that by a publication of the list, with the post-office, giving the name of every applicant, from time to time, it would tend very much to public security, and to keep the list where it ought to be.

Mr. LOGAN. I will discuss that proposition with the Senator as soon as the Senator from Kansas is through, if he desires it, and I will give my reasons upon the subject.

Mr. BAYARD. I hope the Senator from Kansas will comprehend that every man who shall assist in purging the pension list of false claimants is a man acting in favor of those who have the right to be there.

To be upon the pension-roll ought to be upon a roll of honor. It is a roll which the American people should care for and cherish; and as they ought to do that, they should be very careful to exclude dishonest people from it. That frauds naturally have occurred and will occur, we all know. I have been enough in United States courts before I came to the Senate to know what a large number of prosecutions for frauds upon the pension list get upon the dockets.

Mr. LOGAN. The trouble, if the Senator will allow me, is this——

Mr. PLUMB. I do not submit to further interruption. I want in a few moments to conclude what I have to say. I do not wish to have any more remarks interjected into mine.

Mr. BECK. I shall not interrupt a moment longer except to say that I agreed with what the Senator from Illinois did as far as he went. The difficulty is I do not think he went far enough.

Mr. PLUMB. It is asked, why not publish these names as we publish the names of persons who are in the employment of the Government? That is an entirely different thing. Here is a man employed by the Government; his employment is open and notorious; the only fact to be known or to be considered is that he is employed and the sum which he receives; but then you come to publish the name of a man who is borne upon the pension-roll, and especially when you publish it with the statement which accompanies this amendment and with the impetus and animus which is behind it, you are publishing it for the purpose of stating in point of fact that his case and every case on the pension-rolls is prima facie a fraud.

The question as to whether a man is properly borne there is not a question that his neighbors can tell. It is a question which is determined by a skillful medical or surgical examination, or both. How can any man looking at his neighbor going about tell, in the first place, whether he is disabled at all in a great many cases; and, in the next place, whether that disability related to service in the Army? Consequently, you will not get anything more out of it than you will get from that inquisition which each man, more or less, has of his neighbor, and you will, in the publication of this list, with the animus which, as I said, is behind it, cast upon these men an imputation of fraud which they will feel keenly as long as they live, and which will go very far to offset the benefit which the Government has given them by reason of putting them on the pension-roll.

If we can in any way reach a time when we can get away from this kind of a discussion and these wholesale allegations in regard to fraud, and can make up a roll of honor truly, I will vote for that cheerfully. I do not desire to have any man borne on the roll who is not entitled to be there. Men are constantly being eliminated from it. The Commissioner of Pensions is constantly asking Congress to put in his hands the power to make more exhaustive and thorough examinations for the purpose of determining who, if any, are improperly upon the roll.

The preceding Commissioner of Pensions has been quoted, and he indulged in a general denunciation of the list; at least that was the effect of it. At the same time, the money which Congress gave him to investigate the question of pension frauds was not expended. We gave him one year $44,000, I think, to pay the expenses of clerks to be detailed from his office to investigate frauds, and while he said in a report to Congress that a great many frauds existed, he only spent one-half of the money we gave him for the purpose of detecting them. That kind of testimony will not do. If an officer of the Government says that frauds are being perpetrated upon it, and he has money placed in his hands for the purpose of detecting those frauds and he does not use it for that purpose, he is not a competent witness to say to what extent frauds are being carried on against the Government, and to that extent I say the testimony of the preceding Commissioner of Pensions, Mr. Bentley, is not entitled to credit.

A good deal is said about the question of men soliciting their officers to give them certificates or affidavits in regard to disability. It is the most natural thing in the world. I am often applied to myself, as I said before, and it rarely happens that I can make an affidavit which would be of value; but I do not impute to the persons applying necessarily an intent to defraud the Government, and they may not have anybody that can make affidavits for them.

I get letters occasionally, as the Senator from Kentucky gets them. I think now there are 250,000 persons borne on the pension-roll. The Senator from Kentucky has been the champion on this floor and in the country in the allegation that the pension-roll contains large numbers of frauds. He gets more letters on that subject probably than anybody else, and all he has been able to mention is about half a dozen. Suppose there were half a dozen cases of fraud out of about 250,000; suppose there were 1,000; you could not administer any law better than that. Suppose there were 5,000, what does it amount to in point of fact? You will not get nearer a fair administration of law than that.

As I said, I occasionally get letters of that kind myself. I got a letter about six months ago, or rather it was a letter to the Commissioner of Pensions under cover to me, written by a man living in a county in my State, in which he went on to say that a neighbor of his was drawing a pension who was not entitled to it. He narrated certain reasons why he believed the man was not entitled to a pension. I sent the letter to the Commissioner of Pensions, who ascertained that not only was the man named not upon the rolls, but he had never even made an application for a pension. This neighbor of his simply got a suspicion in his mind that the man was getting a pension; he thought he was not entitled to one; and he addressed this letter to the Commissioner of Pensions on the subject, and there was a mare's nest. That is all there was about it, and I have no doubt that there is a large majority of cases of just the same kind.

Mr. BECK. If you would publish this list there would be no trouble about it.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not want to gratify the curiosity of the prurient. I do not care to take part in that kind of an inquisition. I do not think it is proper to do it. We are paying a large sum of money annually for pensions. It is large because, as I believe, it is justly due. It will be larger for some time to come. The fact mentioned by the Senator from Connecticut, if it be the fact, that this year we shall have a deficiency of $25,000,000, is a matter of no possible concern, because if we do not pay the $25,000,000 this year we shall pay it next. We have got these men to settle with, and if we could pay it all this year I would rather settle it all at once. It would be a wise and proper thing to pay all the arrears of pensions now; but we cannot do it; it has got to be done by degrees. It is necessary to have a force to do it; and we cannot adapt that force to the work so as to do it at once; but we can use all the force necessary to decide who is and who is not entitled to a pension. Whether the amount is $100,000,000 or $125,000,000, or $200,000,000 is of no consequence. The regular list will settle some of these days at about $50,000,000, and at that point it will remain for many years to come. It is a large sum of money, and if it exceeds the expenditures of the administrations of Jefferson, Adams, Monroe, and all the early Presidents, there is no comparison in that respect. The country is bigger than it was then; it is richer than it was then. It had armies in the late war such as neither our own country nor any other ever thought of in those times. It not only had armies of that magnitude, but it had armies fighting for a cause such as armies had not before fought for. As the country grows in wealth and as we realize more and more the beneficence and the outcome of that struggle, when even the conquered themselves say we were their best friends, when the South itself is better because we conquered, and the whole country united is better than two countries, and it is richer, more powerful, more patriotic—as we grow in wealth and have grown with constantly accelerating wealth, we ought to look with more and more gratitude upon the men through whose sufferings, through whose sacrifices, through whose valor all this became possible.

Mr. President, it is not for the country to complain about the amount of pensions. It is not for the country to cut its pattern too small. It is not for the country to growl and grumble about the administration of a law embracing as it does so many persons within its grasp because now and then a man gets upon the pension-roll who is not entitled to be there. I can say this: if the man actually was a soldier, if he actually served three years, doing actual military duty, he was physically worse when he came out than when he went in by reason of that service, and whether his proof of a particular disability incurred at a particular time goes to the nicety that would be observed in legal proceedings or not I do not care. I say the country owes him a pension prima facie, and it is not losing anything by paying it to him.

On the other hand, while I have no doubt there are men on that roll who ought not to be there, I know there are thousands, and perhaps tens of thousands, who ought to be there who are not there. I know men who cannot make the proof who were plainly disabled in the line of duty. I know men who have refused to make application for a pension. One man who lived within six miles of where I live lost his eye-sight and wasted his farm in an endeavor to recover it. He lost his eye-sight in the service of his country, and has refused to go upon the pension-roll. I think he was more nice than wise, and I have so advised him. I think no man ought to be ashamed to apply for a pension where he actually incurred a disability in the line of duty in the service of the country, and the country ought to be just as glad to pay him as he should be to make an application for the pension.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate for a few moments to this point. It seems as though this discussion, especially on the part of the Senator from Kentucky, would lead us to believe that there was nothing in the pension bill and no attempt had been made by the committee to provide against fraud. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to that which is provided in the bill. Probably Senators have not observed it so as to see whether we have provided against the frands that are spoken of. In a part of section 2 of the bill, repeating a portion of the Revised Statutes and adding to it, you will find that we provide that—

> The Commissioner of Pensions is authorized to detail from time to time clerks or persons employed in his office to make special examinations into the merits of such pension or bounty-land claims, whether pending or adjudicated, as he may deem proper, and to aid in the prosecution of any party appearing on such examinations to be guilty of fraud, either in the presentation or in procuring the allowance of such claims.

We give the Commissioner of Pensions power and authority to detail officers to examine not only persons who have already procured pensions and have claims allowed for bounty land but those who are applying for either bounty lands or pensions; and if it appears that they have been guilty of fraud, then he has a right to prosecute them, and is expected to do it. Not only that but we give the clerks and the persons detailed by him for this purpose the power to administer oaths and examine witnesses under oath for the purpose of ascertaining these facts and forming an opinion as to whether a fraud has been attempted or practiced on the Government. That is one part of the bill which we have agreed to. Then we have added to that portion as it came from the House a long provision, which was carefully considered by the Committee on Pensions and reported to the Senate by the Committee on Pensions, agreed to by the Commissioner of Pensions, and examined carefully by him, and sent to us by him as being such a law in the administration of which he believes that he could, as far as possible in matters of this kind, protect the Government against fraud.

Let us see what there is in this bill that we have added to the pension laws so as to prevent the frauds that are spoken of by the Senator from Kentucky. I read section 3:

> That in addition to the authority conferred by section 184, title 4 of the Revised Statutes, any judge or clerk of any court of the United States in any State, district, or Territory shall have power, upon the application of the Commissioner of Pensions, to issue a subpœna for a witness, being within the jurisdiction of such court, to appear, at a time and place in the subpœna stated, before any officer authorized to take depositions to be used in the courts of the United States, or before any officer, clerk, or person from the Pension Bureau designated or detailed to investigate or examine into the merits of any pension claim and authorized by law to administer oaths and take affidavits in such investigation or examination, there to give full and true answers to such written interrogatories and cross-interrogatories as may be propounded, or to be orally examined and cross-examined upon the subject of such claim; and witnesses subpœnaed, &c.

If the Senator can make any provision stronger than that I should be very glad to add it to this section. Courts, judges, clerks, and other officers are authorized by this proposed law to bring witnesses before them to testify, to be cross-examined, or to make affidavits or depositions, or depose orally in reference to any claim whatever against the Government presented to the Commissioner of Pensions. Not only that but we provide for a board of surgeons, and the board of examining surgeons is made up of three persons, so that not only shall the pensioners be examined by surgeons appointed by the Commissioner but then the Commissioner shall have a right to appeal from that surgeon and take the case before the board of surgeons. We also provide that in the certificate they must agree on the disease, the time, and disability, and all there is connected with it. How much stronger can you make a law than that with reference to examining a question of fraud that may be perpetrated against the Government of the United States on the pension-roll?

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator from Illinois a question?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYARD. Would it not be a great assistance to those examining officers, to the officers of the Government whose duty it is to scrutinize the claims, if publication was made of the list of those who were not only pensioners but who were applicants for a pension? If such a list was made of them, and if it could be distributed in the neighborhood, it seems to me it would be the most practical aid to the officers charged with purging those lists of unjust claims to have the aid of common reputation. I do not see any feature that would be so naturally preventive of fraud as the publication of the list of the applicants, and I am amazed, I confess my astonishment, that there is not, so far as I learn, a published list which any man in the country can get of those who are upon the pension-rolls. I could not believe that anything would be otherwise. I took it as a matter of course that there was a report of the pension list of the United States. There not only ought to be an annual report of that list so that those who die may not have their deaths fraudulently suppressed, or that those who are widows and marry again may not have that marriage fraudulently suppressed, but that those who shall originally apply for pensions shall at least make that application publicly. The pension list is an honorable roll, and fraudulent claims should be kept from it.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator rose to ask me a question, and that is a pretty long statement.

Mr. BAYARD. I beg the Senator's pardon. It was running, however, in the line the Senator was pursuing. I took it for granted we both had the same object in view, and that is to protect the Treasury against unjust claims. At the same time the honest claims of all entitled should be fully met. I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him.

Mr. LOGAN. I will try to answer the Senator when I get to that point of the bill, but right here I desire to say one thing, and to say it with no feeling of unkindness. These pensioners have had an annual raid made on them in the Senate Chamber for the last eleven years, and I say now I have listened to the same speech almost verbatim, except that it is not as good a one this morning as it usually is, of this very character every time the pension bill comes up.

I want to make an inquiry by way of answer to the Senator from Delaware, as he put a very long interrogatory to me, as to why the names of the pensioners should not be published. Sometimes when we are discussing matters that we do not exactly understand ourselves we get into deep water. The Senator says he is perfectly amazed, that he learns for the first time this morning that the pension list is not published to the world. That only shows that there is a part of the legislation of the country which he has not examined. I might answer him in this way: I might say that I am perfectly amazed that every claimant in the United States who has presented a claim to the Quartermaster's Department, or the Commissary Department, or to the Congress of the United States, is not made into a roll and published and posted in every post-office in the United States. That has never been done.

Mr. BAYARD. Those are not annual claims.

Mr. LOGAN. It does not make any difference whether they are annual or not, there are a great many of them. Nobody has ever tried to publish them, and certainly a great many of them are fraudulent as everybody knows. I have never heard a raid made in the Senate on account of those claims not being published and posted in every post-office in the United States. They come from a different class of men; that is the trouble.

So far as publishing the names of those on the pension-roll, the Senator says they should be published for the purpose of preventing the suppression of the marriage of a widow who was drawing a pension. The publication of the names would not suppress that. If you do not have the name with the evidence in the Pension Office, the publication of it does not affect it. You do that by evidence. You take a man's name or a woman's name from the list on testimony of death or some other fact. You cannot do it any other way. So it is not to be affected except in a general way by publication.

Let me go a little further with this matter. Why is there this great desire now on the part of the Senator from Kentucky, for I propose to answer his proposition? We proposed in the Committee on Appropriations to put an amendment on the bill, to satisfy him, that the names of the pensioners should be submitted annually to the Congress of the United States in a report, that the decrease should be published, that those stricken from the list should be named and those added to the list should be named, and that that should be done at the commencement of every session of Congress; but that was not satisfactory. What is satisfactory? It appears that nothing is satisfactory, only to give an opportunity to stand up in the Senate for about an hour to denounce men who receive pensions and to say that a great many of them are fraudulent. Time and again I have said to that Senator on this very floor, if he knows of a fraudulent claim on the pension-roll it is his duty as an American citizen to state that fact to the Commissioner of Pensions. If I knew of one to-day, so help me God I would do it. It is my duty to do it, and it is the duty of a man who makes a raid against pensioners annually, periodically. There seems to be a kind of spasm that seizes Senators here to make a raid on these men, and no man yet has ever had the manhood to stand up and say there is a name, John Doe, on the pension-roll that ought not to be there. Before I make raids on men, and charge them with frauds, with perjury, and with crime, I will name the men. This was not sufficient. Why was it not sufficient?

Why is it that Senators desire to get these names published in newspapers? The newspapers will publish them, but if you put in an amendment that the Government shall publish them in the newspapers in New York, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, and New Orleans, and all the great cities of the United States, it will cost a half million dollars to do it.

Why is this? Nobody ever heard of a proposition of this kind before; at least I never did. We propose to publish the list and give it to Congress, and then let the newspapers have it and publish it wherever they choose; but that is not satisfactory. It is not satisfactory unless you print the names in the newspapers, and have a squabble with them as to which paper shall publish the list, and then pay them about $50,000 apiece every year for publishing 250,000 names, which would take up more than their paper and two or three other sizes like it. That is the strange thing to me. That is the thing I cannot understand.

There was nobody on the Committee on Appropriations who opposed publishing this in a record just the same as the names of all the clerks here are published, just the same as the laborers, just the same as every man who draws money from the Government, in a book. Nobody objected to that. There was the objection that it was out of order, but yet it was agreed to in the committee. Still that is not satisfactory. Why not? I should like to know why that is not satisfactory. If every member of Congress has the list at his hand, the people can see it and pick out the names where frauds are perpetrated against the Government.

Mr. President, there is something about this that many persons do not understand. I know a great many persons who are the recipients of pensions. Whether they are entitled to them or not I cannot say, because I did not make the examination. I know persons who draw pensions who look as if they are stout and healthy men; but at the same time I have no doubt they are entitled to pensions. I could illustrate this by members on this floor. I know three Senators on this floor to-day who are suffering from wounds they received in the Army; but yet they do not draw pensions; they do not ask for pensions. To look at those men there is not a man in the Senate who would suppose that either one of them could obtain a pension if he would try; yet they could without any trouble, and I know that they suffer and are confined frequently to their beds from the effects of their military service. Yet nobody would suppose they were entitled to be pensioners.

Therefore, I conclude that there are many persons drawing pensions in this country whose wounds are covered by their garments and are unseen, wounds which are painful to them; and because such a man is going around people say he is not entitled to a pension. That is the reason why there is so much criticism on the pension list. I know an ex-officer of the Army here in Washington City to-day. He comes into the Senate very frequently. He is a pensioner. I suppose if any Senator were to see him he would say that man is a fraud. I know he is not a fraud, and I will tell you why. That man to-day is as healthy a looking man as you or I, and yet that man wears a seton in his body running through from side to side, and he has done so ever since the war. He has to do it in order to keep the wound open to preserve his life, and that man is as healthy a looking man as I am. But his wounds are concealed and many persons say that he is a fraud. I know he is not a fraud. I know he is not able to-day to perform any labor of any kind, and yet he walks around a healthy-looking man.

I might give a number of instances of the same kind. I know others similarly situated. I know a Senator on this floor to-day who has a wound which breaks out frequently, yet he says nothing about it; you do not know anything about it. He suffers intense pain from it at times and has a physician sometimes to examine it and to redress it, and heal it up again, yet he never asks for a pension and says nothing about his wounds. There are many cases of this kind all over the country.

Men who do not understand this thing, men who have not served in the army on either side, men who do not know anything about camp life and the service of men in the wars of this country, are not altogether competent to judge of those who have performed such service. I say that in all kindness. There is not a man in the sound of my voice who served either in the Union Army or the confederate army but will agree with me in the statement that no man who did not see service can tell the effect of service upon those who rendered it.

So far as this proposition is concerned, I merely wish to say a few words. Of course the point of order raised is good; nobody questions that. This proposition which the Committee on Appropriations reported was stricken out on a point of order as will the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky be, but I say now to the Senator, and to all Senators, that I would have been perfectly willing, and I was for it, to leave the committee's proposition in the bill. I will read it:

> The Secretary of the Interior shall annually hereafter transmit to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, a list of all persons borne on the pension-rolls, classified according to their post-office address by States and counties, the amount paid annually to each, and also a statement each year of those dropped from the rolls and those added to the rolls.

What more would anybody want than that, I should like to know? There the information would be reported to Congress, the reports could be sent out, newspapers could take them and publish all they pleased out of them; but it seems there is no satisfaction on this subject unless you publish the list in newspapers and pay them for the publication. I am opposed to any such proposition. I am in favor of reporting the names of these men to Congress just as the name of every man employed by the United States who receives money from the Government, who is on any roll drawing pay from the Government as laborer or anything else, is reported to Congress. I say I am in favor of it. I am willing to do that. I do not think it is a proposition that is necessary, but many Senators think it is, and therefore I am willing to do it. But I never would be willing to vote for the proposition of the Senator from Kentucky, because it is unnecessary and it is wrong.

With the bill as amended by the Committee on Appropriations and as amended by the Committee on Pensions with their proposition attached to it which we have agreed to, examined by the Commissioner of Pensions, I am satisfied from the manner in which the amendments have been made to this bill that we have given to the Commissioner of Pensions all the power that any man can think of that is absolutely necessary for the purpose of preventing fraud and for the purpose of detecting fraud either in the applicant or the pensioner after he has acquired his pension under the law. For that reason I believe the bill is a good bill so far as this part of it is concerned.

There is one thing I desire to say, and I am sorry to have to do so here. I have frequently replied to it on this floor, although I am not on the Committee on Pensions, and that is this enormous pension list. Of course it is enormous. There are many other things that are enormous; many other of our appropriations in other directions are very strange, so far as the amount is concerned. There are many things in regard to which we might say Congress was appropriating a large amount of money where there was not half as much merit as there is in the pension-roll. It is true we appropriate $100,000,000 or a little more this year. We appropriate it because we owe it, that is the reason why. In other cases we appropriate that which we do not owe, but appropriate for things that we propose to do. This is an appropriation for an account accumulated against the Government of the United States, where the debt exists to-day by reason of passing on these claims by the Commissioner of Pensions under the law. Hence we appropriate for that which we owe, that which has been adjudged against us. I ask why, then, should a raid be made on that any more than on an appropriation that is made to pay the judgment of a court that has decided in reference to a claim, or something of that character? I cannot understand it.

This large amount grew so from the fact that arrears of pension were allowed, but I shall not discuss that now, as I have done so before. After that payment has been once completed, then, according to the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, our pensions will be reduced to about fifty millions per annum, and then probably decrease annually, instead of increasing annually.

The Senator from Kentucky said that about New Orleans there were a great many persons drawing pensions who were not born when the battle of New Orleans was fought, on the allegation that they assisted General Jackson. That may be true. If it is, I cannot understand it, I must confess. The law is perfectly plain. All persons who gave a certain number of days' service in that war are entitled to pension, and their widows are entitled to pensions. Why did not the Senator say that a soldier who served in the war of 1812 afterward may have married a lady who was not born at the time the battle of New Orleans was fought, but as his widow she is entitled to the pension? Is that a fraud? Will the Senator say that? Yet he would have it go to the country that because persons draw pensions on the roll of the war of 1812 who were not born at that time, therefore they are frauds against the Government. A Senator ought not to put such a phase on it as that and let it go to the country, because it is not true; it is not the fact. It is the fact perhaps that they were not born then, but it is not a fact that they are fraudulently on the pension-roll. We may say that children draw pensions who were not born when the late war existed. That may be true, but does that prove that they are fraudulently on the pension-roll? Certainly not; it only proves that they are the children of a deceased parent, and by the law they are entitled to the pension that the parent would have received; that is all. It does not show that it is a fraud.

I am sorry that these statements are made continually here on the floor in order to make the country believe that we permit ourselves to sit here day after day and allow these frauds to continue when we know them. Statements of this kind are unfair to the rest of Senators, for they are not justified, they are not warranted by the facts. Any man who understands the law in reference to pensions and understands the manner in which they are allowed will not make such statements, in my judgment. It shows to me an ignorance of the law as it now exists and ever has existed in this country, or if not an ignorance of the law, a determination to make false impressions on the country in reference to our own conduct.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to know whether in his opinion the Union soldiers would regard the publication of this list, as provided for in the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, as offensive to them in any way, or as impeaching the honor and integrity of the men on the pension-roll?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know, I will say to the Senator, what the Union soldiers think about it. I have never heard any expression about it; I have never heard anything about it, because it is a new proposition. I never heard it discussed anywhere except here and in the committee. I never heard of a proposition of this kind before.

Mr. GEORGE. That was the view taken by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB,] and I desired to know whether the Senator from Illinois concurs with that view.

Mr. LOGAN. I agree with the Senator from Kansas that this thing of publishing the names in the newspapers and posting them up in the post-offices all over the country is an offense to any man of a sensitive nature. I do so regard it; but I say, if you publish it in reports to the Congress of the United States the same as you publish any other report, then it cannot be an offense, because then they are treated like everybody else; but to single them out and post them up as if they were pirates or plunderers I do consider an offense, I would if I were one of the pensioners. I say an offense; I do not mean an offense intended, but I mean that is the effect of it, and it would have that effect upon me if I were a pensioner and my name was posted up in my post-office so that my neighbors could look at it and examine and see whether I was a thief or not. The object is not to notify the people who the pensioner is, but to subject him to criticism. If you make it in an annual report to Congress everybody could see it. You make up your Blue Book with the name of every officer and laborer who is paid, and you publish that to the country; and why do you publish it? To give notice to Congress who the men are who draw money from the Government; where they live, and from whence they were appointed, so as to locate them and to understand the facts with reference to them. That is the reason why it is done. Give the same reason for having a pensioner's name published, and no offense could be taken.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask for the reading of the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The amendment will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, the point of order has been suggested at this time and is reserved and is to be made. I suppose the amendment will be objectionable upon the point of order, but since the matter has been so much discussed here, I desire to occupy a very few moments in reply to some of the suggestions which have been made in favor of the amendment.

The first inquiry of course is how much fraud there is, how many fraudulent claimants are on the pension list. Senators talk about this measure as if a large proportion of the pension list was fraudulent. I do not deny that there are some fraudulent cases on the pension list. There is no department of this Government in which claims are allowed in which frauds do not exist; but I desire to say that I do not believe the proportion of fraud on the pension list is as great as it is in other branches of the Government and in other departments where claims are allowed against the Government. I believe that the Pension Bureau is freer from fraud than any other bureau adjusting claims in the Government to-day.

Mr. LOGAN. So do I.

Mr. PLATT. Whenever a single case of fraud has been found to exist or is suspected a great deal is made out of it; and because of that single case an attempt is made to throw suspicion over the great body of pensioners, whom I believe to be honest and deserving and to be receiving no more than they should receive from the Government.

There were on the 1st of June, 1881, 268,830 names on the pension list. All will agree that under the administration of Mr. Bentley, supplemented by Colonel Dudley's work, every effort was made to ferret out fraud. During five years, from June, 1876, until June, 1881, the number of names dropped from the list upon investigation by Mr. Bentley was 2,188. That is a very small showing, and the investigations have shown year by year a continually decreasing amount of fraud. The number of cases investigated in 1876 was 2,633; in 1877, 1,926; in 1878, 1,830; in 1879, 1,485; in 1880, 1,034; in 1881, 700; making a total of cases investigated where fraud had been charged 9,608, in which there were dropped from the pension-rolls 2,181, and pending claims rejected 1,975. Thus it will be seen that of the cases where fraud was charged during these five years but a small proportion were found to be actually fraudulent.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask the Senator if about one-fourth of the cases investigated were not proved to be fraudulent?

Mr. PLATT. That is very true, but it brings me to something which I will speak of in opposition to the amendment hereafter; I shall not anticipate. One-fourth only of the cases charged to be fraudulent were found to be fraudulent. It shows that there is a disposition to make charges of fraudulent pensions when the facts do not bear out the accusation. I am sorry that disposition exists. I believe it does exist, and I believe if this amendment should be adopted the great body of honest and deserving pensioners would be subject to great inconvenience and annoyance from the fact that it does exist.

The point I was on is this: I believe that there has been careful investigation to determine the frauds. The difficulty has been that the Commissioner of Pensions had not the requisite machinery to do it with.

That brings me to the second question, which is whether the bill provides all that we ought to have, all that is necessary, to investigate frauds and prevent frauds. I think it does. Therefore the amendment is entirely unnecessary.

By the bill it is provided that the Commissioner of Pensions may investigate all cases, whether pending or adjudicated, may detail from his office clerks to make special examinations into them, aiding the prosecution of any party appearing to be guilty of fraud. These clerks may administer oaths and take affidavits. They may in important cases employ a stenographer. They have the power of summoning witnesses to be paid by the United States. That is a power which the Pension Office has not hitherto had, and, in my judgment, it will be very effective. If there has been any lack of ferreting out such frauds as have existed, and do exist, in times past, that difficulty will be done away by this provision.

Another clause in the bill I consider of the utmost importance for the prevention of fraudulent claims and the adjudication of fraudulent claims. No man gets a fraudulent pension without a surgical examination, and very few people can obtain a fraudulent pension if that surgical examination is thorough and intelligent. The one weak place in the pension system heretofore has been that an examination is made by a single surgeon, who gets the insignificant fee of $1 for making the examination. What has the result been? It has been utterly impossible to procure surgeons of that high standing in their profession, of that experience, of that integrity necessary to the proper examination of an applicant. The bill provides that the work shall be done by three surgeons, and that they shall be paid $2 apiece. It increases largely the cost of surgical examination, but I believe it is a measure in the interest of economy. I believe it is a measure which will result in a very few fraudulent cases hereafter. I go further than that. In the very few cases which, though not fraudulent, are cases in which a pension can only be granted by a strained construction or an overstatement of the symptoms and condition of the applicant, it will be next to impossible under the reconstitution of this board, getting as the Commissioner believes he can upon it, physicians of reliability and experience and integrity, for an applicant to deceive the board and procure an improper pension.

The trouble has been that on one side the people gave the examination but little attention to help it through, or on the other they desired to get a pension for the applicant, or with a prejudice perhaps against the peasioner, they desired simply to prevent the applicant from getting a pension. If Senators had been upon the Committee on Pensions as I have, and had read the examinations of surgeons appearing in files of the Pension Office as I have, they would be utterly surprised at the character of the examinations which have been made. In some instances the surgeons apparently wrote articles to show that the pension should be granted; in other instances they were as plainly prejudiced against the applicant. Into many of them extraneous matter was introduced, criticisms on the Pension Office, criticisms on the pension law, showing that the character of the men whom the Commissioner has been able to employ was not that which it ought to have been. I believe that that amendment now passed is the most important feature of our pension system. I believe it will go further toward preventing improper pensions than any other.

A single word further. I will state my great objection to publishing this list in all the papers. It is an objection which is suggested to me by my examination of pension cases. Case after case has come here where people have been dropped from the rolls upon the charge that they were fraudulent pensioners; that they had obtained their pensions by fraud; and in every instance, I think, there has been developed the fact that there is a neighborhood quarrel about it. The people have taken sides; half of the community, for instance, think that the pension is properly granted; the other half think that it is improperly granted. What will be the result if these lists are published publicly in the newspapers? It would be a blessed thing if we could have the millennium and all people should dwell in harmony; that there should be no such thing as jealousy or malice or suspicion in all the whole land; but that is not the fact. In every community there are people who have enemies. No matter how deserving a pensioner may be, no matter how much he may need his pension, the experience which I have spoken of teaches, and Senators must know, that with the list published in the newspapers the Pension Office will be flooded with suggestions that this man or that man is drawing a pension which he ought not to receive, and based solely upon malicious motives. That I desire to avoid. I do not think that we ought to put this great body of pensioners in a position where everybody who has a grievance or a dislike will be tempted to send to the Commissioner of Pensions, postage free and possibly anonymously, the information that that case ought to be investigated. I do not desire to cut off debate at all; the point of order has been reserved——

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Connecticut before he sits down—I did not want to disturb him—answer me only one or two questions upon which I desire information? Section 2 of the bill, which is new legislation, authorizes the Commissioner of Pensions "to detail from time to time clerks or persons employed in his office to make special examinations into the merits of such pension or bounty-land claims, whether pending or adjudicated, as he may deem proper, and to aid in the prosecution of any party appearing on such examinations to be guilty of fraud, either in the presentation or in procuring the allowance of such claims; and any person so detailed shall have power to administer oaths and take affidavits and depositions," &c.

Is it not a worse imputation on men that a clerk shall be sent from the office on the suggestion of the Commissioner upon information given by somebody, by whom nobody knows, and which nobody knows anything about, to look into all these things, than would be a public statement made as to who the pensioners were, and public information given?

Mr. PLATT. I think not, unless you assume two things——

Mr. BECK. And how will the Commissioner of Pensions obtain the information, located here at Washington, with the hundreds and thousands of pensions and claims now before him, unless he has some public way of obtaining the information upon which to send out his clerks? That is the first question I want to ask.

Mr. PLATT. I do not believe that any pensioner decidedly fraudulent can continue to draw his pension in any community or county of this country without the information reaching the Pension Office at no very distant date after its discovery.

Mr. BECK. How will it reach there?

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator from Connecticut will allow me, perhaps the Senator's mind is in the same train of thought, but I would suggest to him what the record is in the Pension Office. In the case of a man who draws a pension for a wound the only question there is about that is the rating of that pension. In the case of a man who has his arm or leg off, an eye out, or a hand off, or a finger off, or who has lost a foot, or anything of that kind, it is only a question of rating. That is fixed by the law. That class of pensioners are not frauds, for the record in the War Department shows the wound; the certificate of discharge shows it. Hence there is no necessity for investigating it except so far as the rating is concerned. Then there is another class; there is a class of pensioners who were discharged during the war for disability incurred in the line of their duty. The record in the War Department shows that fact and the certificate of the surgeon corroborates it. Then, if the disease continues, an examination of the surgeon shows a continuation of that disease. That is not a fraudulent pension and cannot be.

Then there is but one class of pensioners that the Committee on Pensions would naturally inquire after. Who are they? A class of persons who prove that they are entitled to a pension whose record does not show the fact, and there is but that class. It is a class of persons discharged from the Army who were not discharged for disability, who were not discharged for wounds received, but were discharged from the service and became diseased and proved their disease and traced it back to service in the Army. That is the only class of pensioners, except those who might claim that they were widows of soldiers when they were not, or children of soldiers when they were not, or something of that kind, which certainly would be very seldom. These are the only persons in regard to which there would be any reason for an examination to be made to see whether they were on the pension-rolls fraudulently, and that is a small portion of the pensioners of this country. Hence the fraud is confined to that class of pensioners, and when you come to examine the fact it is diminished down to such a portion that the Commissioner of Pensions, having that list, can very easily make these examinations.

Mr. PLATT. I want to answer a question the Senator asked me before I forget what it is, and then I will listen to any other questions. The question, as I understand it, is this: How is the Commissioner to get knowledge? It has been answered in one view of it very well by the Senator from Illinois; but I cannot believe that to any extent it is true that a person can be notoriously in the receipt of a fraudulent pension in any community of this land and that information not reach the Commissioner of Pensions. It may be so in exceptional instances, but in cases where there is no question about the fraud, where the fraud is open and flagrant and glaring, I cannot believe but that the information will be communicated by some one who desires to see the interest of the Government protected. The records show that only one-quarter of the cases where charges have been made have been found to be fraudulent. That shows that there is a disposition to communicate intelligence even beyond what the facts call for, and I have no doubt it exists to-day.

Now, one other thing the Senator wants to know, if it is not as expensive for a clerk detailed from the office to examine these cases as it would be to have the list published. It is not, unless you assume two things: first, that the Commissioner will act upon insufficient information; and, second, that he will send improper persons to investigate. We cannot assume that the Commissioner will act until sufficient information has been brought to his notice to justify him in action, and we cannot assume that the men whom he will detail from his office will not be the men best qualified by experience, by integrity, by a judicial mind, to investigate the charges. I do not think the soldiers of this land, the pensioners on the list, will feel that it is any degradation at all if a charge as made at the Pension Office, properly substantiated, so as to enable the Commissioner properly to act upon it, to have men sent to investigate it. Every honest pensioner will welcome such an investigation.

Mr. BECK. One other question I desire to ask. The chairman of the Committee on Pensions is well informed in regard to all these matters and so is the Senator from Illinois. I confess I plead guilty to the charge made by the Senator from Illinois that a man who was never a soldier in either army is not as well advised about these matters as a man who was in the Army. I never saw a regiment drill in my life. I do not profess to be posted in regard to military affairs. All I profess to be anxious to do is to endeavor to see that every man who is fairly entitled to a pension shall have it and that the man who is not entitled to a pension shall not have it. That I am endeavoring to do.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely wish to state what I meant by my remark, as the Senator seems to misapprehend me.

Mr. BECK. No; I agree to every word you said in that respect.

Mr. LOGAN. I meant so far as the effect of service on the physical condition was concerned, that others were not so well able to judge as were those who had had experience.

Mr. BECK. That is absolutely true. I have no doubt about that. Now, what I want to ask in addition to my former question is this: I rely upon official reports a good deal, and the late Commissioner of Pensions, in whom I had very great confidence, two years ago made this report to us:

There is another aspect of the ex parte system which should receive the most earnest consideration on the part of the Government, and that is its fruitfulness of crime against the laws, in the nature of perjury, forgery, and false personation.

I believe the amendment in the present bill aids that very much, and to that I agree.

The following table shows the number of the two first-named offenses committed in the cases of five hundred pensioners whose names have been dropped from the rolls since July 1, 1876, because the pensions were obtained by fraud.

The Commissioner then gives a list of 229 invalid claims and 271 widows, &c., making 500, in which he says there were false affidavits to the number of 386 made by officers, 248 by comrades, and 2,450 by civilians, making 3,084 false affidavits out of a total of 4,397 affidavits in those 500 cases. Thus it will be seen that over 70 per cent. of the affidavits in the cases named were false, and there were 92 cases of forgery.

What I want to secure is in some way to get such information as will make that class of offenses as nearly impossible as can be done. The bill as sent to us by the House and amended by the Senate Committee on Appropriations works in that direction, I agree; but when Senators speak of it as being notorious that men are drawing pensions, I complain that it is not notorious that they are drawing pensions, and, therefore, neither the Commissioner nor the clerks he sends out can get information from the men who are best advised unless the list is made public and the names are given, because I assume, and have assumed from the beginning, that each pensioned soldier would regard it as an honor and that the widow and children of a soldier would regard it as an honor that he had served his country and had received a pension for honorable service. It is the fraudulent men who, in combination with equally bad agents, are working up false claims who complain of this publication, and I know no Senator desires to aid them in the accomplishment of that purpose.

How can information better be obtained as to fraudulent claims than by letting the claimant's neighbors know and letting the honest pensioners know, so that the fraudulent man can be detected? I believe you will get more information from the best officers in the Army and from the best soldiers in the Army as to the men who are seeking by fraud to obtain pensions and be placed alongside of them than you will from men who were not in the Army, provided you make the facts public.

Mr. PLATT. The question, of course, is one of evidence. In the cases to which the Senator refers, the cases themselves bear upon their face the evidence of fraud. It is almost impossible to one accustomed to the examination of the papers filed in the Pension Office to overlook a forged paper. It is like the teller of a bank receiving a forged check or a forged note. He can tell it by instinct. They come to know in the Pension Office which are the genuine certificates, which are the machine certificates and the fraudulent certificates. They are detected on sight if the office is vigilant; and the very facts set out in the report of the former Commissioner show that vigilance in the office was what detected this class of forgeries. I do not say of course that one can not pass unnoticed, but I say that very few of them will be likely to pass.

I myself have examined cases where pensioners have been dropped where Congress was asked to restore them to the roll, and the moment I took the papers in my hand there was something about the certificates and the affidavits which had a suspicious look. There can be no very great trouble in that; and besides all this, under the public sentiment which has been created within the last few years, the whole community is watchful to see that fraudulent pensions are not granted. I cannot believe it is necessary to resort to the measure which the Senator from Kentucky proposes. I believe that the legislation which has been incorporated into this bill is amply sufficient and that we may be satisfied with it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, I differ from my friend from Connecticut, who says he does not want to cut off debate. I do want to cut it off. I think that debating for three or four hours a question that is not properly before the Senate, and is sure to be ruled out of order, is a most wasteful expenditure of our time at this period of the session. I insist on the point of order being decided.

Mr. PLATT. I beg the Senator's pardon, and the pardon of the Senate, for my share in the discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island raises the question of order on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken under Rule 29, and so holds.

Mr. BECK. The Chair, I suppose, agrees that section 2 as inserted by the House would be new legislation and yet is in order. Can that be amended?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that Rule 29 covers this case:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

Mr. BECK. The question I now ask is, can section 2 of the bill, which is new and general legislation inserted by the House, be stricken out on a point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not on a point of order.

Mr. BECK. Having been inserted by the House?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Having been inserted by the House.

Mr. BECK. That being new legislation, can it not be amended?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can be amended, but not by adding new legislation, however.

Mr. LOGAN. We have amended it by striking out words and inserting words, but not by new legislation.

Mr. BECK. Do I understand the Chair to decide that if the House insert new legislation which is not in order, we have got to accept it just as it is, cannot substitute anything for it, nor amend it in any regard?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not intimated anything at all of that kind.

Mr. BECK. I proposed to amend section 2 of the House bill. If the amendment I offer is declared to be out of order——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is done.

Mr. BECK. Then I move to amend section 2 by adding what the committee themselves in substance offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior shall, at the next session of this Congress and annually thereafter, transmit to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, a list of all persons borne on the pension-rolls, and all claimants for pensions, classified according to their post-office address by States and counties, the amount paid annually to each and the amount claimed, and also a statement each year of those dropped from the rolls and those added to the rolls.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought that was in the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. It was ruled out of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. In my judgment, this pension bill ought not to have taken more than about ten or twenty minutes. The ruling of the Chair, which I have no doubt is correct, embarrasses us beyond all question. I should vote for this proposition with the greatest pleasure in a bill that could be discussed; and there is no trouble in the Committee on Pensions reporting to-day or Monday morning a bill containing all the legislation necessary, all that is reported from the Committee on Appropriations, and passing it in the regular way; but if it is put on an appropriation bill it will create infinite confusion. The second section is put on by the House, and no point of order can lie to that because each House must be, under the Constitution, the judge of the rules and order of its proceeding; and it cannot be amended under our rules by any additional legislation, by anything that changes existing law. This very amendment has been already excluded on a point of order.

Mr. BECK. But I desire to amend section 2 by enabling the Commissioner to have the information necessary to enable him to make the investigation that by section 2 he is authorized to cause to be made.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will move to strike out section 2 I will vote with him.

Mr. BECK. I believe section 2 is in the right direction.

Mr. SHERMAN. But I think it ought to come from another committee and be in a separate bill.

Mr. BECK. The Committee on Pensions regard it as proper. I desire now to make it more effective.

Mr. SHERMAN. All I say is that it is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BLAIR. Is that the amendment to which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] raised the point of order this morning?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That has been disposed of.

Mr. LOGAN. It is the same thing.

Mr. BLAIR. If it is the same thing in another form and means the same, I raise the same point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. BECK. I am compelled to submit; I have no remedy.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. BECK. The bill is still in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still in the Senate. It has been read the third time. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BECK. I thought the question was on ordering it to be read the third time.

Mr. LOGAN. No; it has been read the third time, and the question is on the passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having had three readings, the question is on its passage.

The bill was passed.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask leave to lay before the Senate a letter with accompanying documents transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior in response to inquiries of the Committee on Education and Labor, as to existence of land in the Indian Territory available for settlement by the colored population. The information is quite valuable and not very extensive. I move that the letter and documents be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, instructed to print, in quarto form, a report by the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries upon the food-fishes and fisheries in the United States; the engravings to be in relief and to be contracted for by the Public Printer, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, and to receive the approval of the commissioner before being accepted; the work to be stereotyped, and 5,500 extra copies printed, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of the House, and 1,500 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries. There shall also be printed 1,000 extra copies for sale by the Public Printer, under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe, at a price equal to the cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereon added.

EXTRA PAY TO EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask leave to offer a resolution, with a view of referring it to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That there shall be allowed and paid to the employés of the Senate (including the Capitol police) receiving an annual compensation, who were employed on the 4th day of March, 1881, or on the 29th day of October, 1881, a sum equal to one month's pay at the rate per annum they were receiving at the dates specified herein; and that a sum equal to one month's pay shall be allowed and paid to the session employés of the Senate who shall be so employed at the adjournment of the present session.

Mr. DAWES. I think that should go to the Committee on Appropriations as they have all this matter of difference between the compensation of the employés of the two Houses before them at this moment.

Mr. BUTLER. I think the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate is the proper one to consider the matter and report to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAWES. Ordinarily that would be so; but just at this moment there is a difference between the two Houses on the question of equalizing compensation.

Mr. BUTLER. Not as to this matter at all.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator will hear me through. And pending this difference between the two Houses of Congress, the House of Representatives has passed just such a resolution as this and that comes before a committee of conference. I suggest that this go there too. Of course I have no care about it.

Mr. BUTLER. I prefer that it go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The resolution will be so referred.

INTERNAL REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the regular order be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order will be laid before the Senate, which is the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

Mr. MORRILL. To-day has been consumed, and we are only within fifteen minutes of the hour at which we usually adjourn or go into executive session. I shall not ask for any action upon this bill to-night, but will move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 15, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. SPAULDING. I move, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of that part of the Journal of the evening session relating to pension bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

The Journal was then approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire by unanimous consent to call up House joint resolution No. 178, to authorize the Secretary of War to restore a flag to the One hundred and eighth Ohio Regimental Association, presented by the ladies, wives, mothers, and sisters of the soldiers. Our confederate brethren got hold of it during the war, but it was afterward surrendered back, and is now in possession of the War Department.

Mr. O'NEILL. Let us understand how far this is to go round.

Mr. BRAGG. Is that the flag the regiment could not defend when they had it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. Where is the joint resolution?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It simply directs the Secretary of War to restore the flag to this association. The report of the committee is unanimously in its favor.

Mr. BRAGG. Is that the flag they could not take care of during the war?

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman the joint resolution in his possession?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have not, but that is all there is of it.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not here, and of course it cannot be considered.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill for the relief of Julia A. Nutt.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HOOKER. Oh, do not do that.

Mr. O'NEILL. There ought to be a dozen of recognitions for unanimous consent so it may go round the House.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. POUND. I ask by unanimous consent that thirty minutes be devoted to the recognition of members to ask for unanimous consent.

Mr. ATKINS. I object.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. There was no objection to my joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The regular order was called for.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But not until the consideration of that joint resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The call for the regular order cuts off everything. If the call for the regular order is withdrawn, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The demand for the regular order is withdrawn, and I now ask the Clerk to read the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The call for the regular order being withdrawn, the Clerk will read the title of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to deliver to the One Hundred and Eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry Association the blue regimental flag that belonged to the said regiment, which is now in custody of the Secretary of War.

Mr. POUND. I object to the consideration of that resolution.

Mr. HOOKER. I understand the gentleman from Michigan will not object to my proposition.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. I present the disagreement of the conference committee on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. PAGE. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

Mr. O'NEILL. Is it in order to move that the amendments of the Senate to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill shall be printed?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California insist on the question of consideration?

Mr. PAGE. I do not.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report of the committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the disagreeing votes on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, having met, after free and full conference have been unable to agree.

J. G. CANNON,
FRANK HISCOCK,
J. D. C. ATKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

WM. ALLISON,
HENRY L. DAWES,
HENRY G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CANNON. There is a statement accompanying the conference report, which I also ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill submit the following in explanation of the report herewith submitted:

The effect of the report submitted is to leave the bill as it passed the Senate with amendments.

J. G. CANNON,
FRANK HISCOCK,
J. D. C. ATKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the last part of that statement be read again.

The statement was again read.

Mr. RANDALL. That is very lucid.

Mr. CANNON. The bill is in the same condition as when it went to the conference committee. There is no agreement whatever upon it.

Mr. KASSON. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois if one point of the disagreement in the committee is that relating to the transfer of the records from the Surgeon-General's Office; and in case it is, to ask further whether the rules which ordinarily prevail that that House should yield which proposes a change in existing law, where there is a difference between the Houses, is not a sufficient reason for aiding to bring the two Houses into harmony with reference to this point by the House receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is well enough that this report should be explained briefly in detail, and that I should state the condition of the conference with the Senate on this bill, for the purpose, so far as it is practicable, of getting an expression from the House touching the matters of disagreement. If it is the sense of the House that I should do so, I will cheerfully make that statement.

We can agree on nearly all of the amendments. The matters in dispute principally are, first, those touching the increase of the salaries of the Senate employés. We cut down the salaries of the Senate employés, as will be recollected, and Senate amendments increased them to what they were before, or re-establishing them at what they are now receiving. The Senate have also submitted three or four amendments touching the House employés, increasing their salaries. Since this bill went to the conference committee the House, following the precedents for the two or three past years, has placed upon the sundry civil bill an amendment giving a month's extra pay to the annual employés of the House. That amendment carries an appropriation, if it should be enacted into law, of $24,000. It would cost to increase the salaries of the House employés to an equality with those of the Senate employés in the next year $29,000 above the law, and $5,000 only above the extra month's pay that we have placed upon the sundry civil bill, in the event that is done next year and these salaries equalized.

Now, just what authority we have with reference to those two or three amendments I am not entirely clear. The House conferees are willing, however, in the event that it is the sense of the House, by the House—if you choose—insisting upon its disagreements to the Senate amendments as to the Senate employés, and to the Senate amendments also touching the House employés; to take that vote as an evidence of the wish of the House in that direction, that upon this bill we should equalize the salaries of the employés of the two bodies. This, as I have said, would make a difference of only about $5,000 between the expenses of the House in that direction for the past year and what would be incurred by this action of the House for the next year.

Mr. McCOID. May I ask the gentleman a question? I would like to ask if the Senate do not propose also to give a month's pay to their employés, so that the Senate employés get their extra month's pay as well as the House employés, and the salaries are not equalized?

Mr. CANNON. In response to the question of the gentleman, I will say that prior to the cutting down of the salaries of the House employés, as I understand it, there never was a month's extra salary voted to either the House or the Senate annual employés. I do not refer now to the session employés, but only to the annual employés; and this practice of voting a month's extra pay to the House employés grew up after the decrease of their salaries some years ago, and the Senate insisted also upon giving a month's pay to their employés since that time; but if it is the will of the House to equalize these salaries I believe that for the future we would be able to abolish this policy of providing a month's extra pay to either the House or Senate annual employés.

So I move, with the view to getting the sense of the House, and for that purpose only, that the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate touching the increase of the salaries of the Senate and House employés, stating at the same time that if the House does insist and the Senate shall absolutely refuse to recede, the committee of conference will regard that as an instruction from the House, or an expression of the wish of the House, that the conferees on the part of the House shall insist upon putting up the salaries of the House employés to an equality with those of the Senate.

Mr. HOOKER. I move, Mr. Speaker, to amend the motion of the gentleman from Illinois by instructing the committee of conference to recede from their disagreement to the Senate amendments, and accede to the action of the Senate in increasing the compensation of its own employés.

And in reference to that matter I will say that that was precisely the course pursued in former Congresses upon that subject. We all know the fact that the Senate has been invariably unyielding upon that question, and I submitted to the Speaker the other day what I regard as the only practical method of obtaining a reduction of the salaries of the employés of the Senate or an equalization of the salaries of the two Houses, which was by making the pay of the House employés the same as the employés of the Senate, and then if a proposition for reduction comes upon a general action they will make a reduction of the salaries of the employés of both Houses at the same time. As it now stands, I submit to the committee and to the House that this great difference and inequality which exists between the compensation of the officers of the House performing precisely the same services, but of a more exacting character and in a greater degree, will by this action of the gentleman from Illinois only be perpetuated.

In 1878 this very proposition came before the House on this very legislative, judicial, and executive bill upon a report of a committee of conference. When a conference report was made by my friend the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS,] who was chairman of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, that very question arose, and Mr. Beebe, then a member of this House, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, It is the opinion of this House that its conferees on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill should, under the circumstances, yield to the conferees on the part of the Senate the claim of the Senate in said bill as to compensation of its own officers and employés.

And on a yea-and-nay vote that passed by a large majority. It was decided in the affirmative—yeas 116, nays 92.

A MEMBER. What was the question?

Mr. HOOKER. The question was on instructing the committee of conference on the part of the House to recede from its disagreement and allow the Senate to fix the compensation of its own employés.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state the motion of the gentleman from Illinois will have to be a motion to insist on the disagreement to all of the Senate amendments, and the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi will take precedence. The difficulty the Chair suggests about the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi is that it is a motion with reference to certain amendments as to which the gentleman from Illinois has indicated the committee of conference have been unable to agree. The motion to recede from the disagreement to the Senate amendments will take precedence of the motion to insist.

Mr. CANNON. Upon that point I wish to submit a single word. The resolution which the gentleman from Mississippi proposes to offer does not accomplish the purpose which the House may desire to accomplish. I will state very frankly that the conferees on the part of the House believe that the Senate will not recede on those amendments. But, taking the action of the House the other day in giving a month's extra pay to the annual employés, I thought it proper to state to the House that if the House would insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments, both as to the Senate employés and as to the House employés, we would regard it as an indication of the wish of the House that the conference committee should take such action as would equalize the salaries by bringing up the House salaries to those of the Senate, as under the present law; and it occurs to me that if that is the sense of the House it is the easiest way to get at it.

Mr. HOLMAN. That would be a very easy way indeed. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask him a question? I think there is some confusion in the House as to the particular amendments of the Senate to which the gentleman from Illinois has reference. There is no amendment of the Senate, I believe, increasing the pay of its own employés.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes, there is; they increased the pay over the House bill of substantially all their own employés.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. They put it back where it is now.

Mr. HOLMAN. And now the gentleman from Illinois intimates that the only way out of the difficulty is a corresponding increase of the pay of officers and employés of the House.

Mr. CANNON. I was taking the action of the House on the sundry civil bill, giving a month's extra pay to the annual employés, as indicative to my mind, and I apprehend to the minds of members generally, that it is the wish of the House to raise the salaries of the House employés equal to those of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, one word. My friend from Illinois had occasion to state but a short time since to the House that the salaries of the officers and employés of the House and the Senate were the highest of any salaries of officers and employés of the Government.

Mr. CANNON. I did.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, sir, rather than increase those salaries, either of the House or Senate, I think this House owes it to the country to let this bill fail. I hope this body, which represents the popular sentiment of the country, will not yield to a demand to increase the pay of the officers of the two Houses beyond the average compensation of the employés of this Government.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say in reply to the gentleman from Indiana, while I believe the salaries of the officers and employés of the House and Senate are better than those of the other employés of the Government, while that is my opinion, yet when I see the vast majority of this House, as indicated by amendment to the sundry civil bill, wants these salaries increased, it is no part of my business to hold to the technical rules of the House or of a conference committee as against the will of a majority of the House; and I give it now this shape on the part of the conference committee that the House may take such action as it chooses. I have not changed my opinion that all these salaries are too high, but as a member of a conference committee I am peculiarly the servant of the House, and desire to reflect its wishes.

Mr. ATKINS. As a member of the committee of conference I simply desire to say that I cannot agree with the suggestions of the gentleman from Illinois. I do not believe that the salaries of the employés of the House are too low. And while I do not see any light ahead in the solution of this question I am very much inclined to stubborn inaction. If we agree to put up the salaries of the employés of the House we do it at the mandate of the House; for this is what it amounts to. The Senate sets itself back and absolutely refuses to do anything except to take the ground, practically, that it is none of the business of the House as to what the Senate may pay its employés. That is the position. They simply mean to say "We will fix our own salaries, we will appoint as many as we choose, of clerks and other employés, and pay them what we choose, and in this matter we do not recognize you as a co-ordinate branch." That is the practical position the Senate takes to-day, and which it has taken for years.

Now, I grant you that there is no sort of justice, none in the world, in paying the clerks of the Senate for work similar to that done here a larger amount than we pay our clerks. In fact, as stated the other day by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] the House has sat, in hours of time, what is equivalent to seven weeks' more time during this session than the Senate has sat. And as regards the record of our proceedings, the proceedings of the House of Representatives occupy at least one-third more pages of the RECORD than the proceedings of the Senate. That shows the amount of work done in the House as compared with that done in the Senate.

But, as was said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] just now, in alluding to a remark of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] the employés of this House are paid higher rates of compensation than other employés of the Government; they are paid higher than the employés of the Executive Departments, there is no doubt about that.

Now, if you put the compensation of the employés of the House up to the plane upon which the compensation of the Senate employés now is, how long will it remain there? The Senate will put the compensation of their employés up still higher next session, if they choose. Shall we then go on and put ours up? That is the question. Shall we do it?

My opinion is that this House ought to take a stubborn and determined stand; just let this bill hang fire; sit here and let it hang fire until the attention of the country is directed to the monstrous position which the Senate occupies with regard to this question, a position which denies the right of the Representatives of the people to have a voice in the appropriation of the people's money. That is what it means; that, and nothing more. It is in fact a denial of the right of the House of Representatives to originate a revenue bill, for you cannot draw the line of distinction between a revenue bill and an appropriation bill to save your life; it is a denial of that great constitutional prerogative that was granted to the House in compensation for the right of the large and small States to have equal representation in the Senate.

Now, I do not believe in being bulldozed by the Senate; I do not believe in being driven into an act of injustice to the Treasury, an act of injustice to the employés of the Executive Departments of this Government, by the obstinate refusal of the Senate in saying that they will put the compensation of their own employés up or down as they choose; that they will appoint as many employés or as few as they choose; and saying to the members of the House of Representatives that it is simply none of their business, for that is what it means. While they do not have the bluntness to say so in just so many words, they do say it in fact.

For one, I am in favor of standing here and emphasizing before the country the position of the House of Representatives upon this question, so that the people of this country may see and understand that the Senate is not willing that the House of Representatives shall have a voice in determining what the salaries of the Senate employés shall be, and what shall be the number of those employés. For, gentlemen, when stripped to its real meaning, it means that, and nothing more.

Now, I do not know that I need refer to the provisions of this bill any further, although there are some things I desire to say, but it is not now a good time to say them. I hope the House will not give a practical instruction to the committee of conference to put the salaries of its employés up higher; I hope they will not do that. I desire that this House will take no such position as that, and give no practical instruction to the committee of conference to put up these salaries.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I may perhaps be permitted to say that this is not the first occasion when we have heard remarks similar to those my friend from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] has now made. Of course his recollection must be sufficiently vivid to know that we have come to just one result after all.

My friend talks about the employés of the Senate and the employés of the House. It seems to me that the proper view to take of the matter would be to regard them as the employés of the people of the United States for the purposes of the Government.

Mr. ATKINS. Of course; but the Senate do not so regard them; that is the trouble.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I say that would be the proper view to take of it.

Mr. ATKINS. I think so, too.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Therefore we, as the Representatives of the people, have come here, I suppose, to arrive at reasonable conclusions after consideration and proper conference with the co-ordinate branch of the Legislature of this country. I take it that we are to consider somewhat the wishes and views and opinions of the Senate.

Such has been the practice year after year since I have come here, and never has a session passed that we have not heard this same protest made against the views of the Senate in this matter. After throwing down the gauntlet session after session, we have coolly and quietly picked it up again and enacted into law what we thought on the whole was best.

Now let us determine what we think is a fair compensation for those that are employed in this branch of Congress; and also let us see if we cannot come to an agreement with the Senate as to what is proper to be paid to those who are the employés in the Senate.

This is a practical question. Does any one believe that this Congress will sit here week after week over this question? I do not. So, when my friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] in the outset intimated that we should make a stand here as the last ditch, I thought that we would soon be turning around, as we always do, when necessary to come to some agreement about it, and that the wheels of the Government will not stop over this question of difference about compensation.

Is it seriously proposed by anybody here that this Congress shall adjourn and its members go home without accomplishing the public business because we cannot agree about the question of the salaries of the employés in the Capitol? That is the proposition, coolly stated. We are not going to do that. In this torrid season of the year——

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman will allow me to suggest further that the practical difference between the two Houses on this question is about $5,000.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Precisely; I was about to say that in this torrid season of the year, in this latitude, we are asked to stand here forever because there is a difference of $5,000 between the two bodies.

A great principle is at stake, it is said. But, my friends, we have given up many things which embodied much more of principle than all there is in this; we have been happy to do it and will gladly do it again. I believe that when men undertake to act together, three hundred, more or less, in this body and seventy-six in the other, they must find out that they must yield something to each other, and no portion of them can expect to carry out without a concession their own preferences and their own whims. Agreement based upon mutual concession is necessary if you are going to legislate at all.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is a practical parliamentary suggestion which I wish to make, a suggestion of vast consequence, it seems to me, not only in this matter but with reference to the interests of good legislation in the future. Let us look at the question. My friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] threw out a suggestion which I want to notice, because it has been in my mind for some time. It is a grave question with me whether this House can proceed to raise the salaries of persons who are employed in this part of the Capitol simply because we throw into conference the question of the pay of the employés in the Senate. Nothing is better settled, Mr. Speaker, than that provisions of a bill which have been agreed upon by the two branches cannot be changed in conference. Nothing can be safer than this principle.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I know what my friend is going to suggest. I say nothing can be safer, because when the minds of the two branches of Congress after full and free consideration concur, it ought not to be in the power of six men chosen as conferees from the two branches to go to work and reconstruct the whole bill. Plainly that proposition needs no argument. If the conferees may change something upon which the two bodies have already concurred, then the same conferees may take up any other section or paragraph of the bill and incorporate in their report something which shall sweep away entirely the conclusions of the two branches.

Mr. HOUK. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I know what my friend is going to ask.

Mr. HOUK. Let me ask it, then.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Very well.

Mr. HOUK. Could it be said that these conferees had reconstructed the bill if the Senate and the House agreed to delegate to the conference committee authority to do it? In such a case would not the conferees be acting under proper authority? Has not the Senate already agreed to give such authority? And why should not the House do the same thing?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The answer to that question is very simple, as my friend of course anticipates. No such delegation of authority can be given except by unanimous consent. There is a parliamentary objection, lying at the foundation of our legislation; and no majority, not even nine-tenths of this House, can deprive you or me of the right to interpose that objection if we choose to do so.

Mr. HOUK. Will the gentleman permit me to answer that?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. My friend only wanted to ask a question. He can answer after a while.

Mr. HOUK. Have not the two Houses the right to delegate to a conference committee all the authority given to any other committee? Has not the conference committee, after being so authorized, the right to make its report to the House; and then has not the House the right either to adopt it or to reject it?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. No, Mr. Speaker; such authority cannot be given by any majority vote. Nothing is better or more plainly settled than what I have stated. I wish to say here and now, that to accomplish a certain temporary purpose it is not well to depart from what we know is sound and right. If you delegate this ample authority to a conference committee I charge you to consider where will go your great bills in the last days of every session—bills upon which the two Houses have in large measure agreed? In the hurry and confusion incident to the close of a session, in view of the intense desire to get away, and the want of attention that may attend even a conference report, shall we not find ourselves overcome by proceedings which we would little dream we would endure under other circumstances?

Now a word upon a question which I anticipate my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] proposed to ask. "What," he may say, "if the provisions as passed by the House have been in some degree amended so that we may introduce this question?" Now, I want to answer: If the House provisions have been amended by the Senate, just so far they may go into conference, but no further—not the whole bill—not other provisions which remain untouched by the Senate. Is it claimed by anybody that by reason of an amendment, for instance, in respect to the salary of the Sergeant-at-Arms—taking this officer for illustration—the whole range of House salaries is thereby thrown into conference? Not at all. That is not sound.

Mr. CARLISLE. And when both bodies have agreed upon all the other salaries of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Certainly. I started with that as the initial point. When there has been concurrence in everything except one line or one item, is non-concurrence in that one item to be considered as non-concurrence in all the rest? Certainly not.

Mr. McCOID. May not the conference committee be instructed to take into consideration enough to enable them to agree upon the disputed points?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. My friend from Iowa suggests what is the burden of his wish, not the outcome of his judgment. I have too much respect for his judgment to think otherwise. I say we must leave out of this question what it may be desirable as a matter of legislation to do about these other matters. That can be reached in some proper way. We have almost accomplished it by the month's extra pay. And we can do it again rather than violate the sound principle of parliamentary practice. We had better do it. I will go with them to make it even two months rather than put this Congress into the danger we all apprehend, if we start in the other direction. There is nothing which can be so dangerous to the integrity of our proceedings as to take this course which has been suggested.

Now I say let the conference proceedings be conducted with strict regularity. Let us determine whether we will agree to the provisions in regard to the Senate or not, and if certain amendments have been made in regard to the employés of the House, let us agree to them specifically or disagree to them as our judgment shall dictate, but let us not be led away into the domain of uncertainty and danger that will certainly come. It is of more consequence than the pay of any of these boys or clerks or any other of the employés of this House.

I make this point, Mr. Speaker, because I say I feel it my duty with regard to the future to make the point that there can be no instruction—the point I made in the last Congress when the same question was up, as the Chair will find by reference to the RECORD—that there can be no instruction on the part of the House of the conferees to consider any point that is not now the subject of disagreement between the two Houses.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I am gratified that the gentleman from Massachusetts has so clearly stated the true province of conferees on the part of the two Houses. They have no right to consider any propositions except those of distinct difference between the two Houses. The highest demands of integrity require they should rigidly refuse to consider any other matter.

This very question was up in the last House, as to the power of conferees, and on this very question, and it was accepted as the true doctrine they could not pass from the specific point of difference between the two Houses. And my friend from Arkansas, sitting by me, rightly says that the Speaker ruled on this question.

I remember on one occasion, being on a conference committee on the sundry civil appropriation bill, the proposition was made to put in a very insignificant amendment not justified by the scope of the difference between the two Houses. It so happened the distinguished gentleman from Maine, formerly Speaker of this House, was one of the conferees on the part of the Senate; and he happened to be absent and was called for in reference to the matter, and instantly and indignantly responded he would consider himself dishonored were he to sign his name to such a report. And it was not because of the subject-matter, but because he stood there as the agent of the Senate meeting the conferees of the House on the simple matter of difference between the two Houses.

Now, as to the salaries of the House employés, let us see the status of the committee. As to most of the House employés, the Senate have passed on them. They are out of the reach of the two Houses. It is alleged, by way of getting the matter into conference, they have increased the salaries of two or three of the House employés, and there is a matter of difference for them to consider. In that respect alone they have, but they have no right to go beyond those two or three cases and take up the whole range of the House employés. There is nothing in the rule, there is nothing in parliamentary proceedings, there is nothing in sound legislation which will justify it, and I trust we will not be led away by our social relations toward our employés to violate a great principle which will work incalculable damage hereafter. Conference committees have power enough under the rules. Such construction would give them immeasurable increase of power beyond anything contemplated heretofore. I regret very much the Senate has seen fit to touch the House employés. Deliberately the committee of this House determined on a bill fixing their salaries. Deliberately under the rules the House refused to increase them. Deliberately they struck down the Senate employés. The Senate insist, as they always have done, as a matter of courtesy they should take charge of the matter of their own employés. As to the House employés they presume we did not intend to do what we had done, and they propose to help us out of the difficulty by increasing the salaries of our friends. I do not think their interference with the House employés with such motives is courteous to this body, and I trust we will not go into any such little game of adjustment as is proposed.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says he infers from the proposition on the sundry civil bill to give a month's extra pay this House means these salaries should be equalized. He has no right to go beyond the rules governing conference committees to get any such conference, and even if he had, such an inference cannot be taken from such action.

Ever since I have been a member of this House it has been the custom of the House almost invariably to give the employés an extra month's pay. During the last Congress the Senate did not get it for the reason that the House declined to allow it because they refused to equalize the salaries of their employés. There is therefore no inference upon that subject, and for one, while I was willing to give to the House employés the usual increase, neither I nor many others upon this side, at all events, are willing that the House shall infer that we propose to increase these salaries thereby.

It was held in the debate in the House at that time, and I believe that is the sentiment of this House, that the House employés were getting enough and that there was no intention to increase their compensation. The gentleman from Illinois seems to take the position that he would never increase the compensation of the House employés until he had run through all the Departments of the Government and had increased the salaries of the various employés in them; and he was right in that position and he ought to stand there to-day. I believe, therefore, that in view of the position which he has already taken, he is not justified in now increasing the salaries of the House employés simply because the Senate employés are too high. His own report, when he brought in this bill into the House, shows that the Senate salaries were too high. The House stood by him in that position and the salaries were reduced; and I think it will stand by him now. But if my friend proposes to yield to the Senate to the extent of compromising the salaries, I shall join with my friend from Mississippi and say, "Rather than do this, rather than remedy the wrong in this way, I would rather yield the struggle." I had rather say, "You have all along taken a wrong position and you may stand by it if you choose, but for my part I will make no compromise with you on such a question."

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention briefly to other matters which are in disagreement in the conference, and then I will move the previous question.

Mr. DUNN. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. HOOKER. I should like to have an opportunity of being heard upon my amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Let me occupy the short time that I have in explaining this matter, as I am urged by gentlemen representing the Commerce Committee to give way as rapidly as possible, so as to enable them to get the river and harbor bill before the House.

Now, a word in reply to the gentleman from Georgia. I have not in any way changed the position which I formerly took upon the salary question as far as it relates to the employés of the two Houses. I believe now as I have always believed. But in spite of my belief, from that side of the House came the other day a proposition to provide a month's extra pay——

Mr. BLOUNT. That has always been done.

Mr. RANDALL. Not always; it was done in the Forty-sixth Congress.

Mr. BLOUNT. It has been frequently done before, I think the gentleman will find.

Mr. CANNON. It was done last year and the year before, and I say that it is worse than folly to claim to be more virtuous than other people or than the other branch of this Government, because they choose to make the salaries of their employés higher than ours, and then to turn around and do in a left-handed manner what we did not do in an open, right-handed, frank, manly way.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish the gentleman from Illinois while on the floor would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] a question as to whether he believes the point of order would lie against a provision, if it should be reported by the next conference committee, recommending or proposing an entire new section to this bill, not interfering with the sections of the bill as far as agreed to, but an entirely new provision distinct and by itself which had in view the equalization of the salaries of the two Houses?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. In response to the gentleman from New York I will say that the Chair under such circumstances always assumes the right to say that he will decide a question of order when it actually arises.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is the question which I want the gentleman from Massachusetts now to answer, whether he would agree that it was within the power of the conference committee, and not subject to the point of order, to propose an entire new section, distinct and separate from the rest, equalizing these salaries?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. And the "gentleman from Massachusetts" feels like assuming the same right as the Chair with reference to a hypothetical question in order to be perfectly consistent; for my friend from New York will see that it is impossible to say how a person would deal with a point of order until the matter actually arose and the question was submitted to his consideration. However, in general terms I presume the gentleman from New York means to ask if a section were added to the bill by the conference committee that would leave the salaries of the employés of the Senate as they are now and would bring the House salaries up to them, equalizing them in that manner, such action would be within the province of this conference committee and not subject to a point of order such as I have suggested.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes; to incorporate a provision of that character.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. In answer to the gentleman I will say that the proposition that two and two make four is one which is always the same, no matter how you put it or where you set your figures, whether upon a blackboard, a slate, or a piece of paper. I do not know how to answer the gentleman's question except by saying that I do not believe it is within the power of the conference committee to do by indirection what they cannot do directly.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is not doing it by indirection. It is reaching the question directly. The question is, whether, with the House and Senate disagreeing, an affirmative proposition, a new provision, a new section, could be added to the bill which to some extent would change the provision of the bill which had heretofore been agreed upon. That is my question, and I ask it in good faith.

Mr. CANNON. I only yield three minutes more.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I will be satisfied with two.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no opinion on the question myself. I ask the question to get the judgment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. What I say is, if the new section should amount to striking out the present section and substituting another—I do not care whether at the end or the middle of the bill—that should do what you now propose to do; that is, should raise the salaries of the employés in the House and increase them from what the two branches have agreed upon, I say that would not be competent any more than this proceeding.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question, whether in his judgment——

Mr. CANNON. I should like to know who is running this time?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will allow me, I think that matter has been exhausted, and I will proceed to conclude my remarks on this point by calling attention to amendments 53 and 54, on page 9 of the bill. As the bill passed the House this provision was made:

> For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the House of Representatives, $316,687.60, namely, for Clerk of the House of Representatives, &c.

The Senate struck out the word "sixteen" and inserted the word "twenty-four;" so as to make the amount $324,687.60. And these three other amendments under the heading "House of Representatives"—I apprehend it may be possible that those are such amendments as would give the committee of conference power to submit for the consideration of the House a conference report on that part of the bill.

But I do not care to pursue that. Personally I am against the increase of salaries and have brought this matter to the attention of the House that the House might express an opinion upon it if they see proper. But I am informed by the Speaker of the House that this report of the conference committee stands or falls as a whole. Therefore, as we submit a disagreeing report, I suppose we will have to dispose of it as a whole.

I will therefore proceed to speak to two other matters of difference, and having called the attention of the House to those, I will ask the previous question.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to say a single word?

Mr. CANNON. For how long?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. If the gentleman does not feel inclined to yield I do not care.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to dispose of the matter. The gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE,] who desires to bring up the river and harbor bill, is urging me forward.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I only want to say a word or two.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] took occasion to say, when the amendment proposed by myself to this bill was under consideration in the House, I said something about the last ditch.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. That was merely my way of stating it.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I made the motion to strike down the salaries of employés of the Senate to an equality with those of the House not with any idea of contending that this House should remain in session until an agreement should be brought about but in execution of what I believe to be an act of justice as between the employés of the Senate and those of the House.

Our rules are so framed as to prevent us from doing business or doing justice either. We have unfortunately hampered ourselves with such a set of rules; and the only way, in my judgment, to reach this question was to move to strike down the salaries of the employés of the Senate, and when the matter reached a conference we might be able to arrive at some conclusion that would do substantial justice. The motion prevailed. The Senate has seen fit to offer an amendment to the House bill restoring the salaries of the Senate employés. I do not agree with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] that that was an act of arbitrary power. It was the Senate's right. They have a right to amend a bill sent from this House in any particular which they in their judgment shall approve.

We have the right, when that amendment comes back, to concur in it or to disagree in it. That is their right, and that is our right. Now, the Senate restores the salaries of their employés, but in connection with that, without attempting to put the salaries of the employés of the House upon the same basis with those of the empolyés of the Senate, they make an amendment in the general provision for compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the House of Representatives which we had put at $316,000, their amendment being that there shall be provided for the compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the House of Representatives, $324,000 in round numbers.

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] raises the question whether the conference committee has a right, under that provision, to take into consideration the salaries of the employés of the House. It seems to me the committee of conference had jurisdiction of that question. The Senate had increased the appropriation for compensation of employés of the House from $316,000 to $324,000.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to correct him? I think he is in error.

Mr. CANNON. I only yielded to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] for a minute.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I did not so understand the gentleman. If I am to understand he yielded only for a minute I desist. But I desire to read one statement:

> A committee of conference cannot change what both Houses adopt; but they have a right to report any bill that is germane to the bills referred to them.

Now, I say that when that amendment was put on this bill by the Senate the whole question of the salaries of the employés of the House becomes germane to the bill, and the committee of conference has complete jurisdiction over the subject.

I ask pardon of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] for having taken so much of his time.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to call the attention of the House to other changes in this bill, and first to section 6 on page 116 of the printed bill. As it passed the House that section provided that the Secretary of War could utilize the appropriations for the contingent expenses of the Surgeon-General's Office for a force of clerks, in the event he saw proper to transfer the records pertaining to pensions to the Adjutant-General's Office. The Secretary of War has already the authority to consolidate these records; and the House conferees insisted that the appropriations should be so made that the Secretary of War could purchase the furniture and pay the contingent expenses of the clerks engaged upon those records, in the event that he desired to make the consolidation; and that this should operate either way, in the event he desired to make the consolidation of the records in the Surgeon-General's Office, or to make the consolidation in the Adjutant-General's Office; that he should have the right to use this appropriation to buy the necessary furniture and pay the contingent expenses. The Senate conferees refused to accede to the position of the House touching that matter.

There is another provision in that same section which, as the House will recollect, directs the transfer of all the records pertaining to pensions now in the Adjutant-General's and Surgeon-General's Offices, where there is only one copy of them, into the fire-proof building now occupied by the State, Navy and War Departments. The House will recollect the merits of that proposition.

The Senate conferees refused even to consider the provision of the House bill touching that matter; but they did consent to go this far, to direct that all the records shall be transferred to that building, without specifying what part of the building should be used for storing them.

We, on the part of the House, have refused to make that concession, for this reason: the House Committee on Appropriations examined this whole question with very great care. We had an opinion from the Adjutant-General or the Secretary of War in answer to our suggestion to the effect that if we gave him the attic and the upper story of the State Department building, with the north wing when completed, and the present room now occupied by the War Department in that building, he could take care of all these records, and if he should make the consolidation of the records touching pensions of the two bureaus he could successfully work them, and otherwise he would not consolidate such records.

Now, if we adopt the Senate modification, if we meet them in what they are willing to do, we would march up to this state of facts: these records would all have to go into that building, and if there was no provision of law stating that a portion of the south wing of the building shall be occupied for the storage of the records and the working of the clerks the result would be, as we think without doubt, that in the future as in the past the force of fifty-six persons in the State Department would continue to occupy the whole of the south wing and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy would be entirely crowded out of the east wing, for it would take substantially all of the east wing and of the north wing for these records and the clerks upon them.

Our investigations show that with the north wing and one-half of the east wing, as now occupied by the War Department, and the whole of the attic and the fifth story under the attic in the portion of the building occupied by the State Department, these records can be stored and work done upon them, and the Secretary of the Navy can bring the whole of his force into that part of the building which he now occupies, and still have ample room. We shall ask the House to insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment, with a view of saying to the Senate conferees that the House is not disposed to yield.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question just there?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. It is whether this is not an opportune time for us to provide for an opening between the State Department the War Department, and the Navy Department portions of that building, so that there shall be on every floor, accessible to persons doing business in the Army and Navy portions of the building, an easy access to the State Department portion without being obliged to go outside of the building?

Mr. CANNON. I will say in reply to the gentleman that this bill does provide for two openings.

Mr. RANDALL. One on the fifth floor?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, and there is an amendment providing for another opening. And there is sufficient disagreement between the two Houses so that the House conferees can insist upon an opening on all the floors.

Mr. RANDALL. That is what we want.

Mr. CANNON. Now, I want to say in conclusion upon this matter, what I said to the House once before, that the south wing of the building, occupied by the State Department, cost $3,200,000, and it houses just fifty-six people, including the Secretary of State, the Assistant Secretaries of State, the heads of bureaus, clerks, and copyists.

Mr. RANDALL. How much room-space is occupied by that Department?

Mr. CANNON. It occupies 31,000 feet of office space, and as nearly as much space for storage. If that portion of the building was as fully occupied as the Pension Office building, it would accommodate over one thousand clerks.

I want to state again, and then I will conclude and ask the previous question, that without any reference to contingent expenses, without any reference to furniture, it costs for the present force in the State Department $60,000 for the room alone of each clerk or copyist who occupies space in that portion of the building. Now, in my opinion the House should insist upon its provisions in this respect, and I want to state that in my opinion the law should be amended, and by specific enactment, so that this magnificent space, so valuable as a fire-proof building, shall be utilized as Congress may direct.

Mr. STEELE. How much do we save?

Mr. CANNON. Fifteen thousand dollars rent for the official records of the Adjutant-General's Office. The money saving is nothing as compared with the safety of the records and the hastening of the work of payment of pensioners.

Mr. STEELE. For the Medical Department I understand the saving is only $1,500.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the House placed upon this bill a certain provision touching the publication of the Supreme Court reports. That provision, which will be recollected without my stating its substance, has been struck out by the Senate, and I am satisfied the Senate will not agree to recede further, satisfied that the best agreement we can obtain from the Senate is substantially this: the present pay of the reporter of the Supreme Court when he issues but one volume a year is $2,500; when he gets out, as he does practically, two volumes annually he receives $1,500 more, making $4,000. The royalty which he receives from the publisher is in full $1,750 a volume, making $3,500 per annum as royalty. Thus his total pay for the year is $7,500. Out of this he has to pay for clerk hire $1,200 and for office rent $600, making $1,800, and reducing the $7,500 gross compensation to $5,700 net compensation.

The Senate conferees, as their best proposition, tender us this compromise: that we appropriate for the reporter of the Supreme Court $4,500 salary when he issues only one volume annually, and $1,500 additional when he issues two; that we make an appropriation for clerk hire and office rent equal to the actual expenditure, $1,800; that the reporter be required to furnish without cost to the Government 300 copies of each volume of the reports; and that he furnish the work to the public at $2 a volume. When I have made this statement I have covered substantially the whole ground. These three points are the matters upon which in conference we have not been able practically to come to an understanding.

I now yield for a few moments to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, if I correctly understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] who has charge of this report, he stated that he would consider the adoption by the House of a motion to insist as an instruction to the conference committee to touch the salaries of House employés and equalize them with those of the Senate. Now, I do not agree to that parliamentary construction. If the motion to insist should be adopted, I am sure it will not in my mind be susceptible of any such interpretation.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman will allow me to remark that at the time I made the statement, when this matter was first presented, I was under the impression, after consulting one or two better parliamentarians by far than I am, that it was competent to take up these questions piecemeal and recede from or insist upon one amendment after another. But I find the Speaker will rule that this report must stand or fall as a whole.

Mr. RANDALL. In that position he is quite correct.

Mr. CANNON. If that is the case, it is not practicable to get the sort of instruction that I indicated; and of course, in the present position of the question, the conference committee could not consider itself instructed touching the House and Senate employés so far as raising the salaries of the House employés are concerned.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman's explanation is quite satisfactory. Now, let me go a little further in reference to this question of the salaries of the employés of the two Houses. This House ought not to follow the precedent of a former Congress—the Forty-sixth or, perhaps, the Forty-fifth—if it is a bad precedent. I believe the real reason which prompted the last Congress and which prompted Congress at this session to give this extra pay to House employés was for the purpose of equalizing the salaries of officers of the House with those paid to officers of the Senate. Now, you have done that.

Mr. CANNON. It was done last year, but it has not been done for the year to come.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, we probably shall do it; and therefore I submit we should not take part in an effort to raise the salaries in this way.

Nay, more; I agree with what I presume is the judgment of most parliamentarians who have examined such subjects—a judgment which has been embodied in decisions by former Speakers, and which induced me to make three rulings in that direction, to which I adhere at this moment—that a conference committee not only exceeds all power delegated to it but assumes to break down all legitimate precedent when it undertakes in a conference report to go beyond the distinct and positive differences which have arisen between the two Houses. A rule which would permit a conference committee to do this would lead to most disastrous consequences—would remit to the conferees, three on the part of the Senate and three on the part of the House, the right practically to overrule the concurrent voices of the two bodies. This would be not only dangerous but demoralizing and corrupt in the highest degree. So far as I know, this question has never been agitated in the House when its Speaker, being called upon to decide, has not decided as I have stated—that the power is never delegated to a conference committee to touch anything except the exact language and the exact purposes involved in the differences between the two Houses. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this line of safe precedent will not be departed from on account of any sentimentality we may have about raising salaries.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. HOOKER. I should be glad to occupy two or three minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Before moving the previous question, I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] and afterward three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER.]

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, it is chiefly upon the parliamentary point that I wish to be heard. There is no other possibility for the House than that which the Speaker has indicated, of agreeing or disagreeing to this report. It seems to me impossible to disagree. We must accept the report, because it is simply the report of a fact—that the conferees are not able to agree. But there remains a further fact, that the original bill is on our table, being brought back in connection with this report, and therefore specific instruction, if it must be had, is to be had by acting again on the question of receding from our disagreement to given amendments of the Senate.

Therefore it is in the power of the House to facilitate the agreement between the two Houses by permitting votes on this or that amendment which the Senate has made and on the question whether the House will recede.

Now, sir, a word on the fact. I think that the House cannot long stand upon a mere question of forcing the Senate to reduce by a small sum the pay of its appointees. If each body has any responsibility worth mentioning, that responsibility is broad enough to say what pay its clerks should receive. Each body knows the work its clerks have to do and the character of the ability for which it pays.

But I must admit that if the Senate were to say what each of our appointees should have within the range of general reason I should consider them as taking a responsibility which belonged to us exclusively.

The next question is, does an alleged wrong, as the House regards it, of too much pay to the Senate appointees justify the House in doing the same thing by giving what it claims too much to its appointees? Is it a fair position into which to force the House to repeatedly say the Senate is paying too much and then turn around and pay our own appointees just as much as those of the Senate? Two wrongs in this respect cannot make a right. Let us determine what our appointees are entitled to, and pay them as the Senate pay their appointees, and each body take its responsibility before the country.

Then, sir, on the other points I have only to ask that the committee of conference will remember that wise rule which has often, and I may perhaps say always, brought the Houses together without loss of honor, and that is: that House which proposes a change in existing law, if the other House refuses to agree to it, must itself recede from the proposition to change the law. In the last resort that has been the principle which has brought the two Houses together and is the principle which I hope may prevail in this case.

The mere difference of compensation for a few months longer of rental does not, it seems to me, in merging one Department into another, giving control of one part of the building of one Department to the other—does not justify this House in standing before the country much longer, thereby preventing the passage of great appropriation bills necessary to be passed before we adjourn. The actual differences are reduced to a small number, and I want to give no vote which shall not leave our conferees free to adopt the principle I have suggested to bring the two Houses together.

We have made appropriations only for twenty days to meet the delay called for by the disagreement of this conference committee, and before those twenty days have expired I hope the agreement will be arrived at on the principle I have suggested. That is all I have to say.

Mr. CANNON. I demand now the previous question on the adoption of the report of the conference committee.

Mr. HOOKER. I wish to offer an amendment to the conference report.

Mr. RANDALL. There can be no amendment to a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand it to be an amendment to a conference report. The proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi is to recede from the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. The Chair considers that as pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would be in order.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think that is it. It is rather an expression of opinion of the House that the conferees should agree.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi did state he desired the House to recede from its disagreement as to the matter of the payment of the Senate employés.

Mr. HOOKER. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would not be in order, because it refers only to a portion of the differences referred to the conference committee, but that the general motion to recede would be in order.

Mr. RANDALL. That is right, because that motion which concludes legislation has precedence over the motion which keeps the two Houses at variance, just as a motion to concur takes precedence of a motion to disagree.

Mr. HOOKER. Let me make a suggestion in reference to what has been suggested as to how far the House must consider the report of the conference committee as an entirety. I submit to the Chair it is perfectly in the power of the House to instruct the committee of conference in regard to a particular disagreement. And while it may instruct it to recede from one point it may instruct it to insist on another. Therefore when a portion comes from a committee it is perfectly in order on the part of the House to recede from that disagreement, such as the equalization of salaries of the employés of the two Houses. It is perfectly competent for the House to instruct the committee on that point to recede.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will pass upon these different questions as they come up for consideration.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to ask if we cannot at once dispose of this report of the conference committee? Then when the bill is before the House the proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi may be pending and considered after disposing of this report and ordering a new conference. But upon the report of the conference committee in its present form no such amendment could be entertained.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that this report cannot be amended and that the proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi could not be entertained. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires now to inquire of the gentleman from Mississippi whether he wishes to submit his motion in the form of a motion for the House to recede from its disagreement to all of the Senate amendments?

Mr. HOOKER. I would like to make the motion in the form that I originally suggested, to recede from the disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with reference to the salaries of the Senate employés.

The SPEAKER. The Chair could not entertain that motion, or any other motion than that which was pending when the previous question was ordered. The Chair will submit the pending motion to the House.

Mr. CANNON. But the previous question has been ordered.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Mississippi had presented his motion, which was assumed to include all of these amendments, before the previous question was ordered.

Mr. HOOKER. I do not desire to make the motion, then, to cover all of the amendments if I cannot make it to cover a specific one.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state again the gentleman cannot make a new motion. The Chair thinks that a motion to recede from the disagreements is not now in order.

Mr. McCOID. I have a motion to offer in reference to the action of the committee of conference.

Mr. PAGE. Would it not be in order for the gentleman from Mississippi to move to instruct a new committee of conference?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule upon that question when it comes up.

Mr. McCOID. I wish to offer a resolution in this connection, if in order.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order; the previous question is pending.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the safer way to save all parliamentary controversy would be to accept the report of the conferees and then ask a further conference.

Mr. KASSON. Certainly, that is the proper method.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to insist upon the disagreement to the Senate amendments and ask a further conference.

Mr. KASSON. Is not the first motion to adopt the report of the conference committee?

The SPEAKER. The report is simply a disagreement.

Mr. KASSON. Then the bill is before the House——

The SPEAKER. The report of the committee of conference is simply an indication of a disagreement on the part of the conference committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Cannot we have a division of the three branches in controversy?

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done; the report must be taken as an entirety.

Mr. SPRINGER. There are three separate branches——

Mr. McCOID. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry, whether a resolution to instruct a new committee of conference will be in order after the adoption of that motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be able to answer the question when the proposition is presented. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to insist upon the disagreements to the Senate amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. We ought to precede that by accepting the report of the conference committee which indicates a disagreement.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to a question of order. I think that there is some misunderstanding here, and I will state it in this form: there is always at one stage a time when it is in order to make a motion that the House recede from its disagreement; the same point as suggested by my friend, the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. McCOID]——

The SPEAKER. That motion has not been made.

Mr. KASSON. Now if this motion is put, that the House insist upon its disagreement, it excludes the right on the part of the House to move to recede.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered upon the only motion which was in order.

Mr. McCOID. Then I ask unanimous consent to submit a motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must wait until the time comes when we can proceed to other business. The motion would not now be in order.

Mr. McCOID. I know it is not now in order, but I am trying to find out when it will be in order.

The SPEAKER. The only thing in order now is the question upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to insist upon the disagreements to the amendments of the Senate and ask for a further committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. McCOID. I now offer this resolution as an instruction to the new committee of conference.

Mr. BLOUNT. I reserve the point of order upon it.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the committee on the part of the House is instructed to agree to such modifications of the bill as will equalize the salaries of the Senate and House by an increase of the pay of House employés if necessary.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object to the consideration of that resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It is subject to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ascertain from the gentleman in charge of this bill whether there was any disagreement between the Senate and the House upon the question of paying the House employés. The Chair is asking the question for information.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; there was a disagreement. There were three or four amendments as to the employés of the House.

The SPEAKER. Affecting their salaries?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir; and I think appropriating for an additional committee clerk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can only say if this resolution is meant to cover all the House employés there is no such question pending before the conference committee in virtue of the fact of there being a disagreement between the two Houses on that question. The resolution, therefore, would not be in order.

Mr. RANDALL. And there is a further point of order that it is not competent for the House to instruct the conference, because then it would cease to be a free conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not at present prepared to hold that the House might not instruct the committee to recede or to insist upon some matter which was particularly before it. But this resolution the Chair thinks goes further and proposes to instruct the conference committee to take up a new matter not referred to it; and therefore it is not in order.

Mr. McCOID. I wish to modify the resolution so that it shall read "that it is the sense of the House that the committee shall," &c.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order on the resolution as modified.

Mr. McCOID. I understand the Senate amendments change the salaries of the House employés in some instances.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must hold that the resolution as modified is still obnoxious to the point of order, on the ground which the Chair has stated.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILSON. Did I understand the Chair to say it is not competent for the House to express an opinion to a committee of conference?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would be idle for the House to express an opinion on a subject that was not before the committee.

Mr. WILSON. But this is before the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that it is not.

Mr. DUNN. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the House of Representatives it is the duty of the two Houses of Congress to fix the salaries and compensation of the officers and employés of the two Houses, as it is their duty to fix the salaries and compensation of members of the two Houses; and that such salaries and compensation of said officers and employés should be equal in each House for like positions and services as are the salaries of the members of each.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order against that resolution.

The SPEAKER. If objection is made, the Chair will hold that the resolution is not now in order.

Mr. DUNN. Why?

Mr. HISCOCK. Because it is not germane to any question before the House.

The SPEAKER. The subject is disposed of.

Mr. DUNN. I understood the Chair to intimate to the gentleman from Mississippi that a resolution in the nature of instructions to the committee of conference after the action which has been taken would be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair never desires to rule on a question of order till it is reached. The Chair stated it was not prepared to hold that a resolution which instructed the committee to insist or recede on some particular matter that was properly before it by reason of a disagreement between the two Houses would not be in order. But it is not necessary to rule upon that until the question arises.

The Chair announces as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. CANNON of Illinois, Mr. HISCOCK of New York, and Mr. ATKINS of Tennessee.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. There is upon the Speaker's table a message from the Senate asking a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the general deficiency appropriation bill, and announcing the appointment of the conferees on the part of the Senate. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference asked by that body.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as conferees on the part of the House on the general deficiency appropriation bill Mr. HISCOCK of New York, Mr. ROBESON of New Jersey, and Mr. COX of New York.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for the regular order.

Mr. PAGE. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to submit a privileged report. If it provokes discussion I will withdraw it.

FOOD FISHES AND FISHERIES OF THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] desires to make a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Committee on Printing have had under consideration the House concurrent resolution in regard to printing 5,500 extra copies of a report by the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries upon the food fishes and fisheries of the United States, and they have instructed me to report it back and recommend its passage. I ask the Clerk to read the concurrent resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the Public Printer be, and is hereby, instructed to print, in quarto form, a report by the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries upon the food fishes and fisheries of the United States; the engravings to be in relief and to be contracted for by the Public Printer, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, and to receive the approval of the Commissioner before being accepted; the work to be stereotyped, and 5,500 extra copies printed, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of the House, and 1,500 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries. There shall also be printed 1,000 extra copies for sale by the Public Printer, under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe, at a price equal to the cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereon added.

Mr. SPRINGER. One word of explanation. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALARIES OF SENATE AND HOUSE CLERKS, ETC.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution. It is very brief, and if it provokes any discussion I will withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas great inequalities are believed to exist in the salaries of the officers, clerks, and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives——

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Let this resolution be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to its being read.

The entire resolution was then read, as follows:

Whereas great inequalities are believed to exist in the salaries of the officers, clerks, and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives, whereby injustice is done to them as well as to the Government; and

Whereas the public interests will be promoted by a careful revision of those salaries and a correction of the existing inequalities at as early a day as possible: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service be, and they are hereby, instructed to carefully consider the subject of salaries for said officers, clerks, and employés, and if inequalities are found, and if injustice is being done to them, or any of them, or to the Government, in their opinion, to provide for the correction thereof by bill or otherwise.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will object to that unless this is added:

That the said committee shall not provide for any increase of salaries.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. It does not touch that matter at all.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon adopting the resolution.

Mr. McMILLIN. Do I understand that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is incorporated in the resolution?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Oh, no.

Mr. HOLMAN. If that is not in the object of the resolution may be misunderstood.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think that amendment is eminently proper.

The SPEAKER. Is the amendment offered?

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer that amendment.

The SPEAKER. Then the question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution as amended was then adopted.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution as amended was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRENCH CABLE COMPANY.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I rise to a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back the resolution of inquiry which I send to the Clerk's desk with the recommendation that the same be adopted.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States, if not incompatible with the public service, communicate to this House any information in the possession of the Department of State in reference to any change or modification of the stipulations which the French Cable Company made with our Government on the 19th of February, 1880, when said company was permitted to land its cable upon our shores, to the effect that it would never combine with other companies to raise rates; and further to report the nature of such change and modification, if any, with a view to Congressional action to prevent the consolidation of rates.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD, in connection with the resolution just adopted, a statement from the Department of State.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly.

The statement is as follows:

President Pouyer-Quertier to the Secretary of State.

We have the honor of addressing you the confirmation of the acceptance of the "Compagnie Française du Telegraph de Paris à New York" to the conditions imposed by you regarding the landing of its cable which starts from St. Pierre to land at Cape Cod, territory of the United States.

Conditions required by the Government of the United States:

First. That the company receive no exclusive concession from the Government of France which would exclude any other line which might be formed in the United States from a like privilege of landing on the shores of France and connecting with the inland telegraphic system of that country.

Second. That the company shall not consolidate or amalgamate with any other line or combine therewith for the purpose of regulating rates.

Third. That it shall give precedence in the transmission of official messages to the Governments of the United States and France.

Fourth. That charges to this Government shall be at the rate of those to the Government of France, and the general charges shall be reasonable.

Fifth. That the Government of the United States shall be entitled to the same or similar privileges as may by law, regulation, or agreement be granted to the French Government.

Sixth. That a citizen of the United States shall stand on the same footing as regards privileges with the citizen of France.

Seventh. That messages shall have precedence in the following order:

A. Government messages.

B. Telegraphic business.

C. General business.

Eighth. That the line shall be kept open for daily business and all messages in the above order be transmitted according to the time of receipt.

Signed by the president and council of administration.

Extract from letter of the French minister [Mr. Max Outrey] to the Secretary of State, March 4, 1880.

I have just received and hasten to send you the memorandum of the conditions required of the French Telegraph Company from Paris to New York, accepted and signed by the president of that company. It is, as you will see, entirely conformable to the memorandum to which the agent of the company had given his adhesion in virtue of the powers sent from Paris.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAGE. I now move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

Mr. CARLISLE. I hope the gentleman will not make that motion for fifteen or twenty minutes.

The motion was not agreed to; two-thirds not voting in favor thereof.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

CHIME FOR CHURCH OF HOLY TRINITY, PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. KELLEY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 257) authorizing the remission or refunding of duty on a chime of bells for the Church of the Holy Trinity, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DR. F. O. ST. CLAIR.

Mr. KELLEY also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 5374) to refund to Dr. F. O. St. Clair $97.80 duties on a monument to the memory of Francis J. Townshend, late of the United States Navy; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

HENRY HERMAN.

Mr. KELLEY also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 5619, a bill (H. R. No. 6741) for the relief of Henry Herman; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

TOBACCO FOR EXPORT.

Mr. CARLISLE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 5720) to amend section 3362 of the Revised Statutes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SILAS Q. HOWE.

Mr. CARLISLE. I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to ask that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 565, for the relief of Silas Q. Howe, surviving partner of William T. Pate & Co., and that the same be recommitted to the Committee on Ways and Means.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ABRAHAM BRAFMAN.

Mr. CARLISLE. I am also instructed to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 2943, entitled "A bill to relieve Abraham Brafman from a forfeiture under the internal-revenue laws," and that said bill and the papers relating thereto be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with directions to report upon the constitutional and legal questions involved in the proceedings and forfeiture complained of by the said Brafman.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order under this call to consider instructions to a committee. The Chair will, if the gentleman desires, ask the House to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from the further consideration of the bill referred to, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CARLISLE. That will be sufficient.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

JUDGMENTS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 3555) to amend and re-enact section 3220 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to provide for the payment of judgments obtained under it as judgments of the Court of Claims are now paid; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

J. AND R. H. PORTER.

Mr. PAYSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely the bill (S. No. 905) for the relief of J. and R. H. Porter; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHARLES A. PERRY & CO.

Mr. PAYSON, also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 955) to authorize the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Charles A. Perry & Co.; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

RIGHT OF WAY.

Mr. PAGE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 2374) granting to certain parties right of way over lands and waters of the United States; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

OBSTRUCTIONS OF NAVIGATION.

The third amendment was to increase the appropriation for improving the harbor at Great Sodus Bay, New York, from $20,000 to $30,000.

Mr. PAGE. I move to non-concur in that amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. It has been suggested to me that time will be saved and business will be facilitated if the committee will agree that the Clerk shall read the amendments in their order, and that they shall all be considered as non-concurred in, unless some member objects.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that course will be taken.

There was no objection.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments of the Senate down to and including amendment No. 14.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I think I must have misunderstood the agreement that was made by the committee. I supposed at the time the agreement was made that as long as the Clerk continued to read the amendments of the Senate without any objection being made they should be regarded as concurred in.

Mr. PAGE. No; non-concurred in.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. Then I misunderstood the agreement. I desire to ask that amendment No. 9 be concurred in.

Mr. PAGE. That will go to the committee of conference.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I want to move that it be concurred in.

Mr. PAGE. It is too late for that now.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I misunderstood the arrangement. I trust the amendment will be concurred in. It was left out of the original bill by an oversight. I will say but a word. The work is going on under a former appropriation, and it will all be lost unless an appropriation is made.

Mr. KETCHAM. You can go before the committee of conference.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I know I can go before the committee of conference, but I would rather have the amendment concurred in now.

Mr. PAGE. The object of the Committee on Commerce is to have all the amendments of the Senate non-concurred in so that they may all go to a conference.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will be taken on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] to concur in the ninth amendment of the Senate.

The ninth amendment of the Senate was to insert the following:

Improving Gowanus Bay: Continuing improvement, $30,000.

The motion to concur was not agreed to.

The Clerk continued the reading of the amendments and read amendment No. 17, to insert the following:

That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, in completing the surveys of a ship-canal to connect the Chesapeake and Delaware Bays; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to report to Congress which of the various routes surveyed will afford the greatest protection in case of war and the greatest facilities to commerce by cheapening the cost of transportation from the city of Baltimore to the Atlantic Ocean, together with the cost of said improvement and its approaches, and the annual cost of maintaining and operating said canal when constructed.

Mr. CARLISLE. I do not know what was the understanding in regard to the consideration of these amendments by the Committee of the Whole, because I happened to be out when the bill was taken up. It seems to me that in regard to so important a matter as the amendment just read, which looks to the inauguration of a work which may cost many millions of dollars, this House ought to give something more than a mere formal expression of its opinion; that we ought at least to have a vote upon the amendment and some explanation of it.

Mr. PAGE. Let me say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] that by unanimous consent it was agreed that all these amendments should be read, and if there was no objection they should be considered as non-concurred in without any formal vote being taken. But if the gentleman wants to move to concur, or desires to discuss any amendment he can do so.

Mr. CARLISLE. My objection to that is that such a course would be nothing more than a mere formal proceeding and would perhaps have no influence whatever with the conferees on the part of the House, if this bill should ever reach that stage. I think this amendment involves a matter of such vital importance, not only as to the probable cost of the work but as to the principle involved in it, that the House ought to express in some more emphatic manner its opinions upon its provisions. I therefore ask for a vote on it.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the arrangement a vote can be taken upon the question of non-concurrence.

Mr. PAGE. Let me understand what the gentleman from Kentucky desires. If it is his desire to get an expression of opinion for the conference committee when that committee shall be appointed, they can be instructed.

Mr. CARLISLE. We do not instruct conference committees.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that the gentleman from California has stated correctly the arrangement, but if any gentleman desires a vote on the question of non-concurrence in any amendment the vote will be taken.

Mr. CARLISLE. I think we should have a vote on this amendment.

Mr. PAGE. I move to non-concur in the amendment and that will bring the matter up before the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. When this bill is reported to the House, of course all these amendments will come up for consideration, and a separate vote can be called on any one of them. I therefore think that my friend from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] can have all that he desires by asking for a separate vote in the House upon this and upon some two or three other propositions upon which there will undoubtedly be a vote taken.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] does not seem to apprehend my purpose. It is very true that a vote can be taken in the House on each one of these amendments separately, but I apprehend that so soon as this bill shall be reported to the House the previous question will be called and ordered on all the amendments of the Senate.

My object now is to give to the friends of this proposed appropriation, if it has any on this floor, an opportunity to explain its merits so that we can vote intelligently upon it. I am quite sure that when we get into the House there will be no opportunity afforded whatever for discussion.

Mr. PAGE. I am perfectly willing that the Committee of the Whole should now agree that all these amendments should be considered as non-concurred in, with the exception of such as members may indicate they want a separate vote upon either in committee or in the House. I am willing that a separate vote may be had on this amendment in the House.

Mr. COX, of New York. Let this be considered as one of the amendments on which a separate vote shall be taken in the House.

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. CARLISLE. I say that if there is any gentleman on this floor who thinks that this provision should be incorporated in a river and harbor appropriation bill, he should now give his reasons for it, for we cannot discuss it in the House after the previous question has been called.

Mr. PAGE. I have no doubt that reasonable discussion will be allowed on any one of these propositions.

Mr. CARLISLE. My purpose, I will repeat, is to have something more than mere formal action on this amendment, under an agreement to consider it non-concurred in. If this proposition has any merit, if it has a proper place in this bill, my purpose now is to secure to its friends an opportunity to show what merit it has and why it ought to be included in the bill. But if it has no friends, if there is nobody here prepared or willing to speak for it, let us vote it down as we ought to do.

Mr. PAGE. There is no member of the Committee on Commerce who desires to speak for it, as I understand.

Mr. URNER. I am here as one member of the House in favor of this amendment; but I am not prepared to speak upon its merits at this time. My colleague, [Mr. HOBLITZELL,] who is a member of the Committee on Railroads and Canals, and who has had this proposition specially in his charge, is not now in his seat. Another of my colleagues [Mr. MCLANE] is absent on account of sickness. My other colleague [Mr. COVINGTON] seems also to be absent; and it is through his district that this survey is proposed to be made. I hope the Committee of the Whole will agree to pass over this amendment informally in order to allow my colleagues who are the particular friends of this proposition an opportunity to be heard. If this amendment be passed over so that it may come up at the heel of the bill, I think my colleagues will be here.

Mr. PAGE. Let me state in response to the gentleman from Maryland that I think his colleague, [Mr. MCLANE,] if here, would agree with the Committee on Commerce to non-concur in this amendment.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move that we pass it over.

Mr. PAGE. I hope not.

Mr. COX, of New York. I object to passing this over. The most that the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] can ask as a parliamentary proceeding is to non-concur; but my friend from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] desires to emphasize the non-concurrence and to have a vote in the House. Why not?

Mr. PAGE. I have no objection.

Mr. COX, of New York. There is nobody here to defend this.

[Cries of "Vote!" Vote!"]

The question being taken, the amendment was non-concurred in.

The Clerk continued to read the amendments under the agreement until the following was reached:

Forty-first amendment.

Insert as new paragraphs the following:

"Improving the Potomac River in the vicinity of Washington with reference to the improvement of navigation, the establishment of harbor lines, and the raising of the flats, under the direction of the Secretary of War, and in accordance with the plan and report made in compliance with the river and harbor act approved March 3, 1881, and the reports of the board of engineers made in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of December 13, 1881, $500,000.

"And it is hereby made the duty of the Attorney-General to examine all claims of title to the premises to be improved under this appropriation, and see that the rights of the Government in all respects are secured and protected; and if he deems it necessary he is authorized to cause a suit or suits in law or in equity to be instituted, in the name of the United States, in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, against any and all claimants of title under any patent which in his opinion was by mistake or was improperly or illegally issued for any part of the marshes or flats within the limits of the proposed improvement."

Mr. BOWMAN. I suppose this is the only chance to make a suggestion for the consideration of the committee of conference. I only wish to say that this amendment opens up the question of the principle to be adopted in regard to the improvement of the Potomac River—whether it shall be dredged out or filled up. I suppose this is not the place to offer an amendment, and therefore I will not do so; but I would suggest to the committee that the first clause should be amended so as to read:

Improvement of Potomac River in the vicinity of Washington with reference to the improvement of navigation, the establishment of harbor lines, and dredging out and removal of the flats under the direction of the Secretary of War, &c.

This amendment would open the question of the propriety of making a great open lake, instead of doing what the Senate amendment contemplates—filling up all those flats, saying nothing whatever, as the committee will observe, in reference to dredging, and making no provision for dredging.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The Clerk read as follows:

Forty-fourth amendment:

Insert as a new paragraph the following:

"Continuing the improvement of the Little Kanawha River, in West Virginia: To complete lock and dam, as estimated for by engineers, $31,000: Provided, That no part of this amount shall be expended until the Little Kanawha Improvement Company shall have filed with the Secretary of War, to be approved by him, its agreement not to charge, in any manner, any tolls for this improved navigation."

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to speak in any captious spirit upon this question. I desire, however, to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole for a moment to the pending amendment which, I think, must remove from the mind of every gentleman the objections which were urged here to the proposition for the improvement of the Little Kanawha. I refer especially to the proviso that—

No part of this amount shall be expended until the Little Kanawha Improvement Company shall have filed with the Secretary of War, to be approved by him, its agreement not to charge, in any manner, any tolls for this improved navigation.

This provision will make that part of the navigation of the river as free as that of any river in the United States.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. What is the proposition before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] to non-concur.

Mr. WILSON. I move to concur. This amendment of the Senate, I repeat, obviates the objections which were urged in this House to this appropriation. The locks and dams company below the proposed improvement will not be allowed to charge toll upon any commerce passing over that part of the river improved by the Government. This portion of the river is made, therefore, free.

I will not repeat what I have heretofore said about the value of the commerce of that river. I have already discussed that subject very fully. It is sufficient to say in one word that no river of its size in the United States sends out, I believe, more valuable commodities than does that Little Kanawha River.

Mr. DINGLEY. It provides that no tolls shall be charged for this improved navigation. Now, is there anything to prevent increase of tolls on the rest of the canal?

Mr. WILSON. They cannot charge any tolls on account of this improved navigation.

Mr. DINGLEY. But cannot they increase the tolls on the rest of the canal?

Mr. WILSON. They cannot charge a dollar of increase of tolls on account of the Government dam.

Mr. HORR. But it does not say that. If it did it would be all right. It says something else beside that.

Mr. WILSON. It is provided that no part of this amount shall be expended until the Little Kanawha Improvement Company shall have filed with the Secretary of War, to be approved by him, its agreement not to charge in any manner any tolls for this improved navigation. There is an agreement not to charge any toll for improved navigation.

Mr. HORR. It does not say that.

Mr. WILSON. To accommodate my captious friend from Michigan I will move to amend so that on any raft or boat passing through the Government dam no toll shall be charged.

Mr. HORR. On no part of the river.

Mr. WILSON. On no part of the river shall they charge additional for rafting or boating anything that passes down through this Government dam.

Mr. HORR. The best thing we can do is to disagree to this amendment; and if there is anything to be done let it be done in the conference committee, so as to put it in shape to mean exactly what the gentleman says it means. It is now indefinite and its indefiniteness is against the gentleman's construction.

Mr. PAGE. I move to non-concur.

The motion was agreed to, and the amendment was non-concurred in.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the amendments under the agreement until he came to the following:

Strike out "12" and insert "20," and insert a new paragraph; so it will read as follows:

"Improving Choctawhatchee River, Florida and Alabama: Continuing improvement up to Newton, Alabama, twenty thousand dollars. That twelve thousand dollars of this amount shall be expended for the improvement of the river above Geneva to Newton, Alabama, and two thousand dollars of the balance for the improvement of La Grange Bayou from its mouth up to the town of Freeport, Florida."

Mr. OATES. I move to concur in the sixty-second amendment, and I desire as part of my remarks to have read at the Clerk's desk the report of the engineer.

The Clerk read as follows:

IMPROVEMENT OF CHOCTAWHATCHEE RIVER, ALABAMA AND FLORIDA.

The examination of this river from its mouth to Geneva was made in 1872, and the project adopted for its improvement was to remove all such obstructions as rendered the navigation of the river difficult and dangerous at Geneva, Alabama.

During the year 1880 the examination of this river was extended to Newton, Alabama, a distance of about forty miles above Geneva, and the project adopted for the improvement of this section of the river is to make a channel for high-water navigation only, by the removal of snags, sunken logs, and overhanging trees.

The estimated cost of carrying out this project as far as Geneva is, as stated in my last year's report, $44,332. The estimated cost of carrying out the project from Geneva to Newton is $22,000. Total estimated cost is $66,332.

The following appropriations for this improvement have been made:

By act of Congress approved June 23, 1874	$5,000 00
By act of Congress approved March 3, 1875	5,000 00
By act of Congress approved August 14, 1876	5,000 00
By act of Congress approved March 3, 1879	5,000 00
By act of Congress approved June 14, 1880	7,000 00
By act of Congress approved March 3, 1881	10,000 00
Total appropriations	37,000 00
Total estimated cost	66,332 00
Total appropriations	37,000 00
Balance (estimated) required	29,332 00

The work accomplished under the appropriations for the improvement of this river, up to the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, is as follows:

The river was cleared of snags, stumps, overhanging and sunken trees, drifts, logs, brush, and willows for a distance of 140 miles; a number of sand and gravel bars were removed; a channel 30 feet wide, 3 feet deep, and 150 feet long was cut through a rock shoal about one mile above Cerro Gordo. The entire wrecks of the steamers Boston and Edward and half of that of the Eighth of January were removed.

The timbers and willows at a great number of points in the upper river were cut away, allowing the points to wash, thereby straightening the river. The river was made navigable for steamboats as far as Geneva during ordinary stages of water. The condition of the river on June 30, 1881, is such that steamers drawing four feet of water can ascend as far as Geneva with comparative safety.

Owing, however, to very short and sharp bends in the lower part of the river, and to the continual washing of banks, caused by the practice of driving loose timber and logs, thus forcing trees to fall in almost daily, considerable care must yet be exercised in navigating that portion of the river.

The progress made in the work during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, is as follows: Four months' time was consumed in removing such obstructions to navigation as had accumulated in that portion of the river previously worked over. The entire wreck of the steamer Edward, near Bear Pen Bluff, and one-half of that of the Eighth of January, about seven miles below Cerro Gordo, were removed.

A cut-off was opened through a narrow strip of land about three miles below Half-Moon Bluff; 1,377 snags, 151 stumps, 2,445 sunken trees, 10,283 overhanging trees, a large lot of willows, drift, and brush, and 252 cubic yards of sand and mud were removed.

The river for about one hundred and forty miles from the mouth up has not yet been thoroughly improved, as it offers a comparatively safe channel, with a depth of four feet at all stages of the river.

With one-half of the appropriation of $10,000, made by act of Congress approved March 3, 1881, it is proposed to remove, as far as the funds will permit, snags, stumps, and overhanging trees on that portion of the river between the mouth and Crawford Cut-off, a distance of about forty miles, and with the remaining half to remove some rock bowlders from a shoal about four miles south of Geneva, and to remove snags and trees from the river from Geneva to Newton, for high-water navigation only, as far as the funds will allow.

The appropriation asked for for fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, it is proposed to apply to the removal of snags, stumps, and logs at Cypress Top Bar, at the mouth of the river, and of such snags, stumps, and trees as may have settled in that portion of the river already worked over; to the cutting away and removal of a great number of trees along the river liable to wash in, from the mouth up to Geneva, the present head of steamboat navigation; to the entire removal of the wreck of the steamer Eighth of January; to cutting a channel through a rock shoal about four miles south of Geneva, and to the completion of a channel for high-water navigation from Geneva to Newton.

The nature of the banks of this river will not admit of a permanent improvement, and it will require an annual expenditure of $2,000 to keep navigation open.

The commerce of that portion of Florida and Alabama through which the Choctawhatchee and its tributaries flow was up to within the past year confined principally to the cutting and shipping of saw-logs and timber, the annual shipment thereof being about 20,000,000 cubic feet. Since the improvement of the river commenced, and especially during the past fiscal year, the number of timber and log camps along the river and creeks have more than doubled, and it is estimated that from fifty to sixty million of cubic feet were shipped down the river during last year.

Previous to the improvement the annual shipment of cotton down the river from Walton, Washington, and Holmes Counties, Florida, and Geneva County, Alabama, did not exceed 1,500 bales, from the fact that only very small steamers and light-draught barges could ply the river, and then only in high-water seasons.

During the past year, in consequence of the improvements made in the upper part of the river, four steamboats were placed on the line between Pensacola and Miller's Ferry, carrying cotton, guano, corn, oats, and general merchandise. Besides these steamboats there are employed on the river and Holmes Creek three schooners and five sloops, owned by parties living on the river and Holmes Creek.

During the past year there was carried down the river from Geneva and points on the river and Holmes Creek about 2,500 bales of cotton, 60 bales of wool, 1,000 barrels of sirup, 6,000 bushels of sweet-potatoes, and a large amount of country produce, and during the same period, up the river from Pensacola to Geneva and other points on the river and on Holmes Creek, 3,000 tons of guano, about 12,000 bushels of corn and oats, and a large amount of provisions, dry goods, farming implements, &c.

The following table shows the increase in commerce during fiscal year ending June 30, 1881:

Down the river:	1880.	1881.
Timber, &c	$1,500,000	$3,000,000
Cotton	75,000	125,000
Wool	2,000	7,000
Sirup	3,000	12,000
Potatoes	1,000	3,000
Miscellaneous	5,000	10,000
	1,586,000	3,157,000

Up the river:	1880.
Corn, oats, salt, &c	$4,500
Provisions, &c	100,000
Miscellaneous	50,000
	154,500

	1881.
Guano	$150,000
Corn, oats, &c	12,000
Provisions, &c	150,000
Miscellaneous	125,000
	437,000

The large increase in the yield of cotton by the use of guano will induce planters to use it more freely, and will bring into cultivation the pine-woods land heretofore considered worthless, and it is expected that the demand for this fertilizer during next fall will exceed 7,000 tons.

The increased commerce in timber, lumber, and saw-logs will also demand a corresponding increase in the supply of corn, oats, provisions, &c.

It is estimated by merchants and planters that in Washington, Holmes, and Geneva Counties about 15,000 bales of cotton will be made this fall, most of which will be shipped down the river.

The shipments of sirup, wool, and country produce will be largely increased, owing to better and safer facilities in transportation.

The commerce in the country along the Upper Choctawhatchee River, from Geneva to Newton, and above Newton, consists principally of cotton, corn, oats, and fruit, very little being done in the timber business. About 8,000 bales of cotton are annually shipped from Newton, and these, as well as necessary plantation supplies, have to be hauled to and from Chattahoochee, Eufaula, or Troy, a distance of from fifty to seventy miles.

No work having been done on the improvement of the river above Geneva, no increase in trade has taken place, but it is estimated that by improving the river for high water navigation to Newton, Newton will be the shipping point for a radius of country of from forty to fifty miles, and that from twenty-five to thirty thousand bales of cotton will be shipped from that county annually.

The supply of corn, provisions, guano, and plantation supplies, &c., will be proportionate to the number of bales of cotton raised. As a consequence of the improvement made during the last six years, and particularly so during the last working season, three steamboats and a barge were put in the trade between Pensacola and Geneva, and a steam-launch, a large barge, several schooners, sloops, and flats in the Holmes Valley trade.

Since the improvement of this river began, and more so during the last year of the work, there has been a marked increase in the commerce carried on between points on this river and Holmes Creek and Pensacola; in fact, it may be safely said that the commerce has increased tenfold in the last five years.

This work is situated in the collection district of Pensacola, Florida, and Pensacola is the nearest port of entry.

The amount of revenue collected at this port can only be given from December 1, 1880, to June 30, 1881, (the records prior to former date having been destroyed by fire;) said amount is $80,732.44 for the seven months.

Mr. PAGE. I do not care to discuss this question, but hope there will be non-concurrence and let the matter go to the committee.

Mr. OATES. There is an addition to the appropriation of $8,000, and $12,000 of the $20,000 appropriated is diverted from the original purpose to the improvement of the river above Geneva and $2,000 for the improvement of the La Grange Bayou from its mouth up to the town of Freeport, Florida.

Mr. BROWNE. Is this to remove the willows in order to have a channel?

Mr. OATES. It is already navigable, and this is only to remove obstructions. As will be seen, a greater portion of the appropriation is to be applied for the improvement of the river above Geneva some forty or fifty miles. The report of the engineers shows that river is perfectly navigable when overhanging trees are cut away and snags are removed from it. These people are now some seventy-five miles from any market.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

The amendments were non-concurred in.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments under the agreement until the following amendment was reached:

For continuing the improvement of the Cumberland River at Smith's Shoals, Kentucky, $25,000.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I move to concur in that amendment to show the reason why this comes as an amendment put on by the Senate instead of being allowed by our own committee in the House. The improvements of Smith's Shoals in the Cumberland River has been annually appropriated for as far back as 1876, when $25,000 was appropriated, as will be seen by volume 19, page 134, Statutes at Large.

In 1878, $30,000 was appropriated for this purpose, as will be seen by reference to volume 20, page 154. In 1879, $15,000 was appropriated, as may be seen, same volume, page 367. In 1880, $20,000 was appropriated, volume 21, page 187; and in 1881, $10,000, as will be found in this same volume, page 477. This work has been continued, and it is a very valuable work on these shoals, because they obstruct the entire navigation of the river. It was thought that the last $10,000 appropriated for the purpose would be sufficient to complete the work; but it was found, however, about two years ago that the original plans of the engineers, by whom the work was commenced under State auspices, were erroneous, that a mistake had been made, and the wing-dams had to be changed from one side of the river to the other. Therefore the $10,000 given the last time to complete the work failed to do it, and it requires a larger sum of money, as the report of the engineers shows. This supplemental report was made at a date too recent to enable it to be submitted to the Committee on Commerce when considering this bill, but it was laid before the Senate, and this allowance of $25,000, which is all that is required, is sufficient to complete the work. No more will be asked for. In the present aspect of the case, it seems to me that inasmuch as this is a small sum and all that will be asked for, and that it will complete the work, and in view of the large amounts already spent there, it will certainly be judicious to spend the small amount of money now necessary to render the river navigation complete at that point.

Mr. PAGE. In reply to the gentleman from Kentucky, I desire to say that this had better go to the committee of conference. The new report the committee has not had an opportunity of looking at; and we have no opportunity of examining it now. It has been printed to-day, I think, and has been sent to the committee of conference.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. If it be the desire of the gentleman from California that this matter should go to the conference committee, I will of course not insist upon the motion, and will submit it to the conference, satisfied that the conferees will do what is proper under the circumstances.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendments 74 and 75 were severally read and non-concurred in.

Amendment 76 was read, as follows:

And $3,000 of this appropriation, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended above Portage City to prevent the overflow of the Wisconsin River into the Upper Fox River, so as to prevent injury to the Government works on Fox River; and this expenditure may be made separately, or, if deemed more economical by the Secretary of War, in adding to any protecting works which may be made by the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. CASWELL. Unless it be the wish of the gentleman in charge of the bill to non-concur in all of these amendments I wish he would agree to concur in this one. It takes no money from the Treasury, but is simply a modification of the former appropriation, and is absolutely necessary to protect these works.

Mr. PAGE. The committee had no opportunity to examine this, and I think it had better go to the conference committee with the others. I have no doubt it will be concurred in on an examination.

Mr. CASWELL. If the gentleman prefers it, then I will withdraw the motion and let it be non-concurred in.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendments 77 and 78 were severally read and non-concurred in.

Amendment 79 was read, as follows:

Strike out the following words:

"And provided further, That the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the land so to be taken during the time the same may be used for the purpose herein stated."

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me from the reading of that amendment that it ought to be concurred in. I move to concur.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not put the committee in a false position by accepting an amendment without having had an opportunity for considering it. None of these amendments have been considered by the Committee on Commerce, and the committee, of course, would be held responsible for this if there should be any mistake.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well; I will withdraw the motion.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendment numbered 80 was read, as follows:

That the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the construction of a dry-dock at the Des Moines Rapids Canal, on the Mississippi River, at such site as may be selected thereon by the Secretary of War; said dry-dock to be used for the construction, examination, repairing, and use of boats, dredges, barges, scows, and other vessels of the United States, and the construction, examination, and repair of vessels for private parties, under such regulations and for such compensation as may, from time to time, be fixed and regulated by the Secretary of War; this appropriation to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. CARLISLE. I think the attention of the committee ought to be called to the character of this amendment in some decided manner, and I therefore move to non-concur in it. It provides an appropriation of $30,000 for the construction of a dry-dock; and this dock is to be used for the construction, examination, repair, &c., of boats, dredges, &c., belonging either to the Government of the United States or to private parties. Congress is therefore called upon by this amendment to make an appropriation of the public money for the construction of works to be used in repairing or constructing vessels for private parties in competition with private individuals engaged in that character of business.

It seems to me that this is a most extraordinary character of business for the Government of the United States to engage in, and the committee ought in some way to emphasize its non-concurrence in this amendment, so that the committee of conference may understand exactly the sense of the House upon it.

There is no end of the business that the Government of the United States may legitimately engage in if we carry into execution such a provision of law as this. It may go into the manufacture of woolen goods or of cotton goods or of iron or steel or anything else that Congress may choose to select for it in competition with manufacturers throughout the country. The next amendment, numbered 81, is of the same character——

Mr. BROWNE. Only worse.

Mr. CARLISLE. Only, as my friend from Indiana suggests, a little worse. I ask, therefore, for a separate vote upon this proposition.

Mr. McCOID. This amendment is supported by a recommendation of the engineer in charge of the Des Moines Rapids Canal. It is supported by a recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, General Wright.

Mr. CARLISLE. Does the Chief of Engineers go out of his way to recommend to the Congress of the United States a special appropriation of money for the construction of works for the repair of vessels belonging to private individuals?

Mr. McCOID. I will come to that in a moment. It is recommended by the Secretary of War. This is necessary for the Government vessels, the vessels that are used in dredging the canal and the river there, and this clause to which my friend from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] objects is but an incident added on that the Government may under regulations of the Secretary of War—which may be prohibitory or may allow it under certain circumstances—may do the same work for private parties at charges he may regulate. That is all. It is but an incident as a matter of economy; nothing else. It is not a general work of that kind at all which is authorized. It is not to compete with any private enterprises. There is not any, in fact, for it to compete with. There is none in the river.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is the difficulty, I am afraid, and that is the cause of the clamor for the construction of this by the Government.

Mr. McCOID. There is not any clamor whatever. There is not anything of that kind. Private parties did at one time ask permission to put a dry-dock on the river to do this work for the Government and others on this canal; but the engineers in charge reported against it as not good policy for the Government to do that and as being far preferable for the Government to put a little bit of money into a dock there and do their own repairing for the necessary work on the river, and save the inconvenience and probably the danger of having private parties interfere with the canal.

Mr. CARLISLE. If the gentleman is through I wish to say a word.

Mr. McCOID. I am not quite through. I wish to add there is nothing in the objection as to repairs being made for private parties. That is only an incident that may be necessary for economy and convenience.

Mr. McMILLIN. Economy? Whom will it benefit?

Mr. McCOID. It will benefit the Government. The Government, while repairing its own vessels and making its own repairs on the river, can do this incidental work and get back enough in charges, as a matter of economy, to pay the expenses of its own repairs; and you certainly would not forbid that incidental work when the Government was not employed on its own work. This is to be done under the regulation of the Secretary of War; and that is all there is in that part of the amendment.

Mr. GODSHALK. I think it is rather a singular proposition for the Government to be asked to go into this private boat-building business. This bill in itself will be a wonderful curiosity after a while when you come to look at it calmly and dispassionately. You will find the Government have already undertaken to do a great deal of unnecessary work. They have undertaken to go upon the little streams of the country never thought of in the olden times when this matter of public improvements of rivers and harbors was first commenced. Now we have a board of engineers who are called upon to visit all the little streams of the country, and if they possibly can find a job anywhere that some private individual may think will benefit him and which calls for an expenditure of public money in the district it is all right. I think this is a most monstrous proposition, and I have no doubt the committee will vote it down.

Mr. CARLISLE. If the time for debate is not exhausted, I desire simply to say, in response to the gentleman from Iowa, that while he asserts the construction and repair of vessels for private parties is intended to be a mere incident he will certainly find if such an appropriation is made and such a policy as this is inaugurated the incident may become far more important than the principal subject itself. I venture to say there are a hundred vessels belonging to private parties on these waters where there is one belonging to the Government. To make an appropriation of $30,000 ostensibly to construct and repair the Government dredge-boats, but at the same time to confer authority to construct and repair vessels for private individuals, is simply in substance, disguise it as you may, an attempt on the part of the Government to engage in this kind of business in opposition to private individuals. It is not a legitimate business for the Government to engage in, and we ought to stop it now at the very threshold.

Mr. McCOID. I only attempted to answer the objection which is made. But I am willing the committee should non-concur, that the amendment may go to the committee of conference with the rest.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The eighty-first amendment was non-concurred in.

The eighty-second amendment was read, as follows:

In line 978, strike out "$800,000" and insert "$900,000;" so that it will read: "Improving Missouri River from its mouth to Sioux City, Iowa, $900,000."

Mr. CARPENTER. I move to concur in the Senate amendment. This is a proposition to increase the amount appropriated for the improvement of the Missouri River from $800,000 to $900,000. Until within a few years, Mr. Chairman, the Missouri River has been regarded as being uncontrollable even by science. Its treacherous banks, its treacherous currents, and treacherous channel have been thought to be uncontrollable entirely. But within the last three or four years it has been found that the Missouri River is capable of control by the same principle on which the Mississippi River is now being improved. It has been recommended by the Mississippi River commission that by a system of screens and mattresses the currents of the river can be made to build up new banks. The Senate amendment makes this appropriation just what Major Suter, the engineer in charge of the works upon the Mississippi River, has recommended, $1,000,000. His recommendation is found in his report in the following words:

The following is the estimate of the cost of improving the Missouri River, from its mouth to Sioux City, Iowa, a distance of 781 miles. If carried out on a large scale and with liberal appropriations, it will probably not exceed $10,000 per mile. This would put the cost of the whole 781 miles at $7,810,000, and from Kansas City to the mouth of the river, $3,750,000. With due regard to economy, this amount can be expended at the rate of $1,000,000 per annum. At this rate the whole improvement would require eight years for completion, or from Kansas City to the mouth, four years. The benefits attendant on such an improvement can hardly be overestimated.

In view of these facts, this being exactly what has been recommended by Major Suter, the chief engineer in charge of these works, I move that the amendment be concurred in.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the amendment will not be concurred in and that this appropriation will be treated as all the others.

The question being taken on Mr. CARPENTER's motion, it was not agreed to.

So the amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the amendments of the Senate and read the ninety-fifth amendment, which was to increase the appropriation for improving Cocheco River, New Hampshire, from $10,000 to $28,000.

Mr. BRIGGS. I hope the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] will allow that amendment to be concurred in.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the gentleman will not take up time in discussing it; it ought to go to the committee of conference.

Mr. BRIGGS. I move to concur in the amendment. It seems to me that this House is just as capable of settling some things that are perfectly obvious to everybody as can be any committee of conference. This amendment is to increase the appropriation so as to complete the improvement in the Cocheco River. The work has been carried on there for some time, improving the channel, which is somewhat in the form of a letter S. For the smaller craft it is abundantly large enough to admit them to pass through without any danger; but the larger class of vessels, in turning the curves in the channel, are sometimes swept upon the rocks. It is a very urgent and a very important improvement, and one which ought to be completed at once. I hope the Committee of the Whole will vote to concur in this amendment of the Senate and end the question here. I am the more anxious about this matter for the reason that it is in the district of my colleague, [Mr. HALL,] who is now necessarily absent from the session of the House, and I speak in his behalf.

The question was taken upon the motion to concur in the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading and read the ninety-seventh amendment, as follows:

In line 1111 of the printed bill insert the words "of which amount the sum of $10,000 may be expended in improving the East Neebish Channel;" so that the paragraph will read:

"Improving the Hay Lake Channel of the Sault Sainte Marie River, via the Middle Neebish, $200,000, of which amount the sum of $10,000 may be expended in improving the East Neebish Channel."

Mr. HUBBELL. I hope that amendment will be concurred in. It was an oversight that it was not presented to the Committee on Commerce of the House. It does not increase the appropriation, but merely diverts a portion of it for the improvement of the East Neebish Channel.

Mr. PAGE. I hope this will go to the committee of conference. The committee has not time to examine it at all or to ascertain the facts.

Mr. HUBBELL. I state the facts.

Mr. PAGE. There is no reason why this amendment should not take the same course as the others.

Mr. HUBBELL. I want to state briefly the reasons for this amendment. An appropriation was made in the original bill for improving the Hay Lake Channel of the Sault Sainte Marie River. I did not know at the time but what the work on the East Neebish division was completed. After the bill was reported to the House the engineer wrote me that there was needed $10,000 to complete the work on the East Neebish division. I took his communication to Senator CONGER, who had this amendment inserted in the bill. I hope it will be concurred in.

The question was taken upon the motion to concur, and it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the ninety-eighth amendment, to insert the following:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to survey and locate a canal from a point on the Illinois River at or near the town of Hennepin, by the most practicable and convenient route, to the Mississippi River at or above the city of Rock Island, with a branch canal or feeder from the most practicable and convenient point on Rock River to the most practicable and convenient point on the main line of said canal. Said canal and said branch shall not be less than seventy feet wide at the water-line, and not less than seven feet in depth of water, with locks not less than one hundred and fifty feet in length and twenty-one feet in width, and with a capacity for vessels of at least two hundred and eighty tons burden; and for that purpose the Secretary of War shall have power and authority, by engineers and agents employed by him, to enter upon any lands for the purpose of making the necessary preliminary examinations and surveys; and the cost of construction, the annual cost of maintenance, and economy of use of said canal, when completed, shall be estimated and accompany the said surveys; and the Secretary of War shall cause to be made by skillful engineers of the Army a survey of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, connecting the Illinois River with Lake Michigan at Chicago, and estimates of the cost of enlarging the same so as to correspond in dimensions with the proposed canal between Hennepin and the Mississippi River, and to report to the next session of Congress the cost of enlarging said canal, and the construction of the canal between Hennepin and the Mississippi River and the right of way therefor; and for the purpose of securing the early construction of an ample water-way for all purposes of commerce between the Mississippi River at or near Rock Island and the lake at Chicago; and for the purposes of this paragraph the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. PAGE. I move to non-concur in that amendment.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I desire to be heard on the amendment.

Mr. PAGE. Is the gentleman opposed to non-concurrence?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I am not opposed to non-concurrence, but I want it done in such a way that the House will put in the most emphatic manner its seal of disapprobation on these wild and extravagant schemes unauthorized by the Constitution.

It is here proposed to appropriate $100,000 for a purpose which has been to my knowledge ascertained for the last forty years in the State of Illinois. The archives of that State are full of estimates by the ablest engineers that this country has ever produced as to the cost of the very project which is suggested by this amendment.

In 18 7 it was proposed that the State of Illinois should do just what this amendment proposes to do, to deepen and widen the Illinois and Michigan Canal. The proposition was submitted to the Legislature of the State of Illinois and it then refused, with such men as Lincoln, Douglas, and Browning in the councils of the State, to change the width and depth of the Illinois and Michigan Canal as originally constructed. No engineering skill can furnish more accurate estimates of the work proposed than that furnished to the Legislature of Illinois in 1836–'37 by the able and distinguished engineer of the State, Major Bucklin. I have not new access to his report, but as this question is sprung anew upon the House by the Senate amendment we are now considering, I am compelled to speak wholly upon personal recollection. The plan recommended by Governor Duncan of increasing the capacity of the Illinois and Michigan Canal so as to pass steamboats from the rivers to the lakes was thoroughly considered, ably discussed, and finally condemned as a wasteful expenditure of money that could bring no profit to the State or advantage to the people.

The steamboats of the rivers could not live upon the waters of the lakes and the vessels of the lakes could not find sufficient water to float them in the rivers; hence the project was abandoned as an impracticable vision. So far as the so-called Hennepin Canal project is concerned, the verdict of the State of Illinois is to be found in the solemn words of its constitution recorded against it. There can be no object in getting further information upon the subject; it has annoyed the State for years, until the clamor was silenced by a constitutional inhibition; and now, by a pertinacity that is without parallel, the subject is thrust upon this House with the reckless temerity of the Senate amendment to this, the river and harbor bill, to which it is not germane or properly connected. If estimates of the costs of this project are desirable they can be furnished by the State of Illinois, without the extravagant and inexplicable appropriation proposed. The river and harbor bill is necessarily broad, generous, and general in its appropriations, in order to avoid that discrimination in favor of the ports of one State against the ports of another, so expressly prohibited by the Constitution.

If Congress enters upon such a system of improvement as is here proposed, we must look to the obligation which the Constitution imposes upon every one who has a seat on this floor. It is provided in the Constitution of the United States that by no regulation of commerce shall the ports of one State be preferred to the ports of another. Now, if you enter upon this wild and illimitable project, must you not hereafter, when called upon by other States and other localities where such a water communication is at all desirable or practicable—must you not, in order to comply fairly with the obligation which the spirit of the Constitution imposes upon you, continue this system until every port in the country has been supplied with a canal at the expense of the Government of the United States which sets up a claim for such a means of communication?

If, as the friends of this measure contend, it is for the purpose of regulating the cost of transportation by railroads, why not build a railroad for that purpose in order to give free transportation to the patrons of this measure? A railroad with double track would not cost one-tenth part of what this proposed free canal would cost, and would carry ten times as much in the course of the year. If railroad charges are to be regulated by Government competition and free transportation, railroads by the Government for such purpose is certainly the quickest and easiest mode of bankrupting railroad corporations, and ultimately the people. Free transportation by rail or water furnished by the Government can have no successful competitor.

Who doubts that a canal made free would not get patronage? But how would a free canal regulate the cost of railroad transportation, I ask you? Can railroads afford to carry freight for nothing? Could they come in competition with a free canal, free railroad, or free river equipped and operated at the expense of the Government of the United States? Could this canal carry all the freight that would be offered? No, sir; it would carry so small a part as not to affect the price of transportation of the great Western country whose products are seeking Northern or Eastern markets or ports for reshipment to markets beyond the sea.

Now, the amendment is an insidious proposition. At first view we would suppose it intended simply to give to the Secretary of War the power to inquire as to the expediency of such a mode of transportation, while in fact it practically authorizes him to locate this canal and its branches and to report to Congress not only such location but the ultimate cost of construction.

You all know that it would not take $100,000 or even $10,000 to make a preliminary examination. Such an examination has been made over and over again; and the estimates upon the same are to be found at the capital of Illinois. So far as the Illinois and Michigan Canal is concerned, reliable estimates were made over forty years ago; yes, sir, in 1821, in 1825, in 1826, in 1828. In 1837 the estimate was again made by one of the most distinguished engineers this country has ever produced. These estimates are accessible. Why should Congress now appropriate $100,000 to obtain information which can be supplied for nothing?

I implore the friends of legitimate improvements not to let the grand and important work upon which Congress has entered with so much resolution and earnestness to be weighted down by favor, combination, or sectional influence or interest. It is far better for the friends and advocates of a legitimate system of improvement to suffer present defeat in the consistency of maintaining correct principles than to triumph temporarily in local and general objects worthy of their support by a sacrifice of conscience and constitutional obligation which will bring the highest merit into popular scorn, and make a wise system of river and harbor improvements odious to the people by reason of the unnatural features of sectional interest ingrafted upon a worthy constitutional measure by the persistent importunities of perverse advocates.

Let the natural water-courses, navigable streams, or such streams as may, by removing obstructions, be made navigable first engage the attention and receive the aid of the Government. When they are perfected according to their natural advantages and made the handmaids of commerce, we may then, if necessary, amend the Constitution so as to authorize such artificial waters as the interest of trade and inter-communication may justify or demand. I ask nothing for myself or my constituents that is not supported by its own merit, nor will I concede to others what judgment and sound policy condemn.

The Mississippi and the Illinois Rivers are national in the contemplation of the Constitution. While the one runs through many States, the other is confined to the State of Illinois, but is not for this reason the less national than the other. It is as navigable as the Mississippi, and only subject to the same natural obstructions, which it is the duty of the Government to remove in both, and make them alike, what they were designed by nature to be, arteries of commerce and mediums of intercourse between the people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to reply at any length to the remarks of my colleague and friend from Illinois, [Mr. SINGLETON.] I am certainly willing that this amendment shall take the same course which other Senate amendments are taking, and that the motion to non-concur in this amendment may share the fate of all others, inasmuch as the friends of this bill seem disposed to insist upon non-concurrence as to all Senate amendments. But I cannot permit my colleague to make the statements which he has made without some sort of reply. So far as regards all these surveys to which he has referred, I will say that they were, with some few exceptions, made long before the Illinois and Michigan Canal itself was built, and were made of that canal and no other.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I call my colleague's attention to the survey that was reported to the Legislature of Illinois, upon the recommendation of Governor Duncan, in 1836–'37.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, sir; but the Illinois and Michigan Canal was completed in 1847, ten years afterward. [Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, rose.] I have but five minutes, and my colleague must excuse me. I think I may with propriety state that in the Senate the other day this whole question was discussed at considerable length. It seems that the Senate was not satisfied with regard to the surveys which had been made of this proposed canal from Hennepin to Rock Island, and also the proposition to enlarge the Illinois and Michigan Canal. And hence this amendment, which simply provides for a survey and report.

So far as the amendment is concerned, I will say that no proposition in this bill is of greater interest to millions of people in this country than the proposition to build this canal; and it is a very small concession to be made to from five to ten millions of people who are demanding and will demand some measure of this kind to simply provide for a survey and report. There is nothing in this amendment by which the Senate or the House will be committed. It is simply proposed to have a survey and examination made of this proposed canal by competent authority and a report of the same made to Congress. This House ought not to refuse to do this, because, I repeat, it is a slight concession to the people of the Northwest who are so deeply interested in this measure.

But I am willing the amendment shall be non-concurred in for the present; and when the time comes I will discuss with my colleague and other opponents the merits of this measure. But it is hardly proper, it seems to me, at this time to enter into any discussion of the question, when the disposition is to non-concur in all the amendments without discussion, and I may say without regard to the merits of the amendments. The Legislature of our State, I will remind my colleague, has unanimously requested the Representatives from that State and instructed the Senators to vote for this canal.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Yes; in violation of the constitution, which forbids the State lending its credit to such a project.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let me say that in 1848 a convention was held at the city of Chicago in which that distinguished statesman, Thomas H. Benton, expressly recommended that the enlargement of the Illinois Canal should be undertaken as a great national work in the interest of the commerce of this country.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Mr. Chairman, I am not willing to allow this vote to be taken in a manner which would indicate my acquiescence in this proposed scheme. It is the first time that a project of this kind has been incorporated in the river and harbor bill, and I hope that the representatives of the people in this House will give it such an emphatic condemnation that it will never show its head again.

Mr. Chairman, the members of this House are called upon to vote as though we had a Treasury which could not be emptied. It is but a short time since many of the cities and States of this country were voting away public money in the same reckless manner. Repudiation has in many cases been the consequence. If we open the door to schemes of this kind there is not money enough in the country to carry out all the improvements of a similar character that would be started in the different States. It is not the business of the Government to engage in the building of canals; and we ought not to give our sanction to this plan by voting one dollar for the proposed survey. Let us attend to our legitimate business and endeavor to keep expenses down rather than to increase them.

The bill under consideration proposes to make appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors. We should confine the appropriation within these limits, and even if we do this we shall take from the Treasury a larger sum of money than the overburdened tax-payers ought to be called upon to contribute. Let us by our vote here to-day say that the power to improve rivers and harbors does not include the construction of canals. I regret that we have not time to debate the question fully now. We have information, however, sufficient to vote understandingly, and I hope we shall give such a vote as to show the people that this House as now constituted will not embark in an enterprise which in its accomplishment would require untold millions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to concur in the amendment. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York is unfortunate in his citation of constitutional authority in regard to this canal.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Oh, no.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understood the gentleman to say there was no authority in the Constitution for it.

Mr. ATKINS. And where do you find it?

Mr. HUTCHINS. I say that it is so absurd a proposition I do not suppose any one would claim there is authority under the Constitution for it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from New York says it is absurd. Now, Congress appropriated public land to the Illinois and Michigan Canal.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. In alternate sections?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; public lands in alternate sections for the purpose of building that canal. The State of Illinois acted as trustee for the Government in accepting the public lands and taking the proceeds of their sales for this purpose. It put the lands into money and expended the money in constructing this canal. The Government appropriation was sufficient to build the entire canal, with the exception of half a million of dollars.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. If the State of Illinois was acting, as my colleague has said, as the trustee of the Federal Government, who owned the canal?

Mr. SPRINGER. I undertake to say the State of Illinois holds it for the benefit of all persons concerned.

Mr. CARLISLE. The State of Illinois charges tolls.

Mr. SPRINGER. Only sufficient to pay the expense of operating it. It has never been contended we held it for any pecuniary profit. It has not been run with any such view.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. And it never can be.

Mr. SPRINGER. And the State never desired to reap a dollar of profit from this improvement, but to hold it in trust for the purpose of commerce. It has not been an expense to the State of Illinois, but has paid its way.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. Eight hundred thousand dollars of the net earnings of the Illinois and Michigan Canal have been appropriated by the State of Illinois to the improvement of the Illinois River.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is understood the canal instead of being a loss, that a part of its net earnings has been devoted to the improvement of the Illinois River below. It is a national work. It is not a State work. The General Government initiated it and carried it on by money arising from the proceeds of public lands devoted to that purpose. It is therefore too late now to say that the Government of the United States cannot initiate a work of this character.

Mr. McMILLIN. What authority condemns the land where the canal was constructed?

Mr. SPRINGER. The State of Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw my motion to concur and will let the vote be taken on non-concurrence. We do not wish to make an issue now on the question, but will do so at the proper time.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to concur for the purpose of asking a question. How many locks will it take to finish this work?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Twenty-eight.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. How wide?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Illinois, my colleague, [Mr. HENDERSON,] is more familiar with it, and will answer the gentleman. There are only some sixty miles of it yet to be built, from the Illinois River down to Hennepin, to connect with the Mississippi River at or near Rock Island.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. It is to be carried over the mountains, is it?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir; there are no mountains in my State.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. If there are no mountains, what use do you then have for twenty-eight locks?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is a very level plain, and we have no mountain ranges there at all.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Then I say what do want the locks for?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman has studied the resources of his country but to limited advantage if he does not know that Illinois is an immense grain field. No gentleman can hope to represent the people of this country properly unless he has visited the great State of Illinois.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. But what about these locks?

Mr. CARLISLE. I understand the gentleman from Illinois says that this is a plain and that there are no mountains. If this be so, I would like to ask why the engineer in his report states that it will require a "lift," as they call it, of ninety-two feet from Rock Island to Hennepin?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. No; to the summit, and two hundred feet on the other side.

Mr. CARLISLE. Yes.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentlemen would never distinguish by the eye from an observation of the country that there was the slightest difference in level.

Mr. CARLISLE. But there is by measurement in elevation, and if there is not, where are you going to get your water from to feed the canal?

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, we will take care of the water part.

Mr. CARLISLE. And we will take care of the money part.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he approves of all these land grants or of the moneys which have been donated to railroad companies?

Mr. SPRINGER. A great deal of money has been given to railroads; and the gentleman's question is rather a general one to deal with.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon the amendment.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. DWIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been withdrawn.

Mr. DWIGHT. Then I move to concur in the Senate amendment, with a view of being heard in opposition to the insidious amendment put upon the river and harbor bill, which means, if it means anything, to commit this Government to the making of the Hennepin Canal.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this question is very full of objections. It involves two principles and is very far-reaching in its results; and while I understand very well that the amendment is to be non-concurred in, and is to go, like all of the other Senate amendments, to the committee of conference, I again raise my feeble voice against this unwarranted, unnecessary, and vicious legislation.

Among the other things which I attempted to demonstrate when I discussed this subject here on the 5th of June was the fact that the day of building canals by the Government has passed, if wisdom is to be derived from experience. I grant, Mr. Chairman, that canals may still be useful. I have no doubt they will still be useful for many purposes. The great State of New York has had a large experience in the canal business, which will light the pathway, if properly studied, of all who may desire to engage or induce the Government to engage in the work of building canals. As is well known, I brought the attention of this House to a brief summary made from official reports on this subject when the discussion was had here last month.

In a carefully prepared speech made by my honorable friend from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] he said, in reply to some observations that I had made:

My friend from New York [Mr. DWIGHT] stated in his remarks that in 1880 the Erie Canal shipped from Buffalo 71,909,964 bushels of grain, and that in 1881 it shipped only 31,000,000 bushels; and this statement was made to show that the business of the Erie Canal was rapidly on the decline and that canals in New York were doomed to become useless.

The above paragraph states that the year 1881 was an exceptionally dull year. My friend should have known that one reason why the canal did not carry more grain in 1881 was not owing to a disuse of the canal but to a short crop. The secretary of the board of trade of Chicago, in his last annual report, estimates the deficit in the wheat crop of 1881 in Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Minnesota, and Iowa, as compared with that of 1880, as little, if anything, short of 100,000,000 bushels, and that is the reason why the canal did not carry the grain in 1881 it did in 1880.

Mr. Chairman, my friend does not apparently appreciate what I attempted to show, as I think I did show, that the railroads have become ruinous competitors to the carrying trade on the canals, so much so that it is folly in the extreme for this Government to undertake to make the Hennepin Canal. For the purpose of giving my friend the means of understanding that it is not in consequence of the loss of tonnage by the canals that has made them non-supporting, but that railroad competition has made it impossible for the canals to hold their tonnage unless their tolls are taken off, I therefore ask that the tables herewith submitted be published with my remarks, although I have once before published one of the statements:

The superintendent of public works of the State of New York submitted to the Legislature, December 28, 1881, the total tonnage of all the property on the canals, and the amount of tolls collected for the forty-four years preceding, as follows:

Year.	Tons.	Tolls.

The following statement will show the business of the canals and the two railways, and the aggregate movement for each year, beginning with 1876:

Year.	Tons moved by canals.	Tons moved by N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R.	Tons moved by Erie Railway.	Aggregate tons moved.
1876	4,172,129	6,803,680	5,972,818	16,948,627

The result of this competition on the Erie Canal has filled the authorities in charge of it with dismay. The auditor of the canal department thus sums up the situation in his report for 1881:

"An examination of the foregoing table"—

The table of rates on the canal for tolls from 1867 to 1881—

"will disclose some singular and almost unaccountable features in connection with tolls and transportation. During the period embraced in the first three years named in the table, when the tolls on wheat were nearly six and a quarter cents per bushel, the freight to the carrier netted $3.22 per ton.

"During the next period of five years, 1870 to 1874, with the tolls on wheat reduced to a fraction over three cents per bushel, the average net freight received by the carrier was $2.87 per ton. During the next period of two years, 1875 and 1876, with tolls on wheat reduced to two cents per bushel, the carrier realized an average of $1.76 per ton net, and during the last five years, 1877 to 1881, with tolls on wheat reduced to one cent per bushel, the net freight averaged $1.77 per ton. The average net freight for 1881 was $1.28 per ton.

"The financial results for the last fiscal year are the most discouraging and unsatisfactory of any year in the history of the canals. The revenues in the aggregate were lower than for any year since 1825, and for the first time in a period of fifty-six years they not only have failed to make any contribution to the sinking fund for the payment of the principal and interest of the canal debt, but in amount they were actually 20 per cent. below the cost of maintenance, or, as shown elsewhere in this report, the expenditures for collection, superintendence, and ordinary repairs exceeded the income by $205,642.45.

"If possible, the business of the boatmen has been even more discouraging. Notwithstanding all the efforts of the Legislature and the canal board to increase the volume of business by a partial remission of tolls, the earnings of the carrier have steadily declined, and during the last season were entirely unremunerative and doubtless below expenditures.

"Unless the equipments which the boatmen supply can be kept profitably employed there will be no new additions thereto, and those now in existence will be allowed to deteriorate and will soon become worthless.

"Without some radical and speedy change by which the canals can be maintained irrespective of their revenues, and the carrier placed in a better position to cope with the railways, they will soon be without means to operate them and without equipments to render them of service."

The shipment of grain over the canal in 1880 was 71,900,964 bushels. In 1881 it shrank to 31,151,761 bushels, a decrease of over 70 per cent. So evident is it in New York that canals are doomed to become useless that the Chemung Canal has been sold for a song to a railway company, its bank to be used for the roadbed of a railroad. The Chenango and Genesee Valley Canals have been abandoned, and the Oneida Lake Canal is no longer in use, and its abandonment is recommended by the authorities. (Report Superintendent Public Works, 1881, pages 7, 8.)

The report of the special committee of the senate of the State of New York, (made January 18, 1882,) to inquire and report relative to reducing the cost in the management of the canals, said, among other things, that "the season of 1881 has been most disastrous to our canal interests. The canal revenues have largely fallen off, a large number of boats have remained unemployed throughout the season, and boatmen who have engaged as carriers have been compelled to do so at losing rates. The committee is fully impressed with the conviction that unless steps are taken to cheapen the cost of transportation on our water routes the canals of this State must soon fall into disuse, and the benefits received by our citizens from canal commerce and its incidents be irretrievably lost."

It will be seen by the foregoing tables that the tonnage on the New York canals for the year 1881 was but 2 per cent. less than it averaged during the preceding five years. It will also be observed that the earnings averaged during the same period of five years prior to 1881 60 per cent. more than they were during the year 1881.

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, an examination of the same exhibit shows that the tonnage on the New York, Lake Erie, and Western Railroad was 55 per cent. more during the year 1881 than the average for the five preceding years, and that the increased tonnage on the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad was 40 per cent. more for the year 1881 than the average of the preceding five years.

I have no official data showing the result of the workings of the canals for this year, but I understand them to be still more unsatisfactory up to this date than they were last year.

My distinguished friend General HENDERSON said in his speech made here on this subject last month that the Erie Canal has paid into the treasury of the State of New York, over and above the cost of construction, repairs, and management, about $42,000,000. Now, if he confines himself to the Erie Canal alone I admit that, as I understand it, it has earned the State something like $40,000,000 more than it cost. But the gentleman does not tell the whole story that should be told. I have not the exact figures at hand to enable me to state them with exactness, but they are substantially as follows: The whole cost of the canals to the State of New York is about $127,000,000, and the total receipts have been something more than $85,000,000, leaving a balance of nearly $42,000,000, and more than $31,000,000 of that sum have been collected by taxes levied upon the people, and the balance is now owed by the State and is represented by the outstanding canal debt.

As an humble son of that great State I am proud of her people, their achievements and their history, in peace and in war. Her commerce, her agriculture, her manufactures, her culture, her enterprise, and all else that make a people great and prosperous have justly given her the position of the Empire State. I trust that I appreciate in the highest degree how much the system of canals which have been built and supported by her people, and clearly within the authority of the Constitution and law, has done to give New York the pre-eminence it enjoys. But, Mr. Chairman, the distinguished position won by our people and the great advantages they gained by building the Erie Canal came through toil and hardships of more than fifteen years' duration.

The State of New York was a densely timbered country in its native condition. The men of the second and third generation, whose ancestors felled and cleared the forest, and those reared in the cities and towns and upon the prairies, know little of the hardships and sacrifices required of those who first settle and make homes in a heavily timbered country.

The people residing in the interior of the State, and away from the rivers, were substantially without the advantages of a market if they chanced to raise more grain than their families required. The question, how shall it be marketed, was a very serious one.

Two highly respected citizens, residents of the town where I reside, Hon. Elias W. Cady, and Isaac Ferguson, esq., came into the town, then a wilderness, as I recollect their statements, which I have often heard them make, in the years 1815 to 1817. Their families were large and their means scanty. Hard work and rigid economy were the only conditions upon which they could subsist and make for themselves and families homes, and educate their children. It is my recollection that they paid about $10 an acre for the farms which they purchased and settled upon.

For eight or ten years after they settled upon their primitive homes they were obliged to draw the small amount of wheat they were able to raise to Albany, a distance of about two hundred miles, with their teams over corduroy roads common to such countries as that then was, and sell their product when they reached Albany for seventy cents to seventy-five cents per bushel, each trip so made taking three or four weeks' time, as they endeavored to bring back as much load as they could of groceries and other goods for the merchant with whom they traded. During or soon after the close of the late war of the rebellion another reputable citizen, Elisha Albright, esq., who settled in the same neighborhood at an early date, told me at the time he paid a tax on his farm of about $170.00 that he paid it much easier than he had at an early date paid a tax of $1.25 on the same property. He said he rode through the town industriously and tried diligently to borrow the $1.25 required to pay his annual tax, and that he was unable to obtain it until near the close of the third day he found a man who had a little money, but needed it to purchase some oats with. Mr. Albright sold him oats enough at eighteen cents per bushel to obtain the money required to pay his tax.

Another distinguished citizen, Captain Robertson, settled in the same town, and I think, at an earlier date than either of the three gentlemen named, raised considerable more grain than his family, which was also numerous, required. At times when grain was scarce people came to him from long distances with money to purchase his surplus. But he refused to sell to purchasers who had money to pay, saying to them that they had means to go and obtain it elsewhere, and that he must let his poor neighbors who needed all he had have it, as they had no money to go away from home to purchase with.

Such were the men who advised building the Erie Canal, and who have paid the taxes imposed for that purpose. Such men are required and must be had to found States and develop their resources. Of such men every community is always proud, and honors them.

But one of these early pioneers of Central New York (Mr. Cady) survives, and he is ninety years old. For the purpose of obtaining better facilities to market he has contributed $7,000 within the last fifteen years toward building a local railroad; and Mr. Ferguson, just before his decease, contributed $1,000 for the same purpose. The other two gentlemen named, one or both of them, deceased before the railroad referred to was built.

The people of New York have built by town subscriptions under a general bonding law of the State and by the aid of individual subscriptions numerous railroads within the past fifteen years, not expecting at the time they did it that they would realize much, if anything, for the subscriptions to the stock subscribed and paid for. Their reliance for the equivalent of such investments was in the increased facilities to market that were so obtained, and the consequent increase in the value of their property.

I do not think that I know of two towns among all that bonded where the roads were built, as nearly all of them were, and there are but few individuals who regret having made and paid such subscriptions; and yet I am compelled to admit that most of the roads so built have been sold on the mortgages given upon them, and very few of the stockholders have realized anything for their stock.

Since it has become apparent that the canals can no longer be self-supporting, the people of the State, through the two last Legislatures, in accordance with the provisions of the constitution, provided that the question of free canals shall be voted upon at the election to be held in November.

If the majority shall by their votes determine to so amend the constitution as to enable the Legislature to levy taxes upon the people for the future support of the canals, they will be so maintained and opened to the free use of all who may desire to navigate them.

Let this brief and hurried statement of what New York did in her poverty, without aid or encouragement from any quarter, be contrasted with the condition of Illinois and Iowa, who are the champions of the Hennepin Canal scheme: lands granted to Illinois for various purposes, 6,472,899.46 acres; to Iowa for various purposes, 7,094,704.80 acres. The Government either gave to the people of these States all of the balance of the lands within their borders by the homestead law, or sold them to their citizens for $1.25 per acre if outside of the railroad limits, or for $2.50 per acre if within the railroad limits.

It should be borne in mind that the lands were ready to plow the day they were entered upon and that the quality of the soil is equaled by few places in this or any other country. To illustrate with precision, I quote from a statement lately made here by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] from statistics that I believe are entirely reliable. Mr. HORR told us that the State of Illinois had 36,000 square miles of coal fields; that in some places her coal was piled up so that it aggregated a hundred feet in thickness. He further told us that Illinois raised last year 325,000,000 bushels of corn, 51,000,000 bushels of wheat, 63,000,000 bushels of oats, 1,250,000 bushels of barley, 3,000,000 bushels of rye, and 13,000,000 bushels of potatoes.

Great in production and mineral wealth as Illinois is, Iowa is scarcely second to her in its production and vast resources, including coal. Some years since I had the pleasure of visiting the farm of John Morris, esq., in Clinton County, Iowa. It contained, as I recollect it from memory, 1,365 acres of land. There was then growing upon it 450 acres of corn, a large acreage of wheat and oats, and also of timothy and clover. He had 250 steers, two and three years old, all of which were fit for the butcher's shambles. He also had about 20 cows and 650 swine, large and small. Mr. Morris is a foreigner by birth, capable, frugal, and industrious. I was told by reliable parties that he came to Iowa about twenty years previous to the time I saw him a poor man, with no means to purchase land, and he had therefore rented the farm on which he resided, and that he had accumulated then at least $75,000. Mr. Morris had acquired this sum in a new country in a comparatively brief time, and he is still in the prime and vigor of life.

The four gentlemen that I have named as the early pioneers of Central New York with large families to aid them (and large families in those days and in such a country were a guarantee of a great amount of work performed) never aggregated as much wealth as Mr. Morris has acquired. If either of the New York gentlemen named had been as fortunate in their location and opportunities as Mr. Morris, they would have become very wealthy and correspondingly useful citizens, for they were all his equals in all of the elements of real manhood and were leading men, and among the most prosperous in the community where they lived.

Illinois and Iowa are as fortunate in their facilities to market as they are in their productions and mineral resources. Chicago, the great city of the West, stands at the head of Lake Michigan, and has eighteen or twenty very important railroads entering there, six of which, the Illinois Central, Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, Chicago and Northwestern, Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul, Chicago and Alton, all of which run through Illinois and Iowa in such ways as to furnish those States with exceptionally good facilities for the transportation of their vast productions. It is well known that this Government practically gave Illinois her greatest railroad, and also donated to her 290,915 acres of her choicest land to aid her in the construction of the Illinois and Michigan Canal.

I will quote the following from the minority report of the Committee on Railroads and Canals, made to this House on the 13th day of April last, which will show what Illinois thinks by what she did:

> The Hennepin Canal has been probably more widely discussed than any like project for many years. If its construction would draw to it such an immense traffic, why is it that Illinois, with all its great capital, could not find private enterprise sufficient to build it? Capital, where controlled by private individuals, rarely fails to engage itself with any valuable project, especially if it be so valuable as this is said to be. Why did not the State of Illinois build it? Certainly no people knew its advantages better than those of that State, and yet in a constitutional convention held in that State in 1870, where the whole merits of the proposed canal were discussed, an amendment was proposed and carried by 49 ayes to 11 noes, prohibiting the State of Illinois, through its General Assembly, from ever voting to loan its credit to build this canal, and by a vote of 35 ayes to 25 noes prohibited the appropriation of a dollar for the purpose. This amendment, when submitted to the people for ratification, was carried by a vote of 142,540 ayes to 27,017 noes.

When we say to Illinois and Iowa, "If you desire a canal you should build it," we are met with the answer that the constitution of Illinois will not permit that State to engage in such a work. Let me say to the gentlemen who are so tender of the constitution of Illinois and so disregard the Constitution of the United States as to make the determined and persistent attempt which has been made here from the early commencement of this session of Congress by a strong lobby, by newspaper articles, and circulars furnished to members containing resolutions of interested State Legislatures and boards of trade, indicating a desire that Congress shall undertake a work that Illinois repudiated in 1870, as already shown by a constitutional inhibition. I have shown, Mr. Chairman, that New York makes her own internal improvements, and when she finds herself restrained from making what she may think needed appropriations by her constitution, she submits the question of amending it to the people, so that she may do such work as the majority may determine should be done.

I commend her example to Illinois and Iowa. Those States, as we have seen, are not paupers, and they possess the same power to amend their constitutions that New York does. If those States want cheaper transportation than they can now obtain, no one knows better than they do how to provide, either as States or by voluntary individual or corporate associations, the means to build new ways to secure the results desired. I have said, Mr. Chairman, that if the effort now being made here means anything it means to commit the Government to the building of the Hennepin Canal. I repeat that it means that, and much more.

Already the country has heard of the proposed Atlantic and Great Western Canal, the James River and Kanawha Canal, the Cumberland and Ohio River Canal, canals across the State of Michigan, canals across Florida, a canal from the Kentucky River to Savannah, Georgia, canals connecting Chesapeake and Delaware Bays; and should any of these be begun by the General Government how long would it be before dozens, perhaps hundreds, of visionary schemes of like character would spring up all over this vast country?

I will give the language of the Senate amendment to this alarming river and harbor bill entire, which is as follows:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to survey and locate a canal from a point on the Illinois River at or near the town of Hennepin, by the most practicable and convenient route, to the Mississippi River at or above the city of Rock Island, with a branch canal or feeder from the most practicable and convenient point on Rock River to the most practicable and convenient point on the main line of said canal. Said canal and said branch shall not be less than seventy feet wide at the water-line, and not less than seven feet in depth of water, with locks not less than one hundred and fifty feet in length and twenty-one feet in width, and with a capacity for vessels of at least two hundred and eighty tons burden; and for that purpose the Secretary of War shall have power and authority, by engineers and agents employed by him, to enter upon any lands for the purpose of making the necessary preliminary examinations and surveys; and the cost of construction, the annual cost of maintenance, and economy of use of said canal, when completed, shall be estimated and accompany the said surveys; and the Secretary of War shall cause to be made by skillful engineers of the Army a survey of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, connecting the Illinois River with Lake Michigan at Chicago, and estimates of the cost of enlarging the same so as to correspond in dimensions with the proposed canal between Hennepin and the Mississippi River, and to report to the next session of Congress the cost of enlarging said canal, and the construction of the canal between Hennepin and the Mississippi River and the right of way therefor; and for the purpose of securing the early construction of an ample water-way for all purposes of commerce between the Mississippi River at or near Rock Island and the lake at Chicago; and for the purposes of this paragraph the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

I will also quote what General HENDERSON says:

So far as the amendment is concerned, I will say that no proposition in this bill is of greater interest to millions of people in this country than the proposition to build this canal; and it is a very small concession to be made to from five to ten millions of people who are demanding and will demand some measure of this kind to simply provide for a survey and report. There is nothing in this amendment by which the Senate or the House will be committed. It is simply proposed to have a survey and examination made of this proposed canal by competent authority, and a report of the same made to Congress. This House ought not to refuse to do this, because, I repeat, it is a slight concession to the people of the Northwest, who are so deeply interested in this measure.

Let me ask my friend if making the survey and location by the Government will not be urged as a reason that Congress recognized not only its authority to build the canal but the necessity of its being done? Is it not presuming a good deal, in view of all the history of this case, to anticipate that the gentleman or any other friend of this scheme, will hereafter make such a speech as he has just made if the survey and location of the canal is once made by the Government?

I desire to call attention briefly to the remarks of the gentleman from the Springfield district, [Mr. SPRINGER,] who would apparently have the country believe that he is the faithful watch-dog over the Treasury, always guarding the public interest. He said:

Now, Congress appropriated public land to the Illinois and Michigan Canal.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. In alternate sections?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; public lands in alternate sections for the purpose of building that canal. The State of Illinois acted as trustee for the Government in accepting the public lands and taking the proceeds of their sales for this purpose. It put the lands into money, and expended the money in constructing this canal. The Government appropriation was sufficient to build the entire canal, with the exception of half a million of dollars.

I undertake to say the State of Illinois holds the Illinois and Michigan Canal for the benefit of all persons concerned, and the State never desired to reap a dollar of profit from this improvement, but to hold it in trust for the purpose of commerce. It has not been an expense to the State of Illinois, but has paid its way.

It is understood the canal instead of being a loss, that a part of its net earnings has been devoted to the improvement of the Illinois River below. It is a national work. It is not a State work. The General Government initiated it and carried it on by money arising from the proceeds of public lands devoted to that purpose. It is therefore too late now to say that the Government of the United States cannot initiate a work of this character.

Now, sir, as I understand the history of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, this Government donated public lands that were valuable to the State to aid it in constructing the canal, and that was all that the Government ever had to do with it. It was and is a purely State enterprise. It is just possible that there are those who have thought before on occasions that have occurred that my friend from Springfield was one of the kind of solicitous watch-dogs over the Treasury that never bark at or harm any of the family.

The population of Chicago to-day is more than thrice as great as it was in the city of New York when the Erie Canal was completed, and the State of Illinois has as large a population as all of the thirteen colonies contained when they were struggling for an independent nationality; and the State of Iowa contains more population than the State of New York did on the completion of her great Erie Canal.

But notwithstanding all their greatness in wealth and population, growth and prosperity, they are begging like mendicants and over-indulged and spoiled children for appropriations that they do not need and do not deserve, and cannot receive without great injustice being done to less favored States. It is a well-settled maxim that the Government should never render aid or undertake a work that can be done by the local authorities, and that the local authorities should not do the work that can be done by individual effort. It is also well understood that great extravagance and waste always characterize public work, and that it would be impossible for individuals to succeed unless frugality, economy, push, and industry, never known in the management of public affairs, were rigidly enforced.

The spirit of our people and judicious management of public affairs require the avoidance of sending a horde of Federal appointees within the jurisdiction of States, to take and condemn private property for canal purposes. I apprehend that we hardly appreciate how obnoxious this whole business will become to the country before the end of such evil will be finally reached if once entered upon.

The appointment of canal superintendents, canal commissioners, and appraisers of land and other damages by the President or Secretary of War, with all of the assistants that will be required, is a new departure. All such appointees must of course be politicians, and they would often be numerous and powerful enough to determine the result of elections in States which, as a result, might determine the result of Presidential elections.

If this can all be done by Federal authority, why railroads and wagon roads may not be built by the Federal Government to cheapen freights or otherwise accommodate private citizens I am unable to determine. There is what was once very good authority why State and private enterprises should not be undertaken by the Federal Government. I herewith submit some of it. Ex-Governor Colden, the historian of the Erie Canal, made so by the authorities of the city of New York, in his Memoir, page 47, Congressional Library, said on the 4th day of November, 1825, at the celebration of the completion of the canal: Notwithstanding the General Government had discovered that the Constitution of the United States would not allow it to give any countenance to an enterprise for internal improvement in the State of New York, and notwithstanding there was no reason to hope for any aid from our neighbors, the friends of the canals were not disheartened. In April, 1817, the act respecting the navigable communications between the great northern and western lakes and the Atlantic Ocean was passed by large majorities, both in the senate and assembly. It contained the important fiat which authorized the commencement of the canals:

[Copy of Mayor Paulding's letter on the occasion of celebrating completion of Erie Canal.]

CITY OF NEW YORK, MAYOR'S OFFICE, November 17, 1825.

SIR: Your letter in behalf of the committees deputed by our fellow-citizens of the West to join with us in celebrating the completion of the Erie Canal has been laid before the common council of the city, which has instructed me to acknowledge the receipt of your very friendly and flattering communication.

The internal line of communication now completed has more than ever identified the interests of our city with those of the West; and I trust that if there ever has subsisted a feeling of jealousy or rivalship between them, it will be lost in the practical exemplification of that intimate and palpable union of interests which is now become apparent in the consummation of the event we have just commemorated together.

It is hoped that the example of what has been done by the State of New York alone and unassisted may induce the sister States to rely upon their own vigor and resources for the completion of similar undertakings, rather than upon a doubtful construction of the constitution or the surrender of rights the loss of which may more than outweigh the benefits derived from their relinquishment.

WILLIAM PAULDING,
Mayor of the City of New York.

TO ALEXANDER COVENTRY, Esq.

The city of New York, through its officials selected to perform the duty of celebrating the completion of the Erie Canal, sent to the then surviving ex-Presidents Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, James Madison, John Quincy Adams, James Monroe, and also to Charles Carroll of Carrollton and General La Fayette gold medals commemorative of the event. Those very distinguished men all replied to the committee on receipt of the memorials sent them in terms appropriate, showing their high appreciation of the great work.

I copy entire the letter of Mr. Madison addressed by him to the committee:

MONTPELIER, May 31, 1826.

GENTLEMEN: I have duly received your letter of April 28, and with it a medal of gold commemorating the completion of the Erie Canal, presented in the name of the city of New York by order of the common council, the medal being accompanied by a box made of maple brought from the lake in the first canal-boat, the Seneca Chief.

I beg the corporation to be assured that I feel in its full extent the value of this testimonial of kind respect; and that no one can offer a more cordial tribute of congratulation than myself on the event commemorated, an event the more splendid when viewed in the contrast with occasions to which such emblems have been often dedicated.

As a monument of public spirit conducted by enlightened councils, as an example to other States worthy of emulating enterprise, and as itself a precious contribution to the happy result to our country of facilitated communication and intermingled interests, bringing nearer and binding faster the multiplying parts of the expanding whole, the canal which unites the great western lakes with the Atlantic Ocean is an achievement of which the State of New York may at all times be proud, and which well merited the homage so aptly paid to it by her great commercial metropolis.

Be pleased to accept, gentlemen, individually, the expression of my high respect and my best wishes.

JAMES MADISON.

R. RICHER, Esq.; JOHN AGNEW, Esq.; THO. BOLTON, Esq., and W. A. DAVIS, Esq.

It is quite time a halt should be called on new and wild enterprises and expenditures. I give a statement of the river and harbor appropriations for the following years, all correct, I believe, but the one for this year. That I give as near as it can now be ascertained:

Rivers and harbors: For 1877, $5,015,000; 1878, nothing; 1879, $8,201,700; 1880, $9,577,494.61; 1881, $8,929,500; 1882, $11,547,800; and 1883, $19,367,875.

I also give the whole amount of appropriations likely to be made by this session of Congress, as near as I have been able to learn it, $306,007,261.63.

Bad and objectionable as some of the appropriations are, such as improving private property by Federal appropriations, building public buildings where there are no courts and but few people, and never likely to be, I know of no one of them or any bill or proposition pending before this Congress as objectionable as the one which proposes to build the Hennepin Canal.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. DWIGHT] insist on his motion to concur?

Mr. DWIGHT. No, sir; I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] to non-concur in the ninety-eighth amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The amendments numbered 99, 100, and 101 were non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 102 was read, as follows:

On lines 1204 and 1205 strike out "commission" and insert "Secretary of War;" so that it will read: "That the Secretary of War is authorized to repair and build levees," &c.

Mr. KASSON. I hope that will be concurred in. The committee should understand that this gives a better security that the expenditure will be for the channel of the river and not for the reclamation of lands. It requires the concurrence of the Secretary of War with the commission to build the levees within the limitations proposed by the bill. I am sure the Committee on Commerce would not object; and we might as well concur at once, as it is a simple point of security to require the Secretary of War to concur with the commission.

Mr. PAGE. As this is an important matter, involving the whole appropriation for the Mississippi River, I think it just to the Committee on Commerce that they should have an opportunity to examine it before concurring. There are many of these amendments, I doubt not, which ought to be concurred in, and many perhaps which ought not to be concurred in. But it would not be fair to us to insist on concurring in any of these amendments without having had sufficient opportunity to examine them.

Mr. KASSON. This requires no investigation at all. It is a simple question whether we will give that additional security: first, the judgment of the commission as in the bill originally, and then the concurrence of the Secretary of War before the expenditure is made. I am sure the committee ought to concur in the amendment. No more need be said in its favor than to simply state the fact. I insist on the motion to concur.

The question being taken on Mr. KASSON's motion, there were—ayes 13, noes 38.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was non-concurred in.

The amendments of the Senate numbered 103 to 107 were non-concurred in.

Mr. PAGE. I will say to the committee that all the rest of the amendments to the end of the bill are in reference to surveys and contain no appropriations requiring any money to carry them out beyond what has been appropriated in the original bill. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that we non-concur in all of these amendments in reference to the surveys, and that the committee may then rise and report the bill to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks that the remainder of the amendments be non-concurred in. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the committee rise and report its action to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and habors, and for other purposes, and had directed him to recommend non-concurrence in all the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER proceeded to put the question on non-concurrence in the Senate amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to ask a separate vote on some of these propositions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman's request is made too late, as the House was dividing.

Mr. PAGE. If the gentleman has any proposition to offer I hope he will be permitted to do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want a separate vote on several of these propositions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that should have been demanded before the vote was taken.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is suggested to me that the House is not very full. I shall not, therefore, insist on my demand.

The SPEAKER. The "ayes" have it, and the House decides to non-concur in all the Senate amendments.

Mr. PAGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were non-concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. Would it be proper at this time to ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses?

Mr. CARLISLE. The Senate may recede from its amendments, and in that event no conference would be necessary.

The SPEAKER. A conference committee might be asked now, if such was the wish of the House.

Mr. KASSON. Except in the last moments of the session, where one of the Houses disagrees to the amendments of the other, the practice is, where, as in this case, the House is the body that disagrees, to notify the Senate that we have disagreed, and thereupon the Senate insists on its amendments and asks a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. That is the practice; but there are precedents for the course suggested by the gentleman from California.

Mr. PAGE. I do not make the motion to ask for a committee of conference.

JOHN M. HIGGINS.

Mr. NEAL. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3411) for the relief of John M. Higgins, and that it be brought before the House for present consideration.

The bill was read, as follows.

Be it enacted, &c., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby directed to audit and pay to John M. Higgins, late a lieutenant of Company A, Thirty-third Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, his accounts against the Government the same as if he had never been court-martialed and dismissed the service, but had been honorably discharged therefrom.

Mr. NEAL. I ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us hear the report, the right to object being reserved.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3411) for the relief of John M. Higgins, report as follows:

That the bill authorizes and directs the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to audit and pay to John M. Higgins, late a lieutenant of Company A, Thirty-third Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, his accounts against the Government the same as if he had never been court-martialed and dismissed the service, but had been honorably discharged therefrom.

It appears from the proof submitted that this officer was mustered into service as second lieutenant, Company A, Thirty-third Ohio Volunteers, August 27, 1861, and is reported promoted to first lieutenant, same company and regiment, May 9, 1862; that he was tried by general court-martial and sentenced to be dismissed the service for absence without leave, with loss of all pay and allowances, which sentence was promulgated in General Orders No. 86, April 20, 1863, Department of the Cumberland; that application was made to the War Department in 1871 for such relief as could be granted in the case, and, thereupon, by direction of the President, the disability resulting from the dismissal was removed January 26, 1871.

The removal of the disability consequent upon the sentence did not operate to restore to Lieutenant Higgins the pay forfeited by the dismissal, but simply declared him qualified to re-enter the service in the future.

It is submitted that the nature of the offense and the severity of the sentence are such as appeal, certainly after this lapse of time, to the sense of justice in any impartial tribunal.

Your committee, therefore, in view of the foregoing statement of facts, report in favor of the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Who represents this case?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] called up the bill.

Mr. NEAL. The bill is reported by the Committee on War Claims. This was a young man only twenty years old at the time of the offense. He acted in ignorance of the rules, and was court-martialed.

Mr. MCMILLIN. How was it that he did not know the rules?

Mr. NEAL. He was a boy only twenty years of age. He was wounded so that he had to go away. I hope the gentleman will not object. It is a simple act of justice to pass this bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not object, but I give notice that after this is disposed of I will demand the regular order.

Mr. RANDALL. And I give notice that I will then move that the House adjourn.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NEAL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. UPSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time the bill (S. No. 1620) to authorize the construction of a street-railway and wagon-road bridge over the Rio Grande River between the city of El Paso, Texas, and Paso del Norte, Mexico.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be regarded as having been read a first and second time.

Mr. POUND. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. POUND. I do not know that I have any objections to this bill, but I do object to the consideration by unanimous consent either of this or any other proposition unless the same privilege may be extended equally to members throughout this Chamber.

Mr. UPSON. I have been trying for two months and a half to get this little bill passed.

Mr. POUND. I again desire to renew the suggestion that there may be thirty minutes devoted to the consideration of business by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must object unconditionally.

Mr. BAYNE. Cannot the gentleman ask that thirty minutes be given for the consideration of business by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes that more than that time will be given by agreement of the House.

Mr. POUND. I shall object to this bill unless that proposition is agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Then I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. We might as well devote a few minutes to these propositions for unanimous consent.

Mr. POUND. I again submit my proposition.

The SPEAKER. But a motion to adjourn is pending.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. POUND] if he withdraws his objection to the consideration of the bill last read?

Mr. POUND. I will not unless my proposition is adopted, so as to give fair play to all the members of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to upon a division—ayes 36, noes 53.

Mr. KASSON. I now ask that at this stage of the day's session one hour be allowed for the consideration by unanimous consent of various little matters.

Mr. HATCH. The bill of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. UPSON] to be first considered.

Mr. KASSON. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON?]

Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. HUTCHINS, and others objected.

Mr. McMILLIN. I now demand the regular order. I think that in order to do justice to all sides of the House the gentleman from Texas [Mr. UPSON] should have an opportunity to bring up his bill, as one upon the other side of the House has been considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman need not occupy time talking about propositions that are not pending. The Chair has recognized a gentleman on either side of the House, and if objection is made to the proposition which either gentleman submits the Chair has nothing to do with that.

Mr. POUND. In a matter of courtesy there should not be two sides of the House.

The SPEAKER. Where objection is made to a proposition the Chair cannot entertain it.

Mr. LORD. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time Senate joint resolution No. 17, relating to the refunding of certain internal-revenue taxes illegally assessed against and collected from the Detroit House of Correction, in the State of Michigan. I have here the report of the House committee on the subject, which I ask may be read.

Mr. HATCH. I object to that until the gentleman from Texas [Mr. UPSON] has been allowed to have his bill considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Texas was recognized, but objection being made to the consideration of the bill which he desired to call up, that put an end to the power of the Chair in the matter.

Mr. LORD. I will give way to the gentleman from Texas with great pleasure.

Mr. HATCH. I recognize the fairness of the Chair; I want that distinctly understood. But I want to state that gentlemen on the other side object to every bill on this side, although their side has been recognized.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again submit to the House whether objection is made to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1620, to authorize the construction of a street-railway and wagon-road bridge over the Rio Grande River, called up by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POUND. I am obliged to object, unless my proposition is agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Then I insist upon my motion that the House now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion to adjourn, leave of absence was granted, by unanimous consent, to Mr. LADD, for ten days, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: The joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of Louisiana concerning the late disastrous floods in the Mississippi Valley, and praying for aid from Congress—to the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River.

By Mr. SAMUEL S. COX: The petition of Edward S. Brockham, and others, citizens of Otsego, New York, for reduction of taxation—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DOWD: The petition of W. A. Graham and others, for the establishment of a mail-route in the State of North Carolina—to the Committee on the Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HUTCHINS: The petition of Snow & Burgess and others, for the appointment of a commission to ascertain and report what measures are necessary to revive ship-building—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LACEY: Memorial of the Michigan State board of health, praying more liberal appropriations for the National Board of Health—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. PHELPS: Memorial of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, for the passage of bill to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between the United States and Europe—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. SPAULDING: The petition of the Michigan State board of health for an appropriation for the National Board of Health—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. OSCAR TURNER: The petition of C. H. Hubbard and others, of Kentucky, for the passage of the French spoliation-claims bill—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. VANCE: The petition of R. B. Vance, for the establishment of a post-route in the State of North Carolina—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WILLITS: Memorial of the Michigan State board of health, relating to contagious diseases—to the Committee on the Public Health.

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 17, 1882.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

ELIZABETH C. CUSTER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 1819) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Elizabeth C. Custer, which was, in line 3, to strike out "C," and insert "B," before "Custer," and to amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth B. Custer."

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate non-concur in that amendment, and I will state the circumstances.

The bill was amended in the Senate so as to make it read "a bill to increase the pension of Elizabeth C. Custer." When it went to the House the Representative from Michigan who had it in charge was of the impression that the lady's name was Elizabeth B. Custer, and he had the bill so amended in the House. The fact is that the lady has used each of the initials at different times, but she is drawing her present pension from the Pension Office by the name of Elizabeth C. Custer, and therefore the bill is right as it left the Senate. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senate ask for a committee of conference?

Mr. PLATT. When the bill is returned to the House, the House may recede from its amendment.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HARRIS. I present a petition of the Cotton Exchange of the city of Memphis, Tennessee, praying for the abolition of duties upon cotton-ties. I move that it lie upon the table, as the revenue bill is now before the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I present a petition of Rev. Charles W. Randall and 40 members of his congregation, together with a petition of 500 other citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the confirmation of the call for a peace congress in Washington, November 22, 1882. I move the reference of these petitions to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANSOM presented a memorial of 100 citizens of the fifth district of North Carolina, asking for a confirmation of the call for a peace congress; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1891) to re-examine the homestead claim of Ira Haworth, reported it without amendment.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1656) to enable corporations to become sureties on official bonds, reported it without amendment.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HAVERHILL.

Mr. ROLLINS. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2110) for the erection of a public building at Haverhill, Massachusetts, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to ask for the present consideration of that bill. They have had a very disastrous fire in that city, and it would be a great pleasure to the people there to have the bill passed at this time.

Mr. ROLLINS. Very well; I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices, at the city of Haverhill, in the State of Massachusetts. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $50,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than fifty feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Massachusetts shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owners thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $50,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended in the purchase of said site and the construction of said building.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLUMB asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2153) for the erection of a public building at Leavenworth, Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. LOGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2154) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRINTING AND DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing have compiled the acts, resolutions, and rules of the two Houses of Congress relating to the public printing, to engraving, and to the distribution of public documents, and that the same be printed, with 500 additional copies for the use of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer a resolution for reference to the Committee on Printing which I think covers the same points as the resolution just offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.]

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate at the beginning of the next session of Congress a tabulated statement showing the number of public documents printed by order of the Forty-fifth, Forth-sixth, and Forty-seventh Congresses, and the number of public documents appertaining to said Congresses printed in compliance with provisions of previously existing statutes, and the distribution directed to be made of the same, together with a compilation of all laws permanent or continuous in their nature governing the printing and distribution of the publications of the Government.

PENSION CASES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour is closed, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar under the Anthony rule.

Mr. PLATT. I ask the Senate to lay aside for the present the Anthony rule in order to proceed to consider the pension cases on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can have them considered under the Anthony rule.

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the pension cases which have been reported favorably by the committee may be considered under the Anthony rule. I do not think they will take a great while, and if at the close of such consideration the Senate desires to go on with cases where there are majority and minority reports I shall have no objection. I will leave that to the Senate to say; but I think we ought to pass upon the cases which have been favorably considered by the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. Unobjected cases.

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask the Senator if he proposes to call up the bill to prevent the payment of double pensions, which occupied so much of the time during the last day's session of the Senate?

Mr. PLATT. I shall not call that up this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate take up the pension cases on the Calendar?

Mr. INGALLS. Does the morning hour continue until two o'clock?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does by the rule. The rule says it shall continue until two o'clock. That is the order of the Senate. The unobjected pension cases will be considered, and then the Senate will determine in regard to bills on which there are majority and minority reports.

SARAH HAYNE.

Mr. PLATT. When the pension cases were under consideration last a bill was passed over on my suggestion, as I desired to look at the amendment proposed. I ask the Senate to consider first the bill (S. No. 70) granting a pension to Sarah Hayne.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That bill is first in order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 70) granting a pension to Sarah Hayne, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment to add:

And to pay her a pension at the rate of $16 per month, to date from his death.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is granting arrears of pension by special act.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] I think desires to make an explanation of the amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. Let the report in the case be read. It is short. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that the husband of this applicant died less than a year ago in this city.

Mr. COCKRELL. That does not vary the principle.

Mr. BLAIR. The husband received a pension by special act for, I think, about two months only, at the rate of $50, when he died. He died after a prolonged sickness. His funeral expenses are unpaid to-day. His family, consisting of a wife and two dependent daughters, have been turned upon the street, their furniture has been sold, and the bills are unpaid. If this amendment is allowed to become a part of the bill it is possible that the arrears, dating back less than a year, will pay the funeral expenses and the doctor's bills, and give the widow a chance to start even with the pension which we grant to her. Let the report be read.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR on the 1st instant:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 70) granting a pension to Sarah Hayne, widow of Michael Hayne, having considered the same, report as follows:

Michael Hayne was a wealthy and prominent citizen of Maryland, who enlisted as a seaman in the service of the United States, and performed duty as such, (and also in the capacity of an officer, although never commissioned, on account of disability which occasioned his premature discharge,) on board the United States ships Ontario, Allegany, and Brandywine, during the late war.

Two of his sons entered the land service and gave their lives to the country.

Throughout the war the wife and daughters of Mr. Hayne devoted their home and means to the cause of the Union, and at its close the father was crippled for life, the sons were dead, and the survivors reduced to complete poverty.

A photograph taken during the war is produced before the committee, which represents the father in an officer's uniform on the deck of his vessel, surrounded by the men under his command, also in uniform. The father is said to have exhibited unusual gallantry while in the service. Admiral Porter testifies in strong terms to his bravery and patriotism.

The family, being in destitution, came to this city, where they have since resided, an unmarried daughter, of unusual intelligence and capacity, having given the most diligent and self-sacrificing effort night and day to the support of her parents. By special act of Congress the father was pensioned above his rank at the rate of $50 a month. He died last year from disabilities contracted in the service, having been in receipt of his pension only about six months. His widow survives, at the age of about seventy-five years, in broken health and incapable of work of any description. For a long time they had rented rooms in this city, which were furnished with such remaining articles as they had been able to save from the era of their better fortunes. Death found them without money, and the expenses of the last sickness and burial are still unpaid. The sheriff has sold out their furniture and turned them upon the street while they were begging for a pension. The daughter has been hunting for work all winter, and found none. If employment was found, a constitution broken down by hardship already endured unfits her for active exertion. The mother cannot live long. There are two younger unmarried sisters; but while others find work around the Departments, these friendless girls, whose natural protectors have put their lives into the preservation of the country, beg around the Departments for work, but utterly fail. This is a shame, but the committee cannot help it. The committee recommend the passage of the bill so amended as to give to the widow of Michael Hayne a pension of $16 a month for the remainder of her natural life.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS. I did not note from the reading of the Chief Clerk the date at which the pension would commence.

Mr. BLAIR. Something less than a year ago.

The Acting Secretary read from the report as follows:

He died last year from disabilities contracted in the service, having been in receipt of his pension only about six months.

Mr. PLATT. I asked that the bill might go over the other day, because I could not think the committee had understood fully the nature of the amendment. I am sure for one that I did not understand that an amendment was to be proposed dating back this pension to the death of the officer. If that amendment is insisted upon, I shall have to ask that the bill be recommitted to the committee, because I believe there is no instance yet where Congress in a special act has authorized a pension to commence before the passage of the act. Whatever circumstances there may be in this case enlisting our sympathy, I do not think we ought in any case to date a special pension back of the time of the passage of the act.

If the amendment is insisted upon by the Senator from New Hampshire who reported the bill, I shall ask to have it recommitted to the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. Which I hope will be done.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill was considered in the committee. The amount per month was certainly——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire has spoken once on the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Yes, sir; and I desire to speak again.

Mr. PLATT. I made a suggestion to the Senator from New Hampshire as to whether he insisted on the amendment. If he does, I desire to make the motion which I indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from New Hampshire insists on the amendment, and a motion is made to recommit the bill, he can speak on that motion.

Mr. BLAIR. There is no such motion made, and I do not think there will be any occasion for it. I wish to say that the matter was——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it the pleasure of the Senate that the Senator from New Hampshire shall have the floor for another five minutes? The Senator will proceed, there being no objection. These bills are being considered under the Anthony rule, and the five minutes' limitation as to debate is in force.

Mr. BLAIR. The amendment was considered by the committee so far as the amount per month is concerned, and I supposed the entire amendment was understood by the committee. I recollect that the fact that the doctor's bill and the funeral expenses were still unpaid was discussed by the committee. I do not remember whether the amendment was specifically mentioned and agreed to by the committee that the pension should commence from the date of the death, which was only a few months ago, and during nearly all of which time the mother has been urging the passage of a bill for her relief, which has been neglected for many months, and it was only brought up recently.

I do not of course undertake to say anything as to the universal understanding of the committee, and I do not want to delay or endanger the passage of the bill. I would like to get as much good and as much justice for the mother as I can. When the chairman of the committee suggested that he did not understand the pension was to commence from the death of the husband, I said to him if there was any misunderstanding in regard to that I wished merely to let the report be read to the Senate, and let them understand distinctly that the committee did not agree to the amendment so far as the date of the commencement of the pension was concerned, and then let the Senate act.

If the Senate is opposed to this little pittance which, as I said before, will give this woman a chance to pay the arrearages growing out of the sickness and burial of her husband, so that she will not have to save the accruing pension for the next year in order to pay what is now upon her by reason of the decease of her husband; if the Senate is not willing to give her this, let the bill pass with the amendment suggested that it take effect from and after the passage of the act. But it does seem to me that upon a statement of the circumstances of this case the Senate should be willing to allow the pension to date from the death of the husband.

Mr. JACKSON. As a member of the committee, I certainly never understood that the pension was to relate back. I concur with what has been stated by the chairman of the committee, that the bill had better be recommitted if the amendment is to be insisted upon. We never agreed upon that amendment in committee.

Mr. PLATT. In view of what the gentleman from New Hampshire has said, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "to date from his death" and inserting in lieu thereof "to date from the passage of this act." The question will first be taken on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BETTY TAYLOR DANDRIDGE.

Mr. PLATT. The next case on the list is the bill (H. R. No. 4719) granting a pension to Betty Taylor Dandridge, which was passed on Friday and which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] moved to reconsider. As the Senator from Alabama is not in I ask to have the bill passed over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MARY WADE.

Mr. PLATT. The next in order is the bill (H. R. No. 1422) granting a pension to Mary Wade.

Mr. BLAIR. As the Senator who reported the bill [Mr. MITCHELL] is not present, I suggest that it be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Oh, no; let us take it up now.

Mr. BLAIR. I withdraw my suggestion.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HARRIS. As this bill opens the Pension Office to an entirely new class of pensioners, the number of which I have not the remotest idea of, I simply ask for the yeas and nays on its passage.

Mr. BLAIR. It ought to be said in regard to this case that the girl was in a house occupied by sharp-shooters of the Union Army within the Union lines, who were isolated from the remainder of the Army. These men were within about four hundred yards of the sharp-shooters of the enemy, and were confined to the house unable to effect a successful sally. They practically impressed the mother and the daughter, as their services were necessary to furnish food for the officers and soldiers who were thus engaged in the house. While thus engaged, while in the act of cooking food for those who were in the occupancy of the building, the daughter received a fatal wound.

Mr. HARRIS. If my memory is not greatly at fault from listening to the reading of the report a few days ago, no such fact appears in that report as impressment. On the contrary, the fact does appear that it was the voluntary act of the young lady to bake bread; that she did not know whether it would or would not be applied for by the soldiers, saying that the bread would be, if prepared, very nice for the boys. If a pension is to be extended to this party by reason of that service, there are 100,000 ladies in the United States to-day who have performed voluntary services just as meritorious and deserving of recognition by the Government as the services performed by this lady, as shown by the report. If it is the pleasure of the Senate to open the pension-roll to that class of persons, I shall not object further than to record my vote against it; but the Senate ought to do so knowingly, if it proposes to do so at all.

Mr. BLAIR. The report shows this—I read it because I think the Senate will on listening to it realize that my assertion was correct:

The said Mary A. Wade in a subsequent affidavit says:

"She is poor and owns no property whatever, real or personal, except a little furniture, not exceeding in value $40. She further states under oath that her daughter, who was killed as above stated, was a tailoress by trade and with her assistance your affiant was barely able to make a living."

In a later affidavit the said Mary A. Wade swears as follows:

"She says further that the making of the bread was begun at the request of the soldiers there, who at that time were unable to go out of the house for fear of being shot by rebel sharpshooters who were not over three hundred or four hundred yards away. * * * That she had not before furnished any during that day, and had not received any pay or demanded any within her hearing or to her knowledge for anything done by her for Union soldiers. * * * We gave them nearly all we had to eat without asking or thinking of reward."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senate give consent that the Senator from New Hampshire shall proceed?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Let us have a vote.

Mr. BLAIR. There is considerable more to the same effect.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. GARLAND. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 15, as follows:

YEAS—31.

Allison,	Ferry,	Mahone,	Sawyer,
Anthony,	Frye,	Miller of Cal.,	Sherman,
Blair,	Harrison,	Mitchell,	Van Wyck.
Call,	Hill of Colorado,	Morrill,	Vest,

So the bill was passed.

THE MORNING HOUR.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire for my own information and the information of the Senate, whether the change in the time of meeting changes the termination of the morning hour, or whether it goes on until two o'clock as before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It goes on until two o'clock by the rule unless the rule is changed.

Mr. MORRILL. I shall call for the regular order that would formerly be due at two o'clock, to-day at one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Anthony rule reads:

That at the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless, upon motion, the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of Bills and Resolutions, and continue such consideration until two o'clock.

Mr. MORRILL. I shall call for the regular order at one o'clock.

BILL POSTPONED INDEFINITELY.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask that the bill (S. No. 1600) authorizing recruits in the Army to purchase on credit certain articles necessary for their cleanliness and comfort, be taken up with a view to indefinitely postponing it. That bill was reported favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs, but it was regarded as urgent and placed by the Appropriations Committee on the Army appropriation bill. There is no necessity for it remaining longer on the Calendar. I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. H. F. PAGE of California, Mr. AMOS TOWNSEND of Ohio, and Mr. J. H. REAGAN of Texas, managers at the conference on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 2872) to increase the pension of James Hawthorne;

A bill (H. R. No. 1543) granting a pension to Albert O. Miller, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 1048) granting an increase of pension to Bernard Brady;

A bill (H. R. No. 2104) granting a pension to Mrs. Electa L. Baldwin;

A bill (H. R. No. 4082) granting a pension to Ellen Gillespie;

A bill (H. R. No. 5809) for the relief of Jacob Humble; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4166) to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts.

JACOB R. M'FARREN.

Mr. PLATT. The next pension bill is House bill No. 369.

The bill (H. R. No. 369) granting a pension to Jacob R. McFarren, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Jacob R. McFarren, late a private in Company F of the Eighty-sixth Regiment of Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID DARLING.

The bill (H. R. No. 3316) granting a pension to David Darling, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of David Darling, late of Company A, One hundred and forty-third Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATRICK SULLIVAN.

The bill (H. R. No. 1873) for the relief of Patrick Sullivan was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "28" and insert "24," and in line 7, after the word "infantry," to strike out:

For loss of left leg just below the knee, rendering him as helpless as though his limb were amputated above the knee, and also for rupture on the left side, which wholly incapacitate him for the performance of manual labor.

So as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension from eighteen to twenty-four dollars per month of Patrick Sullivan, late of Company K, Eighty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES F. ROSE.

The bill (H. R. No. 2127) granting a pension to James F. Rose was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James F. Rose, late a private in Company E, One hundred and seventy-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH T. DUBOIS.

The bill (H. R. No. 1102) granting a pension to Elizabeth T. Dubois was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth T. Dubois, widow of Theodore B. Dubois, late a volunteer acting lieutenant-commander in the naval service of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH SHEA.

The bill (S. No. 703) granting a pension to Sarah Shea was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Sarah Shea, widow of William Shea, late a private in Company A, Second Regiment United States Maryland Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DICEY BOBBITT.

The bill (H. R. No. 2481) for the relief of Dicey Bobbitt was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $8 per month, and to continue at that rate during her life, the name of Dicey Bobbitt, widow of Robert Bobbitt, deceased, who was a member of Captain Benjamin Cooley's company of Virginia Militia Cavalry in the war of 1812.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTHA WESTERVELT.

The bill (H. R. No. 1098) granting a pension to Martha Westervelt was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Martha Westervelt, mother of William Westervelt, formerly a private in Company K, Third New York Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SPEDIE B. EGGLESTON.

The bill (H. R. No. 5239) granting a pension to Mrs. Spedie B. Eggleston was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Spedie B. Eggleston, widow of Ai F. Eggleston, late a corporal of Company C, Sixth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JANE S. TAPLIN.

The bill (S. No. 1170) granting a pension to Jane S. Taplin was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, after the word "after," in line 8, to strike out "the death of said Private Osman B. Taplin" and insert "the passage of this act;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jane S. Taplin, mother of Osman B. Taplin, late a private in Company E, Second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, said pension to begin from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZA M. BASS.

The bill (H. R. No. 6008) to restore the name of Eliza M. Bass to the pension-roll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to restore to the pension-roll the name of Eliza M. Bass, of Fort Wayne, Indiana, widow of Sion S. Bass, late colonel of the Thirtieth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID T. STEPHENSON.

The bill (H. R. No. 3599) granting a pension to David T. Stephenson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of David T. Stephenson, who was employed in the Government service as watchman on the steamer Echo, and while so employed, on the 10th of December, 1864, had both legs shot off by a shell from the confederate army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. PLATT. I move to amend the bill by adding:

And to pay him the same pension as would be allowed to a private soldier for like disability.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ANN ELIZABETH RODGERS.

The bill (S. No. 1925) granting a pension to Ann Elizabeth Rodgers was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Ann Elizabeth Rodgers, widow of the late Rear-Admiral John Rodgers, at $50 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARDIE H. HELPER.

The bill (S. No. 1577) for the relief of Hardie H. Helper was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, before the word "rate," in line 9, to strike out "same;" and after the word "rate" insert "of $10;" and to strike out in lines 9, 10, and 11 the words:

That other totally disabled soldiers are paid under the general pension laws; and that said pension shall take effect from January 1, 1870.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now let the bill as amended be read.

The Acting Secretary read the bill as amended, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hardie H. Helper, who was disabled while on special duty, under the command of General A. E. Burnside, in the war of the late rebellion, and pay him a pension at the rate of $10 per month.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to add "from and after the passage of this act."

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection, but the amendment is not necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMANDA J. M'FADDEN.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have the authority of the Committee on Pensions——

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Indiana listen to me for a moment?

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I promised to call up the case of Mrs. Dandridge, in which a motion to reconsider was entered, as soon as the unobjected cases had been passed. I omitted to make the motion at first because the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] was not in his seat. That bill was under discussion the other day, and I think it had better be taken up and disposed of now. Then I shall have no objection to make to any motion that may be made by other Senators.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought I had an understanding with the chairman that the case of the Mitchell raiders should be taken up first, but I will wait.

Mr. PLATT. The Dandridge case was up when we adjourned the other day, and I proposed to call it up the first thing to-day, but I did not do so because the Senator from Alabama was not in his seat.

Mr. VOORHEES. The case I wish to call up will take but a moment. I have additional evidence which will obviate any difficulty. I should be glad if the Senator from Connecticut would allow me to dispose of it, as it will lead to no discussion. I shall be much obliged to the chairman if he will allow me to dispose of the case. I have the testimony here. I do not think it will lead to any discussion. I will co-operate with him in anything he wants done after that.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection whatever except that I was under an obligation to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to call up the case I refer to as soon as the unobjected cases had been disposed of.

Mr. VOORHEES. This will not take five minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate take up the bill indicated by the Senator from Indiana? The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 864) granting a pension to Amanda J. McFadden. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Amanda J. McFadden, widow of George McFadden, deceased, who received a pension up to his death on account of service and wounds as a soldier of the United States in the Black Hawk war.

Mr. VOORHEES. The bill was reported adversely, and on my motion it was reconsidered and placed on the Calendar, with the assurance on my part that I would furnish additional testimony that would be satisfactory, and I understand that I have done so. I have conferred with several members of the committee who are satisfied that the case is proper. I desire to have read the medical certificate of Dr. Garnett in regard to this case. I need not say anything as to who Dr. Garnett is. He is well known to Senators.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 27, 1882.

MY DEAR SIR: In the case of Mrs. McFadden, submitted by you for my medical opinion, I regret to say that I find the medical evidence so meager that any professional judgment based upon that alone must necessarily be guarded and somewhat unsatisfactory. Proceeding, however, upon well-established and accepted medical facts, there seem to be good grounds for establishing the relation of cause and effect between the gunshot wound and the death of this man.

While the time occupied from the final healing of the wound to the death of the party embraced too long a period to ascribe such result to blood-poisoning, as usually manifested, it is a well-known fact that the impairment and ultimate breaking down of the organs of digestion, as occurred in this man's case, is often occasioned by aberrated innervation and the wear and tear of protracted bone disease, whether induced by a traumatic or idiopathic cause; it is, therefore, by no means inconsistent with sound pathology or the evidence here presented, so far as it goes, to attribute the disease of which he died to such a cause.

Very truly and respectfully,

A. Y. P. GARNETT, M. D.

Hon. D. W. VOORHEES, present.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that a communication from Dr. Kleinschmidt be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 27, 1882.

DEAR SIR: After a careful examination of the somewhat meager medical history of the case of McFadden, it appears to me that the cause of death as stated by D. Fox is at best conjectural. In fact I do not think that mere dyspepsia followed by death would justify the diagnosis of cancer of the stomach. It may, however, be supposed that the closing of a chronic ulceration may lead to serious and in the end fatal disturbances in one or other of the internal organs. Such instances are seen in the healing of fistula in ano lighting up pulmonary trouble. But the most rational views to take of the case are: First. That long-continued ulceration, especially when connected with bone disease, leads to a general impairment of the digestive organs, through deterioration of the blood. (Such cases are of every-day occurrence.) Second. That the chronic discharge at some period or other led to absorption of noxious, infectious material, and that this produced such changes in the coats of the stomach (by embolism) as to lead to ulceration.

Yours,

H. A. KLEINSCHMIDT, M. D.

Hon. VAN H. MANNING, M. C.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not wish to discuss this case.

Mr. PLATT. I will make a brief statement in relation to it, if I can get the attention of the Senate, which seems to be doubtful at present.

Mr. INGALLS. The bill appears to be very indistinct and obscure in its provisions. Will the Senator state when the pension would begin and what amount the beneficiary would receive?

Mr. VOORHEES. It only begins when it passes.

Mr. PLATT. I have not paid attention to the bill particularly, because it was reported adversely. The husband of the applicant was a soldier in the Black Hawk war, who was wounded in the leg and in the bone of the leg, which produced for many years a running sore, exfoliation of the bone. Afterward it became healed, and I think five years after the healing of the wound the soldier died, and the cause of his death is given as cancer in the stomach.

Mr. INGALLS. He died in 1852.

Mr. PLATT. He died after the healing of the wound, and the cause of his death is given by medical testimony as cancer in the stomach. The case was rejected at the Pension Office.

Mr. INGALLS. When?

Mr. PLATT. I cannot say that.

Mr. INGALLS. I think in 1879, the report states.

Mr. PLATT. The report will show. The case was rejected at the Pension Office because there was no pathological connection between the wound and the disease of which the soldier died, cancer of the stomach, and on that ground it was reported against by the Committee on Pensions. The Senator from Indiana, insisting upon it that there might be a pathological connection between the wound and the disease of which the soldier died, has produced the evidence of Dr. Garnett and another doctor, Dr. Garnett saying that it is possible, and I do not know but probable, that such was the case, and the other physician impeaching the correctness of the statement of the soldier's death being due to cancer of the stomach, and attributing the death, as I understood from the reading of the letter, to blood poisoning substantially.

I said to the Senator from Indiana that under these circumstances I would make this statement, and I would leave the matter then to the judgment of the Senate to say whether the pension ought to be granted.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Connecticut. This is a case where a man was shot in the leg, and the report shows the bone was broken off and the leg shortened, and the wound continued a running wound nearly up to the time of death, when the wound closed. It had been running for years. The wound then closed, and soon after he went into a decline and died. Doctors differ as to exactly when and how that wound affected him; but the fact is that he had received a leg wound, and that it was a running sore for nearly twenty years, and that he had reasonably good health while it continued in that way, and when it closed up he soon died. In view of this, there is no more doubt in my mind of his having died from that wound than that he lived at all. He was a pensioner on the rolls of the Government up to his death, and this is simply an application on the part of his aged widow now, certainly the last years if not the last months of her life, to be allowed what the Government freely gave him during his lifetime, and I hope the Senate will pass this bill and let her have it.

Mr. PLATT. If the bill is to pass there ought to be an amendment, and I will suggest the following amendment: in line 4, after "pension-roll," to insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Mr. VOORHEES. Oh, yes; that is understood, of course; but I dislike to amend the bill on account of its having to go back to the House. If the Senator from Connecticut insists, however, it will have to be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I think we should also strike out at the close of the bill the words "who received a pension up to his death on account of service and wounds."

Mr. VOORHEES. That does not make any difference. It is a mere recital.

Mr. PLATT. Very well; I shall not move the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. This seems to me to be carrying the pension laws to a very great extent. Is there any one here prepared to say from any evidence before the Senate that this man came to his death from wounds received?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, sir; there is proof of it on Dr. Garnett's testimony. The Senator from Delaware is not the man who will impeach that testimony. Dr. Garnett says that on sound pathology the death may be traced to the wound.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I say that so far as the evidence is concerned I do not think there is sufficient evidence to warrant it. She is a very worthy woman no doubt; but will it not be drawn into precedent if we pass this bill? I shall interpose no objection further than my vote. I shall vote against it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have nothing further to say, then.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the bill be read as amended.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Amanda J. McFadden, widow of George McFadden, deceased, who received a pension up to his death on account of service and wounds as a soldier of the United States in the Black Hawk war.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BETTY TAYLOR DANDRIDGE.

Mr. PLATT. I ask now to take up the Dandridge case, which I spoke of a few minutes ago.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4719) granting a pension to Betty Taylor Dandridge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Alabama will withdraw his amendment to the pending bill and permit it to go through. I am in full sympathy with his amendment to grant to Mrs. Letitia Tyler Semple a pension. This lady, a daughter of President John Tyler, is well known to me and has been for many years. During the Presidency of her father, and after the death of her mother, she was the mistress of the White House, and the honors of that mansion were never performed with more grace, intelligence, and acceptability than during her administration. She now, within sight of that same building, lives upon the charity of Mr. Corcoran, penniless, except what is bestowed upon her. This should not be. This lady, venerable in her age and high character, and a splendid impersonation of every womanly virtue, of all that is beautiful in female character, has claims upon this Government which should be recognized at least to the extent of a pension which would relieve her from want. No more meritorious case can engage the attention of the Pensions Committee, and I hope that committee will not fail to report a relief bill at an early day.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I was induced to offer the amendment spoken of by the Senator from Texas at the request of some of the friends of Mrs. Semple. She is a lady entirely without any means of support and unfortunately has become blind in her efforts to procure a support. Her vision is so impaired that she cannot recognize her friends and is entirely an object of charity.

I endeavored to get an amendment on the bill when it was called up before in the Senate, and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] thought it might be an obstruction to the bill and the case went over. I was out of the Senate when the bill was called regularly a few days since, not thinking it was one of that class of cases to be taken up by common consent, for the reason that it was not in any sense a military pension. It is true that Mrs. Dandridge is the daughter of a very great general, General Taylor, and also is the widow of Major Bliss, a very gallant man; but neither General Taylor nor Major Bliss lost his life in the military service of the country, and I supposed the Senate would have no reluctance at all in putting this amendment on the bill. I believe this is the first precedent of the kind we have ever set in the Senate of the United States of pensioning the daughter of a President of the United States. I am not at all reluctant to pension both these ladies. I think they deserve it. I think the country would do well, notwithstanding the precedent, in granting them a pension.

This lady would I think feel aggrieved if she thought that any of her friends would be instrumental in preventing Mrs. Dandridge from getting a pension. She does not want to interfere with Mrs. Dandridge. I thought that when we brought this subject to the attention of the Senate we should meet with a universal response on all sides in favor of putting this lady upon an equal footing with the only daughter of President Taylor, Mrs. Semple being the only daughter of President Tyler, having no person in the world that she can look to for support except that grand old gentleman, Mr. Corcoran, who has done so much not only for the distressed people of the country, but for the country at large.

Under the suggestion of the Senator from Texas, however, inasmuch as I have already presented a bill and had it referred to the Committee on Pensions for Mrs. Semple's relief, I withdraw this motion to reconsider in the hope that the Committee on Pensions will give attention to the subject and report the bill as soon as they can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

WILSON W. BROWN AND OTHERS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move, in accordance with an understanding with the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, to take up the bill (H. R. No. 4444) granting pensions to William W. Brown and others, upon which there are two reports. I have no desire except to have the reports read, and let the Senate determine the matter. The bill embraces thirty or forty different pensions coming from different States, and I should like to have them disposed of. It is the case of what are called the Mitchell raiders.

Mr. BLAIR. Let the majority and minority reports be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on taking up the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Pending this I desire to call up the legislative, executive, and judicial conference report.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the bill be taken up and then I will have no objection to doing that.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I call up the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator present his report?

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report, which was read:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the disagreeing votes on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, having met, after free and full conference have been unable to agree.

WM. B. ALLISON,
HENRY L. DAWES,
HENRY G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. G. CANNON,
FRANK HISCOCK,
J. D. C. ATKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, that report apparently presents a general disagreement; but I will say to the Senate that the committee agreed upon nearly all the items of difference in the bill save and except the difference in reference to the question of salaries between the employés of the two Houses, and also with reference to the provisions of section 6 to be found on page 116 of the Senate print of the bill, and also with reference to the matter of the reports of the decisions of the Supreme Court, embracing four matters of difference.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the Senator mean by his first reference the salaries of employés of the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. The salaries of employés of the Senate. The House, it will be remembered, in the bill as originally reported from the Committee on Appropriations of the House, and as passed by the House, arranged a schedule of salaries for the employés of the Senate, as also a schedule of salaries for their own employés. The Senate Committee on Appropriations, the Senate concurring in that view, placed the salaries in the bill as now provided by law for the Senate employés. The House insisted that their original bill should be consented to by the Senate conferees, so that the question is again distinctly raised as to whether the Senate will allow the House of Representatives to arrange not only the salaries of its own employès but also to fix the numbers and salaries of the employés of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. The same old trouble.

Mr. ALLISON. It is the same old question that we have had from year to year for several years.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the Senator state specifically the items of difference between the two Houses on this question; that is, what the Senate demands and what the House refuses to agree to and insists upon as being inequitable or unjust between the two bodies.

Mr. ALLISON. The House of Representatives in the bill originally fixed the salaries of all our employés, reducing quite a number.

Mr. INGALLS. Which ones were reduced?

Mr. ALLISON. Quite a number; the secretary of the Vice-President, the messenger of the Vice-President, the clerk of printing records, eleven clerks in the Secretary's office, keeper of stationery, and assistant clerk of records, Sergeant-at-Arms, and the assistant doorkeepers, all our messengers, and so on——

Mr. INGALLS. What reductions were made in those salaries?

Mr. ALLISON. The messengers of the Senate were reduced to $1,200, and other reductions varying from $100 to $500 each.

Mr. INGALLS. From what figure as to messengers.

Mr. ALLISON. From $1,440, where they have stood for many years.

Mr. INGALLS. What do the House messengers get?

Mr. ALLISON. The House messengers receive $1,200, and an additional month's pay, which amounts, in all, to $1,300 per annum. I will come to that in a moment.

The Senate insists that it shall regulate the compensation of its own employés. But there is a great misapprehension existing with reference to the difference between the amount paid to the House employés and the amount paid to the Senate employés. A large number of House employés receive more than ours receive for the same class of service. Take, for example, the clerks who perform service at the desk. They receive $2,592 per annum in the Senate. The House employés for the same service receive $3,000 per annum, and an additional month's pay, or in all $3,250 per annum which has been accorded them now for some years. So that for the same service performed by the Senate clerks at the desk four of the House employés receive $3,250 per annum each, as compared with $2,592 here. So of a large number of other clerks and employés in the different branches of the service of the House. Some clerks to committees in the House receive a greater annual compensation than the clerks of our committees. So of a large number of employés, as for example, clerk to Committee on Ways and Means receives $2,708.33, clerk to Committee on Finance in the Senate receives $2,220 per annum; clerk to Committee on Appropriations of the House receives $2,708.33, same clerk in the Senate receives $2,500; postmaster of the House, $2,708.33; postmaster of the Senate, $2,100. The House compensation above, of course, includes the extra month's pay, but without this many of their salaries are considerably in excess of ours.

The House does not propose to change these salaries, which are above the compensation paid for like service in the Senate. We stand upon the general proposition which the Senate has stood by for many years, that we are the best judges of the proper compensation to be given to our employés, as also of the number of employés necessary to transact the business of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator passes from that point, I should like to ask him if it is not true, if he does not remember what I very distinctly remember, that this principle which he now states was asserted by the House of Representatives on a controversy with the Senate? The Senate at one time, when I was a member of the House, undertook to change the compensation of some of the employés of the House, and the House affirmed after quite a long difference that it was entitled to fix the compensation of its own employés, and the Senate yielded that principle to the House, and it became established in our legislative habits as the governing rule of the two Houses.

Mr. ALLISON. I remember that. It occurred some seven or eight years ago; and I think upon the legislative bill at the time there were seven conferences.

Mr. HOAR. Very many.

Mr. ALLISON. That was in 1875. The House then insisted upon its right to fix the compensation of its own employés, and the Senate for some time resisted that claim, and after six or seven conferences yielded to the House; and since that time, although the question has often recurred, the final decision has uniformly been in favor of the principle that each House should regulate this matter for itself and take the responsibility of this disposition.

I have had prepared a table showing that for the regular force of the House for its annual employés the amount paid annually is $228,475.01; for the Senate $187,127.32, or a difference of $41,347.71 in favor of the Senate for persons upon the annual roll. In this I do not include, of course, the employés who are not borne upon annual rolls. It is almost impossible for us to get at the number in the House from time to time. I was not able to do so this morning.

That there ought to be some reorganization and some re-examination and equalization of these salaries there is very little doubt, but we never can agree under the methods proposed by the House committee or by the House itself, namely, on these appropriation bills. The matter should be carefully considered by a joint committee raised for the purpose, and the result of the adjustment, as far as practicable, should be put into a separate act of Congress.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to say, before the Senator leaves this branch of the case, that some years ago, and not for the first time then, there was a difference of opinion between the two Houses respecting the compensation of their respective employés. After a very long discussion upon a committee of conference, of which I was a member—and I think the Senator from Iowa was also a member of it; and we had a session lasting some three or four weeks before our report was made, and it finally was accepted by both Houses—a rule was agreed upon which I think it is always safe to follow. This matter does not turn upon any question of constitutional power, or any attempt to deny anything like independence to each House; but it was settled then upon the broad and sensible ground of comity and mutual consideration, that it is obvious in common sense that the body that employs the officers and witnesses the performance of their duties is the best judge of the value of their services.

The forms of business of the two Houses are different. We have executive sessions, in which we impose upon officers duties unknown to the House of Representatives entirely. They have duties which they understand better than we, the value of which they can understand better than we, and we leave to them the proper discretion to decide upon the value of what has been done under their eye and their direction, and we abide by their judgment. This is common sense; it is mutual respect; it is the only proper way in which this question can be settled. If to-morrow the Senate desired to know what were the value of the services of clerks in the Departments, what number were properly required, I am very sure that no authority would weigh so highly with us as that of the head of the particular Department concerned and the officer who witnessed the services and assigned the duties.

This is all public business. There is no possible gain to the Senate as a body or to its members individually from the excessive payment of any clerk or set of clerks; but it is obvious, and I submit it to the good sense of the gentlemen in the other branch of Congress, that the House which assigns the duties, under whose view the clerks and officers are appointed, must naturally be the best judge not only of the manner in which their work is done but of what is fitting and proper compensation for it.

There has been a rule not adopted to the extent that I should wish to see it in the Senate, but one which the House has by an unbroken course of precedent agreed to, that where there has been exceptional faithful and valuable services performed by an officer he should be advanced because of fidelity and ability. I remember the very honorable case of our for a long time Chief Clerk, Mr. McDonald. He received a salary in advance of that paid to his successor because of his exceptional ability and his exceptional fidelity, running through some twenty-five years of service. It was a pleasure to the Senate to pass such a measure unanimously, and the House did not question it. Therefore I say there ought not to be, and I believe upon due reflection there will not be, any difficulty in allowing the discretion which is to control this question of compensation to rest with either House as to its own employés.

If there is to be responsibility to the governing power of this country, public opinion, let each member of the Senate and of the other House bear his own share of that. The Senate is perfectly willing, I trust it is, to assume every responsibility for every dollar spent under its orders; but I am very sure that that discretion ought to be left to each House. It has been left. I know that there have been sometimes rather active efforts made by the friends of economy or those who believed themselves to be the friends of economy, to interfere with the judgment of the Senate in regard to its dealing with its own employés, but such a thing upon reflection has been abandoned, and ought to be.

If I wish to have information to guide my vote in regard to appropriations for services performed by officers of the House, I will ask the House to give it to me, for obviously their opportunities are better than mine; and é converso if the House desire to know what is the necessity for or what is the value of the services of an employé or set of employés of the Senate, they can best learn it by the opinion of the Senate; and that being given, I trust this question will not be put upon a ground of squabble or scramble or disposition to interfere unduly with each other, but in a high sense not simply of courtesy but of that comity essential for the good government of business. Each House must be the judge in the end of what is proper and right for such appropriations as these, and I trust that each House will always be allowed to maintain it.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the conference committee acted precisely upon the principle suggested by the Senator from Delaware, namely, that the Senate is the best judge of the salaries to be paid to its employés and also the best judge of the number of employés necessary to the proper transaction of its business, and in accordance with that view we do not desire or propose to interfere either with the compensation or the number of employés of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Iowa that practically there is no permanent vacation for our officers. When they go away from here after the adjournment of Congress they have no certainty that they will not be recalled for an extra session of the Senate. If I remember right, there have been six or seven extra sessions of the Senate since I have occupied a seat on this floor, not yet six years. The Senate is liable to be called together at any time, and the officers and employés of the Senate must all assemble when we assemble.

Mr. ANTHONY. At their own cost.

Mr. MORGAN. At their own cost. It interrupts all their business that they may undertake to discharge at home, and it puts them at a serious disadvantage when compared with the employés of the House. I think that if the House would take notice of that fact, certainly they would not undertake again and again to deprive us of what is a pure matter of right, the regulation of the compensation of our own officers.

Mr. ALLISON. That was notably true last year when the Senate was in extra session until the 22d of May and convened again on the 10th of October, and remained in session until the 29th of that month, requiring, of course, our employés to be here in attendance.

The next principal difference is found in section 6 of the bill. The House proposes by this section to transfer the records in the office of the Surgeon-General, so far as they relate to pension applications, to the office of the Adjutant-General if the Secretary of War shall deem it wise to make such transfer after examination. This makes necessary the transfer of the great body of the records of the Surgeon-General's Office covering the period of the war, and that such transfer shall carry with it a transfer of all the clerks now employed in the Surgeon-General's Office with reference to the question of pensions—these clerks, numbering some four hundred in all—and shall carry with it all other contingent expenditures in that direction. The committee adhered to the opinion expressed by the Senate that this is not a wise thing to do, that so far from facilitating the adjustment of pension cases it will have the very reverse effect, creating confusion temporarily at least in the office of the Surgeon-General and the Adjutant-General and in the records of both offices, which are now in good condition for rapid examination of the pension cases. So believing, the Senate conferees refused to yield to the suggestion made by the House conferees on this point, and insisted on the amendment proposed by the Senate.

Then, in the same section is a proposition requiring a readjustment of all or nearly all the rooms in what is known as the State, War, and Navy Department building. The House provision is a legislative provision directing how the rooms there shall be occupied. We believe that this is a matter of administration rather than legislation, and that it ought to be adjusted by somebody who can take the question up and examine it in all its details and make an intelligent report with reference to it, so as to do justice as near as may be to all the Departments without inflicting injury upon any of them. We do not believe that we have the time or opportunity to accomplish this by legislation.

The north wing of the Army and Navy building will be completed perhaps about the 1st of November next, and will be wholly turned over to the War Department. The War Department now occupies the north half of the east wing of that building, and what is known as the Navy building, and what was assigned originally by agreement to the Navy Department. There is something of a contest going on between these several Departments as to who shall occupy these new and commodious quarters in the State, Army, and Navy building. It is a matter of regret that all these Departments have buildings rented outside, the War Department notably having a number of buildings rented outside, and the Navy Department having one or two. The committee believe that instead of placing upon your statute an iron-bound rule with reference to the occupation of this building, it should be left to somebody to make a thorough examination and readjust the occupancy of the building.

The question of publishing the reports of the Supreme Court decisions was also a matter of considerable discussion and difference of opinion. I think all concur that the House provision as it stands ought not to remain, but there is some difference between the conferees of the two Houses as to the substitution of a provision to take its place.

These are substantially the matters of difference now between the two Houses. I desire so far as it is practicable that the Senate shall give expression to its views upon these topics, in order that the conference committee may know what to do with reference to them.

I ought to state before I conclude that in all these matters the House propose to change the existing law, and we believe that where they propose a change which is not agreeable to us it is the duty of the House making the proposition to recede from its proposal for new legislation. This is an important bill, and it is desirable that the differences should be adjusted at as early a day as is practicable.

Mr. MAXEY. Let me ask the Senator from Iowa a question. Has the Senate ever attempted to interfere with the House in granting one month's extra pay to its clerks when that was proposed by the House? Has the Senate ever interfered with that?

Mr. ALLISON. Some years ago, in 1875, as I have already stated, the Senate had some difference with the House on that subject, but latterly the Senate has consented to allow the House to adjust its own affairs in this regard.

Mr. MAXEY. That is what I understand. The increase they complain of on the part of the Senate amounts to $29,000, I believe. Does not the increase of one month's extra pay to the clerks of the other House amount to $24,000, so that it is practically a difference of only about $5,000?

Mr. ALLISON. Practically. The truth is, this one month's extra pay gives a large number of House employés more than the Senate employés engaged in the same service receive.

Mr. MAXEY. In other words, they increase the pay of their employés after one fashion and we increase ours after another. That is about all there is in it.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the constitutional idea of the Senate and the House of Representatives, as I understand it, is that they are in all matters affecting their organization independent of each other. Each House is made by the Constitution the exclusive judge of the qualifications, elections, and returns of its own members; and upon what theory it can be maintained that each House shall not be the exclusive judges of the qualification, appointment, and compensation of its own clerks I cannot understand.

I have no opinion to express upon the action of the House of Representatives or the conduct of the committee of conference on the part of that body; but I will say that, as a member of the Senate or as a member of a committee of conference on the part of the Senate, if I were to attempt to interfere with the number or compensation of the employés of the House of Representatives I should regard myself as guilty of an unwarrantable and indecent piece of impertinence, and I hope the Senate conferees in connection with this bill will regard themselves as instructed by the Senate to maintain the independence of this body in that particular.

I do not know whether it is the design of the Senator from Iowa to invite any formal expression of the Senate as to the action that shall be taken by the Senate conferees in regard to the different amendments, but in connection with the action of the Senate upon section 6, striking out the provision that came from the House, I have to say that I cannot see how Senators can agree to retain that section in the bill. Those who believe that the provision would be detrimental to the public service, as I do, will unquestionably vote against it, and those who believe that it would be beneficent to the public service, it appears to me, should vote against it because it leaves the matter wholly in the discretion of the Secretary of War to decide whether the records shall be removed or not. It is an inoperative, absolutely ineffectual section. I believe that it would result in an indefinite procrastination of the determination of pension claims and in the confusion of records that ought to be kept separate; but if I were in favor of it, if I believed the reverse of that, I certainly would not vote for a section which provided that a subject of such importance should be left in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. PLATT. May I interrupt the Senator to ask him if he thinks that Congress ought to leave the construction of bureaus in the different Departments to the heads of Departments?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not.

Mr. PLATT. That is precisely what this section does.

Mr. INGALLS. I think that the practice is vicious and that the precedent here would be dangerous and pernicious. The section as it came from the House will have no effect whatever. If the Committee on Appropriations have any opinion upon this subject (and I understand they have, to the effect that the section ought not to pass) then we should agree with them; but if there are those who believe that the transfer ought to be made, what advantage do they gain by voting for that section? It is not an imperative, mandatory direction that the transfer shall be made, but merely that if in the opinion of the Secretary of War, after an examination and determination, he believes that advantage would result, then he is to make the transfer. It seems to me that no person, whether he be in favor of the transfer or against it, can vote for that section.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I do not understand that it is quite parliamentary to discuss the action of the other branch upon a matter of difference between the two Houses, but I do understand that it is perfectly parliamentary to report and discuss the doings of the committee of conference upon this bill.

There is a little more in it than has been stated by the Senator from Iowa. I have not undertaken to put figures together myself, but I understand that upon the first proposition all that is to be gained by the position assumed elsewhere that we shall not determine the number and the compensation of our employés is about $5,000, and if the position should be reciprocated and the Senate should insist upon regulating the number and pay of officers elsewhere, the boot being upon the other leg, there are more officers in other branches of this Legislature than in the Senate whose pay is above that of the Senate officers than there are in the aggregate in this body; and if the Senate were permitted to dictate to others as others propose to dictate to the Senate, on the whole more would be gained than lost. But it is $5,000; that is all.

The next proposition, to which the Senator from Iowa barely alluded, is the proposition to print the reports of the Supreme Court decisions as a public document in the same manner and in the same place and with the same results as if it were like the Agricultural Report—a document to be printed in the style of our public documents and subject to all the inaccuracies and lack of workmanship that attend our public documents, and also to be a document to pass through the mails free, and to be furnished under existing law one copy to each member of the House and the Senate, and the number to be printed for gratuitous circulation among all the friends of each member who happen to be lawyers and desire them printed to be determined by us upon the importunity and pressure which forces us to print 100,000 and 150,000 copies of such documents as the Agricultural Report. That is another and the second matter of difference; and it was supported and urged upon the committee of conference for the avowed purpose of having a cheaper report, a report that would not cost more than $2.50 or perhaps $2. But when the committee of conference found themselves where they could have the reports printed precisely as they are now, in the perfect style of workmanship and standard of accuracy and under precisely the same responsibility and furnished to everybody at $2 a volume, the conference committee could not come to an agreement on that point. Therefore, it became evident that it was not solely for the purpose of getting a cheap book, but it was for the purpose of getting that book in the form of a public document.

The third proposition is—and the remaining two matters of difference are substantially one—that Congress shall prescribe where the records and books and work of the different bureaus shall be performed, and shall also designate the locality in public buildings to be occupied not only by each head of a Department but by each subordinate under each head; that Congress shall assign to each individual from the heads of three Departments of this Government down to the lowest employé by law, so that he cannot change his position in the building, where each one of them shall place himself and where he shall work.

In what way is this ascertained? The superficial number of square feet in all that new building has been ascertained by actual measurement, so many square feet in the State Department, so many square feet in the Navy Department, and so many in the new wing of the War Department. So we are told, and such we must accept if we agree to the proposition in the bill. Then the number of employés and the officials of these three Cabinet officers are aggregated, the number of feet in the whole divided by the number of men, and that ascertains just how many square feet each man should be entitled to in that building. Then they say that shows the Secretary of State ought in fairness to have about half of that part of the building he has heretofore occupied, the Secretary of the Navy only one-half and one room of the part assigned to him, and all the rest should go to the War Department.

Thereupon it is proposed to enact by law that each one shall take that particular number of square feet, no matter what may be the kind of employment he may be put to, no matter what relation that may have to the way the building is now divided and has been constructed, no matter how it will adapt itself to the light or to the particular character of the work. If one man may have maps and plans and models of ships, of sails, and of masts before him, he nevertheless must have and can only have his allotted number of square feet, and it must be fixed by law, so that when he carries into practice whatever inconvenience could be remedied by mutual adjustment and arrangement would be all prohibited by law. A part of it is to take all the records of the Surgeon-General's Office and transfer them, carry them bodily, into these new rooms, and along with them all the clerks who work upon them.

It was said by the Senator from Iowa that while this may be all right it is a matter that belongs to administration. The committee of conference of six men were told by the three heads of those Departments that they could adjust all this matter; that if they could not adjust it they were willing to let the President adjust it for them, or let somebody be designated to adjust it for them; but the alternative was presented to the committee of conference, "You must take this by-law in the shape that it comes to the Senate, or we will disagree to everything in the bill."

And here I must refer to a strange feature of this report to me, for it has not been in accordance with my practice in these matters. It is new to me. It is ten years since I have had anything to do directly with appropriation bills; but when I was connected with them, (and I wish it were so now,) as far as a committee of conference could agree, and did agree, it reported to the two bodies so far as it had agreed, and then the questions of difference stood alone by themselves to be determined.

Take this bill. The Senator from Iowa has told the Senate that every item of original difference between the two branches has been reconciled except these four. In my opinion it was the duty of the committee of conference to report that fact to the Senate. That would have brought the two Houses together upon every item of difference in the bill but these four, and then the Senate or the House would stand up to the country as threatening to defeat the whole bill unless they could have their own way upon these four items, one to save $5,000, one to get the reports of the Supreme Court printed as a public document, and another to locate by law the clerks in the Departments. Those who took that position could not stand an hour either in this branch or any other branch of this Legislature.

But this committee of conference could not be brought to that. The whole difference between the two Houses, the whole bill itself is staked upon these minor and insignificant differences in point of amount. Instead of agreeing and coming before the two bodies and saying, "We recommend that the two bodies come together upon the points upon which we agree, and as to these four points, we submit to the two branches that there should be another conference," it has been reported, and that report has been adopted elsewhere, that the committee are unable to agree upon any of them. That report that we do not agree upon anything is accepted, a new committee of conference appointed, and the same men put upon it.

If this precedent is followed here, what comes of all this conference? The same committee should be appointed here and the same committee there, and these six men have walked up the hill, and have walked down again, and they are, in an hour from this time, in a committee-room, confronting each other just as they parted half an hour ago.

Does any good come from this method? Does any good come from their going through with this form? We should have reported what we agreed upon and what we disagreed upon, and if that report had been accepted a new committee should have been appointed to see how they could adjust those matters of difference upon which the prior committee had failed.

While it may be necessary to follow this bad example, I for one do not care to march up the hill and march down again, and I prefer that there should be a new committee of conference of both sides, and see if their wisdom shall find it necessary for the purpose of saving $5,000 in one place or getting a public document made out of a law book, or going into the absurd business of locating clerks by law in particular places in the room they are to occupy, shall cause a difference between the two Houses on the legislative appropriation bill, involving all the salaries of Government officials and the carrying on of the Government.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I think the committee of conference on the part of the Senate is clearly right, and I hope that whatever it is necessary for the Senate to do to sustain them we shall do and do unanimously. I do not know the motion that should be made, but whatever motion sustains the committee should be agreed to unanimously.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that my motion is to insist and agree to another conference, but I want the vote of the Senate to decide whether we shall insist or whether we shall recede from our disagreement.

Mr. PLATT. That is precisely what I am saying. I hope that the new committee, when it shall be appointed, will stand firmly by the action of the former committee.

But I rose to say a single word in reference to section 6, which provides, as it came from the House, as I understand, practically that the Secretary of War may, if in his opinion he thinks it best, consolidate two bureaus of the War Department, for that is the practical effect of it. I believe that any such action as that would greatly hinder the settlement of pension cases. But, however that may be, I do not believe that Congress should leave it to the heads of the Departments to say when they will consolidate bureaus in the different Departments. I believe that is a subject for Congressional action. They may recommend to Congress how many bureaus they shall have, the division of bureaus, or the consolidation of bureaus, but Congress is to be the judge of that and the final judge of it, and ought in no instance, in my judgment, to leave it to the heads of the Departments.

Suppose Congress were to pass an act that the Secretary of the Interior might, if he chose, if in his opinion it was best, consolidate the Indian Bureau and the Land Office, or suppose Congress were called upon to pass an act that the Secretary of the Treasury might, in the exercise of his wisdom and discretion, consolidate the Bureau of Internal Revenue and the Customs Bureau, and many other instances might be cited which would be similar. It seems to me that in no case should we leave the consolidation or the division of bureaus to the head of the Department. Congress should keep that within its own power and act upon it. As I said, I think in this case it would work very great evil to bring these two bureaus of the War Department practically and substantially together.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I wish to say a single word upon the subject of this conference. In my judgment it is vital to the dignity and power of the Senate as a constitutional body that they should adhere to the exclusive right and authority to determine the number of their employés, and the amount of their compensation, and that they should assert that they, and they alone, have the right and the power to consider that question. The contrary proposition, in my judgment, involves the abrogation of the constitutional power of this body. The Constitution provides that—

> Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings.

How can that be performed when the Senate must go to the House of Representatives to ask of them their consent as to the number of their employés and the amount of compensation which shall be paid to those who are to carry out its rules and which shall require the measure of expense which may be involved in the rule of proceeding adopted by the Senate to be subject to the discretion of another body? The House may say, "You are required to keep a journal of your proceedings, but we will not pay the expense of that proceeding. You are required to adopt such rules as you see fit as to your proceedings, but the measure of expense is within our control, and we will not appropriate that amount of money which will be necessary for the proceeding according to the rules adopted by the Senate."

I think that the question of the absolute, the exclusive right and authority of each House to determine upon the number of its employés and the amount of compensation far transcends in importance any other question presented in this conference. For one, I hope that now and always the Senate will instruct its members on the committee of conference to insist upon the absolute and the exclusive right of each House to determine both the number and the amount of compensation to be paid to its employés. The Constitution says: "All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills;" but this gives no exclusive power to either House over the organization of the other, and the fact that each House must approve an appropriation has nothing to do with the question of the power and control of each House over its own rules of proceedings.

So far as this fact is concerned it does not follow that because each House must concur in an appropriation bill therefore either House has the rightful power to refuse concurrence in an appropriation for an object distinctly stated in the Constitution. The argument of those who maintain the right of either the House or the Senate to determine the number of the employés and their compensation for the other truthfully stated is as follows: The Constitution creates the Senate and House distinct legislative bodies, independent in their functions and membership of each other.

By an express provision it declares that each shall determine its rules of proceeding. Clerks, messengers, and expenditures are necessary to carry out the rules of proceeding adopted by each House and each House must concur in appropriating the money to pay the expense of the proceedings adopted by each; therefore both the Senate and the House have the rightful constitutional power to say to the other "We refuse to appropriate the money to pay the expense of the rule of proceeding which the Constitution requires each to adopt and prohibits each from interfering with the other."

The exclusive power of each House over the number of its employés and the amounts of their compensation results plainly both from the constitutional functions of the Senate and the House and from the express words of the Constitution.

The power of the House to originate revenue bills and of the Senate to concur has nothing whatever to do with the subject. It is simply incident to that as to any other item of constitutional expenditure, that it shall be made through the concurrence of the two Houses and the approval of the President; and the argument is precisely the same and supports the conclusion equally that the President may constitutionally say, "I must be consulted about the number and compensation of the employés of the Senate and House; they have too many committees, too many or too few messengers, secretaries, and clerks, and I refuse to agree to this appropriation." In my view this body will consent to abdicate its constitutional place in this Government if it surrenders the right to perfect and control its own organization and its rules of proceeding.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, all I wish in this matter of controversy between the two Houses is to enter a caveat against the doctrine proclaimed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] and the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.] The House of Representatives have just as much right to participate in the legislation in regard to the salaries of our employés as they have in regard to any other subject-matter of legislation.

There is one ground, however, that is perfectly impregnable upon which our action can stand, and there is no use of seeking a weaker one. That is this: the law now prescribes the salaries of the officers of the Senate. That law is the existing law on the statute-book, which cannot be changed except by the consent of the House and the Senate and the President. Neither of these three can be coerced to consent, and therefore whenever either House proposes to change the law which all are bound to obey it cannot force the other two parties to the contract to agree to that change by attaching it to an appropriation bill.

If when our conferees go back they stand upon the ground that wherever the law fixes the salary of the Senate officers the House has no right to propose a change, except with our consent, that is impregnable; but when you say to the House that it has no right to restrain the extravagance of the Senate; that it has no right to prevent the Senate from giving a man undue pay for services rendered here in comparison with services rendered in other Departments, that is not tenable.

Another trouble in this whole controversy between the two Houses, which has been going on for years, grows out of a violation of the fundamental rule of both Houses. The rules of both Houses guard the appropriation bills from legislative enactments. Nothing is clearer or stronger than the rules of the Senate and House that legislative provisions shall not be put upon appropriation bills, and whenever the Senate or the House is strong enough and vigorous enough to enforce its rules it will check a gross and growing abuse. There is not a single legislative provision put on an appropriation bill at this session that ought not to have been stricken off by the Committee on Appropriations upon a point of order, in my judgment. I do not criticise their conduct. I criticise my own in not objecting to such provisions.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator understand that when a provision comes from the House in an appropriation bill changing existing law we can strike that off on a point of order?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; but we may move an amendment to strike it off.

Mr. DAWES. Then it could not be struck off on a point of order?

Mr. SHERMAN. We all know that, as a matter of course. Each House is the judge of its own rules. The rules of both Houses exclude legislative provisions from these bills; but what the Senate can do is simply to move to strike off such legislative provisions and leave the bill naked as an appropriation bill.

The Republican party made a contest upon this point against the Democratic Congress when both Houses were Democratic and made it successfully, and had behind them the popular voice and the popular will. When the Democratic Congress sought to overload an appropriation bill with legislative provisions the Republicans of the House stood against those legislative provisions and compelled their abandonment, although they were in the minority in both Houses.

It seems to me that these appropriation bills ought to be stripped of every legislative provision in them, and then there would be no controversy between the two Houses.

I say upon the point now as between the House and Senate in regard to a change in the salaries of Senate employés, which has been made over and over again, the Senate is clearly right, because the law fixes the salaries of these employés, and no change in that law should be made except by the free and voluntary consent of both Houses. I served on many a committee of conference, and the rule was always that wherever either House proposed an amendment to an appropriation bill in which the other House did not concur, the House making the proposal must abandon the amendment. There is no other rule by which you can legislate.

I say the practice ought to go further, that not only where either House objects to a legislative provision it ought to be stricken off as a matter of course, but the law laid down in the parliamentary code goes much further than that. It is that where either House proposes even a legitimate item of appropriation which is within the rule, and the other House dissents from that, the House proposing the provision should withdraw it at once. Why? Because the appropriation bills ought to be composed only of items that both Houses have freely assented to; and whenever one body endeavors to foist upon the other an unwilling subject of appropriation it violates the spirit of legislative proceeding and the rules of parliamentary proceeding. That is the only true rule.

These bills ought never to be made to bear coercive legislation, and the rule goes far beyond what has been proposed here. Wherever the House proposes an amendment which violates existing law, the Senate may stand upon the law and say "No, we do not think that the law ought to be changed," and that ought to be the end of the argument. Wherever the Senate, as it often does, proposes a large appropriation which the House does not consent to, the Senate ought at once to recede and it ought to do so wherever the House makes a determined stand against any item of appropriation, because the Senate has no right under the force of parliamentary law to make the House consent to what it does not willingly agree to.

These are the general rules of parliamentary law, and I only wished to enter my caveat. I am perfectly willing to stand by the Senate committee, but I wish to base their action upon the true ground, which is that we will not, unless we are advised that it ought to be done, consent to a change in the existing law.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss the subject further, but I wish to say that I do not concur in the opinion expressed by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] which I have often heard expressed here. On the contrary, I believe it is demonstrable that any question of privilege, any right inherent in either House cannot be made the subject of any other law than the Constitution itself. No legislation can bind either House of Congress in those subjects which are committed absolutely to the power of each recurring House.

I ask the honorable Senator from Ohio to say when this body has decided that there shall be so many committees as a rule in its proceedings, so many clerks and so many messengers, which all admit we have the unquestioned power to do; how can we have that right and the House have the right to say, "We are the judges as to the compensation, or whether there shall be any compensation to those clerks and those messengers?" The right to determine our rules of proceeding of necessity carries with it the instrumentalities which are necessary to carry out those rules of proceeding, and the absolute independence of the two Houses of Congress, each of the other, in the performance of their constitutional functions renders it necessary that each House should have the absolute control of the instrumentalities and necessary means of legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can answer the Senator in a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair.) Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CALL. With pleasure.

Mr. SHERMAN. Such things as that should be based simply on the ground of courtesy, no more and no less; but the Senate has no right to appropriate one dollar of money for any purpose whatever except by consent of the House of Representatives, and vice versa, the House cannot appropriate money unless we consent. Whenever we, in fixing the salaries of our employés, do what is reasonable and right the House passes upon it, and generally by courtesy it will do anything in that respect that we ask it to do as we do by it. But upon the question of right and power there is no doubt that the House may at any time question every dollar of expenditure paid by you for any purpose whatever. You cannot get money to pay your contingent expenses, for your pen and ink, except by the vote of both Houses. That is the rule, but as a matter of courtesy these questions hardly ever arise between the two Houses.

Mr. CALL. I do not wish to argue the question, but the answer of the Senator from Ohio does not meet the proposition. The proposition is not one as to the power which either House has over the other, for so we may say to them that "You cannot get any money without our consent." There is no difference in the power of the Senate. The question is of the rightful, constitutional power, not of the absolute power. But I only wished to express my opinions on the subject.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio with reference to the legislation on appropriation bills. I think for the moment it has escaped his mind that under an existing rule in the House of Representatives it is in order to put legislation upon an appropriation bill, and that is the difficulty which the Senate Committee on Appropriations is compelled to confront always. These bills come over to us filled with legislation, some of it very reasonable legislation, a good deal of it very proper legislation. The Committee on Appropriations has not felt it to be its duty to strike out such provisions without examining them, without suggesting amendments to them, and improving them, if in the judgment of the committee improvement could be made. The present rule of the House of Representatives on this point is that legislation is in order upon an appropriation bill when the effect of it is to retrench expenditures.

Mr. DAWES. And of that they are to be the judges.

Mr. ALLISON. And they are the judges; so that all such provisions that come here from the House of Representatives come under the assumption that they are for the purpose of retrenching expenditures. Therefore the House rule differs very materially from the Senate rule, and we find legislation constantly appearing here in these bills. We cannot get rid of it unless we strike it out and then have a controversy with the House on the subject. I do not think the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio with reference to legislation upon these bills applies fairly to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Except that wherever an appropriation bill changes the law in any particular and the Senate does not approve of that change, whether it reduced the expense or not, if it is stricken out as a matter of right by either House there ought to be no further question.

Mr. ALLISON. I quite agree with the Senator that where the Senate believes that the legislation proposed is not wise, the House ought to recede at once. So I think with reference to every one of these four suggestions of disagreement; they are all in the nature of legislative changes; and yet the House thus far insists as a condition of passing this bill that we shall consent to this new legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I remember the case of an important conference in 1859 when the Senate had put a large amount of appropriations on one of the bills of the House, among others appropriations for the improvement of Charleston Harbor and for the building of the unfinished custom-house at New Orleans. They were sent to the House with the notice that the Senate intended to stand by those amendments. A conference was held, and the conferees on the part of the House said that the House did not intend to allow those amendments if the result should be to defeat the bill. A distinguished Senator from Georgia whose name I need not mention said he would insist upon them, and he would never allow the bill to be passed unless those amendments were considered favorably by the House. That disagreement was reported to the Senate, and the Senate finally unanimously abandoned that position and took the ground that it had no right to compel the House to agree to anything, however important, if the House should determine not to do so. That, I believe, is the parliamentary law; and the assertion that either House has the right to say to the other, "You shall give this which is not authorized by law; you shall not grant that certain thing or else we will not allow you to pass the current appropriation bill," ought to be treated with contempt by the other body, and would at once create a controversy which would prevent the passage of any appropriation bill.

The rule is that the appropriation bills must represent the willing assent of both Houses to every proposition in them. The great error of our system is that the President of the United States has not the right to veto a single clause of an appropriation bill and pick out what he thinks is wrong rather than defeat the whole bill. That power is conferred upon the governors of many States of the Union, and if the Constitution of the United States is ever altered it will be altered in that particular.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, being a member of the conference committee on this bill, I agree with the Senator from Ohio that the House has a right to be consulted in the voting of money for any purpose whatever. Before money can be voted, that has to be done; but as a matter of principle, as a matter of right, I think it all wrong that the House should want to regulate the salaries of the Senate employés. I desire the chairman of the committee of conference to hear what I have to say on this matter; I shall only take a minute or two.

There are four questions of difference between the House and the Senate. Two of them, in my opinion, can be easily settled or arranged very soon, if the other two were out of the way, though they are open and subject to all that has been said by my colleagues on the committee. Those two that could thus be arranged and settled in my judgment are the pay of the Senate employés and the arrangement for printing the reports of the Supreme Court. I think the conference could agree, probably, in a short time, though there are questions open yet. I think the chairman will bear me out in my statement that those differences could be arranged. I think the House recognizes that we have a right to regulate the salaries of our own employés, and I think they will yield that. They always have done it, and I think they will do it again, but the real differences between the conferees are the other two provisions which apparently cannot be adjusted.

Mr. INGALLS. What are those provisions?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will name them if the Senator will give me time. Provisions we cannot put upon the bill which are not subjects of conference on either side.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator seems to think that a new committee would agree in a very short time. Suppose that new committee——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My friend misunderstood me; I said nothing about a new committee; I did not intimate a new committee; I had no thought of a new committee.

Mr. DAWES. I simply want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Very well.

Mr. DAWES. Suppose there is a new committee of whoever may compose it and the new committee should agree on these four items and disagree on the rest?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have made no question about that.

Mr. DAWES. Why should not a committee close up as far as they go under those rules which require that anything which will bring the two Houses together shall take precedence of everything else?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That question has not been presented by the chairman or by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. If this is to be the old committee, why ask for a new one? The motion is for a new committee of conference, which I suppose will be the old one.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I made no reference to a new committee of any kind. I affirm that all the differences between the committees on the part of either House are four. Two of them, in my opinion, can be adjusted in a very short time by the same committee that has been heretofore in conference upon the bill. I mean the provision relating to the payment of the employés of the two Houses and that relating to the Supreme Court reports. Whether the two Houses would agree with the committee afterward or not is another question. But the real difference between the conferees and that which, to my mind, gives more trouble than the two I have named is the transfer from the Surgeon-General's Office to the Adjutant-General's Office of such records as relate to pensions. There is a wide difference between the two committees on that proposition, and that is one of the things that probably the old committee may not be able to adjust. Whether they will or not is a question to be seen.

My belief is that there ought not to be a transfer, and if there was no other reason for it it would be that as things now exist one office is a check upon the other. In other words, if there is a pension inquiry made from the Pension Office there are two letters written now, one to the Surgeon-General's Office and one to the Adjutant-General's Office. If the information from both officers comes back and corresponds it is fair to presume that it is correct. If the records were all in the same office it is likely you would get but one answer, and that answer might be an erroneous one, and there would be nothing to check it. I think if there were no other reason we ought to adhere for the reason I have stated, and let the records stay where they are now. It is agreed on all sides by the committee that the records which could not be replaced if they were destroyed should be removed from the insecure building they are contained in now and be placed in the State Department building where they would be secure. The committee, I believe, are unanimous upon that, and that transfer probably will be made whether we consent to the other transfer or not.

The fourth difference is as to assigning by legislation the different rooms in the new State Department building; that is, whether we shall say by legislation that this clerk or this bureau or this division shall occupy this room, that room, or the other room. That is what the House contend for. They say that we have a right by legislation to assign them. Your committee say that we should leave it to the three Secretaries of State, War, and the Navy, and if they cannot agree let them refer their differences to the President or some one else. I believe the committee of the Senate was ready to agree to anybody at all if there were differences; but the question is whether if there are real differences the Secretaries themselves may not arrange them.

There is another question connected with that. Suppose we to-day by legislation assign certain rooms to certain divisions or certain bureaus, as soon as the building is finished the whole state of things will change, and we must legislate again to get them out of there and into certain other rooms. I think the chairman fully agrees with me on that.

The real differences between the Houses are the two I have spoken of, the transfer from the Surgeon-General's Office to the Adjutant-General's Office of the records relating to pensions and as to the assignment of rooms in the new State Department building. The other matters of difference, I think, can be readily arranged.

Mr. MORRILL. It seems to me we are consuming a great deal of unnecessary time about this report of the committee of conference. I understand a motion has been made for a new committee. I desire to amend that, and move that instead the Senate shall insist upon its disagreement to the action of the House, and that the same committee be reappointed in order that they may report upon what amendments they have already agreed to or can agree to, so that the House and the Senate can be as near an agreement as possible.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not want to detain the Senate, but I wish to submit a proposition on which I think we can have a unanimous agreement. Being myself unable to agree with the Senate conferees, I desire to briefly express the reason for that disagreement.

I am not tenacious as to the question how the consolidation of force in the State Department building shall be arrived at; but I appeal to the knowledge of every person on this floor for a confirmation of what I say when I say that there is an extravagant use of the room in that building. It is stated, and well stated, by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES], and others that that question of the consolidation of clerks and the economical use of the rooms provided is an administrative question; but the administrative branch of the Government does not act, and it will not, apparently, unless it is admonished to do so by the legislative branch; it will not consolidate the force and will not make economical use of the rooms we have furnished.

Following this thing out logically, if the Secretary of the Treasury, who has charge of the custom-house building in New York, were to take two men out of a room and in place of two have one and put the rest out of doors, Congress would have no remedy except to provide a new building, and thus the power that is to furnish the money, that is to give the directions as to the building and to prescribe the cost, is absolutely at the mercy of the executive branch of the Government. I think that is carrying things too far.

Here is a building which in itself was extravagantly built; that is to say in its internal arrangements so far as the economy of space is concerned, and when you add that an extravagant use of that space is patent to the knowledge of everybody it would seem that something ought to be done. I do not know why the proper depository of that power may not be named by legislation; and I think we might have gone a little further and accomplished a great deal more in the bill in regard to this provision. I only want to say, however, that I think something ought to be done, and that we ought to put into the bill an effective provision for that purpose.

In regard to the question of consolidating the records of the Surgeon-General's Office with those of the Adjutant-General's Office, for the purpose of expediting the allowance of pension cases, I have not only had no occasion to change the opinion I expressed when the subject was before the Senate on another occasion, but the more I consider about it, the more I learn about it, the more I am satisfied that something of that kind ought to be done.

I say that with a great deal of deference to the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. PLATT,] who is on the Pension Committee, and the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] who is well informed on this and all other questions, and my colleague, [Mr. INGALLS,] who has also had knowledge about these matters. It is not to direct a consolidation of bureaus at all. It is simply requiring the Surgeon-General to deposit on call and under the temporary control of the Adjutant-General certain records. There is no consolidation of records, no consolidation of functions. The function of the Surgeon-General is not to furnish this information, necessarily. The records might as well be turned over to somebody else. He might be required to furnish them to the Adjutant-General or any other officer of the Government for the purpose of getting information which happened to be deposited there, and the getting of it does not interfere with his use of the records. He is making no use of them except for the purpose of supplying the Pension Office with information in regard to the pensioners.

As I said before, I believe that if that were under one head and under one jurisdiction, a large portion of the correspondence now necessary would be rendered unnecessary. I believe it would tend to very great economy of time and of money should we get the pension cases disposed of at an earlier day than we shall under the present arrangement. I have no doubt, however, that the operation of the Surgeon-General's Department might be quickened very much, that it might do a great deal better than it does, and perhaps it will do it hereafter, and unless it does you may be perfectly certain that we shall find a constant impediment there which the addition of clerks will not remove. You cannot put clerks enough there according to the management heretofore to make the operations of that department correspond with those of the Pension Bureau, that part which is under the control of the Commissioner of Pensions, and that part which is under the control of the Adjutant-General.

For some reason or other, and I think it is largely because it has never been subjected to an interruption of this kind, while the Adjutant-General deals constantly with inquiries about soldiers, their history, and so on, the Surgeon-General does not. His is a bureau that has never been subjected to an interruption of this sort; it is not calculated, it is not organized for the purpose of furnishing this information rapidly and effectively, and something ought to be done to relieve the embargo which presses more closely at that point upon the administration of the pension law than at any other.

Mr. HAWLEY. I differ with my friend in one respect, that of which he has last spoken. I think there is no difficulty whatever in getting all the necessary work out of the Surgeon-General's Office. If the Senator will look at the reports of that office for the last ten or twelve years he will find every single year a representation of the utter impossibility of that office doing the work with the number of clerks it had and frequent reference to the narrow accommodations and to the unwholesome and bad quarters they have had. There is a proposed remedy in this bill giving them additional clerks. The Surgeon-General's Office feels abundantly capable now of doing all that is demanded of it. In a short time it will catch up with its work and can keep up; but to do it justice, it has made representations from year to year of the insufficiency of the force ordered there. Dr. Woodward, a surgeon of eminence and executive ability, in every way qualified for his place, who had charge of the pension division, did the best he could. The gentleman there now—his name has escaped me at this moment—is a man of undoubted capacity; he is mastering all the details of that office with rapidity, and will get effective work out of the new force that is to be placed under his command.

I think it far better for the Government that those records peculiarly appropriate to the Surgeon-General's Office should remain with the Medical Department.

Mr. PLUMB. I admit that there has been an inadequacy of force. The force has not been sufficient, and those members of the Committee on Appropriations who will remember the controversy we had two years ago will remember that I insisted that the force ought to be largely increased. It is inadequate. What I said was not in the sense of a reflection, but that the ordinary proceedures of that department were not of a kind which were calculated to carry out an object of this sort.

Mr. HAWLEY. But the Senator knows, of course, that they have been subject to just as great a pressure to furnish their returns and tables as any other bureau or office connected with the Pension Department. I think they have done the best they could under very capable men, and I have no doubt in the future, with the additional force and the room and air to work in, they will be able to accomplish what is desired. They have been really abused, with insufficient room and insufficient ventilation.

Mr. BECK. Without saying anything as to the merits of the controversy now—the Senate conferees are able to take care of that—I desire to express the hope any suggestion looking to a change of conferees on the part of the Senate will not be seriously considered. The length of time spent, and the number of items that have been agreed to already by the conferees on the part of the Senate and the conferees on the part of the House would all be lost and thrown away if new men were appointed, and a whole week's work—for I think it has taken a week of careful work—to be gone over again. Surely if the former conferees on the part of the House are to be continued, the Senate conferees should be, so that we may at least have the benefit of what has been already agreed to. If they cannot do any better they can report the differences, with the agreements made, so as not to have to go over all the work again.

I make these remarks because, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, knowing how much work has been done and how much trouble it has caused the conferees up to this time, I am very much afraid of trying new members on a committee, for I might happen to be one of them, and I surely could not do the work, and no other three members of the Committee on Appropriations could do it as well as the three we have now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate further insist on its amendments, and agree to the further conference asked by the House of Representatives. Does the Senator from Vermont move to amend the motion?

Mr. MORRILL. If it includes the idea that the same committee of conference shall be appointed, I do agree to it. I do not agree to any new men being placed upon the conference committee.

Mr. ANTHONY. The same conferees are always appointed under such circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BAYARD. By the same committee being returned, it is an indorsement of their action. That is what the Senate desires to express.

The motion was agreed to unanimously, and by unanimous consent the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 2084) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1858) to provide additional industrial training schools for Indian youth, and authorizing the use of unoccupied military barracks for such purpose; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4443) to amend sections 3 and 4 of the act of February 21, 1879, "to fix the pay of letter-carriers, and for other purposes."

TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish to move a recommitment of a bill. There is an error in the bill (S. No. 2151) to provide for the publication of the Tenth Census, and I ask that it be recommitted to the Committee on Printing, and by direction of the committee I will report it back as corrected.

The bill was recommitted.

Mr. ANTHONY. I now report from the Committee on Printing the bill (S. No. 2151) to provide for the publication of the Tenth Census, with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. Now I ask that the tax bill be taken up.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose the pending pension bill will come up to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

Mr. INGALLS. The naval appropriation bill has been upon the table four days, reported from the Committee on Appropriations with important amendments that will require discussion. It will necessarily go into conference. I ask the Senator having it in charge when it is the intention of the committee to call it up for action?

Mr. HALE. The naval appropriation bill was reported to the Senate on Thursday last. I consented then, on account of the pendency of the tax bill in charge of the Senator from Vermont, not to ask the Senate to take up during last week, and I have also consented, so far as I can consent, that to-day I will not attempt to call it up; but I hope to call it up to-morrow morning.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope that will be done. I think it important that action should be had here on that bill in justice to an important branch of the public service.

Mr. HALE. I think that is the general view of Senators.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Maine will remember that the other day while the discussion of the bill was up in committee we had some information that struck us as a little strange relative to the advancement of officers on the retired list of the Navy after they had been retired. I wrote to the Secretary of the Navy for information concerning it, and I received a few moments ago his letter with the list. I ask that it be published in the RECORD so that we may look at it to-morrow. It may necessitate some changes in the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senate will have that done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the paper will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ANTHONY. Would it not suit the purpose of the Senator from Kentucky as well to have it printed in document form merely? We are in the habit of putting in the RECORD communications which swell the volume very largely. If they were printed and laid on our tables as documents, they would answer the same purpose.

Mr. BECK. I regard this as a communication which ought to appear in the RECORD so that every Senator can see it. I can use it as part of my remarks to-morrow on the bill if the Senator prefers that, but I want it in the RECORD. I prefer that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

The document ordered to be printed in the RECORD is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, July 17, 1882.

SIR: Agreeably to your request of the 12th instant, I have the honor to inclose herewith a list of officers on the retired and reserved list of the United States Navy, showing their present rank and pay, and their rank and pay at the time of their retirement.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. JAMES B. BECK, United States Senate.

W. W. BROWN AND OTHERS.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to call attention to a mistake in the printing of the views of the minority on a pension bill now pending, being the bill (H. R. No. 4444) granting pensions to Wilson W. Brown and others. It is the case of those known as the Mitchell raiders. It is a House bill, which passed the House, and, coming to the Senate, it was referred to me as a member of the Committee on Pensions for examination; and arriving at a favorable opinion in my own mind, in accordance with the custom of the committee I drew up a favorable report as for the majority, and in that report quoted from the report of the House committee a statement of the facts as they appeared in that report. On submitting my report to the consideration of the committee a majority of the committee overruled it, so that my views became those of the minority rather than of the majority. I then submitted the papers to the chairman with the understanding that he was to prepare a majority report and said I would have my views, prepared as a report, printed as the views of the minority; and there my superintendence of the matter closed.

On examining this morning the report of the majority and the views of the minority, as printed, I find that the caption of my report is covered over by a slip of paper prepared as the caption of the views of the minority, the handwriting of which I do not recognize, pasted across the lines in which I had written these words, "the principal facts are stated in the House report, as follows." Then are quotation marks, indicating what in my original report I had taken from the report of the House committee. So the views of the minority are printed in such form that I appear to have assumed to myself the composition of the House report without giving credit for it. Noticing that, I sent to the Public Printer and have received the original manuscript, which explains the whole matter. I do not precisely like to go down in history under this apparent implication, and therefore I wish that the views of the minority may be reprinted. The case goes over until to-morrow. I will see that the views are put in so as to make this explanation on the record. I ask unanimous consent that this may be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BLAIR. And I desire to have the incorrect report of the minority withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none, and the request is granted.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. BLAIR, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. HARRIS, Mr. HARRISON, Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. LAPHAM, (by request,) Mr. PLUMB, Mr. ROLLINS, and Mr. VEST submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROLLINS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and move its reference to the Committee on Finance, to be considered by that committee in the first instance.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 803) granting a pension to Laban Connor;

A bill (H. R. No. 1147) granting a pension to Elizabeth Vernor Henry;

A bill (H. R. No. 1206) granting a pension to Mrs. Kate L. Usher;

A bill (H. R. No. 1451) granting a pension to Thomas W. Rothrock;

A bill (H. R. No. 1997) granting a pension to Joel R. Carter;

A bill (H. R. No. 2005) to increase the pension of Elijah W. Penny;

A bill (H. R. No. 2278) for the relief of John H. Jackson;

A bill (H. R. No. 2349) granting an increase of pension to George J. Webb;

A bill (H. R. No. 3581) granting a pension to Mrs. Lizzie M. Mitchell;

A bill (H. R. No. 4372) for the relief of Robert P. Walker;

A bill (H. R. No. 4914) granting a pension to Emeline Pink;

A bill (H. R. No. 5382) granting a pension to Peter J. Welshbillig;

A bill (H. R. No. 5684) granting a pension to Newton Boutwell;

A bill (H. R. No. 6401) granting a pension to Amelia Ann Wilson and her minor child; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 174) for printing the report of the Life-Saving Service.

EXTRA PAY TO EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer a resolution to be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, proposed as a substitute for the resolution submitted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] on Saturday last:

Resolved, That there shall be allowed and paid to the employés of the Senate (including the Capitol police) receiving an annual compensation, who were employed on the 4th day of March, 1881, or on the 15th day of December, 1881, a sum equal to one month's pay at the rate per annum they were receiving at the dates specified herein, and that a sum equal to one month's pay shall be allowed and paid to the session employés of the Senate who shall be so employed at the adjournment of the present session.

The resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

INTERNAL REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to give notice that I shall antagonize the naval appropriation bill to-morrow morning, and every other morning until this bill shall be disposed of, if I can get the support of the Senate. I will also say that while I shall yield up to one o'clock to-morrow for the consideration of business upon the Calendar, after to-morrow morning I shall propose to take up this bill and consider it immediately at the conclusion of the morning business proper.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has given notice that he will antagonize the naval appropriation bill. I hope he also intends to antagonize every other matter.

Mr. MORRILL. I do.

Mr. HALE. And not make his notice of antagonism confined to the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I should have said the naval appropriation bill and everything else.

Mr. HALL. No matter what it is?

Mr. MORRILL. No matter what.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope the Senator who has charge of the naval appropriation bill will move to take it up to-morrow, and let us see whether appropriation bills are to be delayed for anything. I believe it has been the practice of the Senate for many years that whenever appropriation bills were ready they should be taken up and have the right of way. Of course I do not say it is the rule of the Senate; I mean it has been the uniform practice and custom of the Senate, and I think my friend from Ohio cannot point to a single instance where it has not been done.

Mr. SHERMAN. The express rules of the House of Representatives give revenue bills preference over any appropriation bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This is not the House of Representatives.

Mr. SHERMAN. The custom of the Senate has been uniform to give revenue bills precedence over everything else. They very rarely come in collision, and ought never to come in collision, because the chairmen of the two committees ought to prevent that, but the rules of parliamentary bodies give revenue bills priority. They are bills for supplies, which take precedence of everything.

Mr. RANSOM. In the upper House?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly, and the rules of the other House expressly give precedence to revenue bills.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no recollection of a single instance when an appropriation bill has been ready for consideration that the Senate had refused to take it up. I do not think there is a single instance of that kind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to the amendment of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GEORGE. I submitted an amendment which I desire to have read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That all duties and imposts now laid on machinery for the manufacture of cotton or woolen goods, or goods composed of hemp, jute, ramee, and on all tools of mechanics suited for use by manual labor, and on all agricultural implements, and on all iron ties commonly known as cotton-ties, including the hoops, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I believe that the adoption of the amendment which I have proposed will greatly benefit the people of this country, and especially will some of its provisions benefit the State which has commissioned me as one of her representatives in this Chamber. The amendment first proposes to repeal all duties on machinery for the manufacture of goods composed of cotton, wool, hemp, or ramee. If adopted it will certainly give a great impetus to such manufactures. The increase of the manufactures of cotton would greatly add to the wealth of the country.

We now export about three-fourths of our raw cotton to be used in the factories of Europe, thereby greatly adding to the industries and wealth of other nations. It can and ought to be all manufactured here. The raising of raw cotton has not been a profitable industry for some years. The manufacture of it has always been and is now very profitable. In the work pertaining to this great staple, so necessary for the comfort, so essential to the commerce and manufacturers of the world, we of the South perform that part in which there is the least profit, and surrender to others the greater portion of that part from which great wealth is acquired.

I said that the production of cotton had been in the main unprofitable of late years. I shall not go into a calculation of how much it costs to raise cotton and how much is received by the producer to show the truth of this statement. I prefer to rest on the result of experience and observation. They teach me that nine-tenths of those engaged in cotton-raising are in a condition now not much better than ten years ago. As a rule cotton is raised on mortgages or liens given for supplies before the crop is planted.

In many instances the proceeds of the crop are unequal to the amount of the supplies furnished. It is a fact within my personal knowledge that merchants engaged in the supply business have in many instances become overburdened with the land, cultivated farms, which have fallen into their hands by a failure of the crop to meet their demands. I have been engaged in cotton-planting ever since the close of the war, and the result is a loss in the whole period. I know that to be true with reference to most of my neighbors and acquaintances. The public history of the State of Mississippi shows this to be true in a large degree throughout the State. I state the fact. I shall not go into an examination of the causes now, further than to say that one of them, and a most potential one, is the unsuitableness of the work necessary for its production to a large class of our population, women and children, who must nevertheless be supported from it, and the want of suitable employment for them and of a home market for such agricultural productions as can be raised by their labor.

These causes would be removed in a great degree by the establishment of cotton manufactories in our midst. It will be asked: Why are they not established? I answer: Want of capital, and the consequent inability to compete with the established manufactures in our own country. Our capital, together with a very large portion of our best and most efficient labor was destroyed by the war. Every resource of the State was embarked in it and lost, and more than one-fourth of the most active and energetic young men were either killed or disabled.

At the end of the war not only all our money was gone but our farms were dilapidated, our cattle consumed, and our work animals had been taken and used up by the contending armies. The strain on our resources was such that most families in the State were destitute of the ordinary household goods and plantation implements; blankets and carpets had been sent to the army for the soldiers; spades, shovels, axes, wagons, carts, and the gear for domestic animals had all gone in the same direction.

After the war we had years that were almost equally devastating and unfortunate. In 1866, 1867, and 1868 we had the worst of seasons. Small crops were made and all supplies were at enormous prices. In 1865, as soon as the war was over, this Government sent its agents to collect and gather up cotton alleged to have been sold to the confederate government. These agents seized and carried away whatever cotton they judged had been so sold. There was no trial provided for in case of dispute. Their judgment alone, influenced by being allowed a part of the spoils as compensation, was final. Then this Government, under the impression that cotton raising was immensely profitable, levied on us an onerous cotton tax amounting in the aggregate in Mississippi to over $10,000,000.

Then came the era of reconstruction, with all its horrors and all its disasters. I do not refer to this in any partisan spirit nor to cast blame on any one. I am only speaking of its effects on our industries and on our finances. You may say, if you please, that we were to blame. It makes no difference as to my argument whether this is so or not; I am speaking of financial results, not discussing the justice or injustice of the measures which contributed to them. In Mississippi the result was universal ruin to the non-officeholding classes and sudden and great wealth to those who gathered the spoils.

In 1871, the first year after reconstruction, the State tax was increased 400 per cent.; in 1872, 850 per cent.; in 1873, 1,250 per cent., and in 1874, 1,400 per cent. County and local taxation was increased in the same and in many places even a greater ratio. Salaries, fees, and all official emoluments were largely increased. None flourished but officials. In one county a sheriff saved in four years over $200,000, which he now enjoys in a northern city. This was but a sample of all others. A State senator organized a company, of which he was a member, and secured for it 200,000 acres of land belonging to the State without paying a single dollar. In the mean time all values were daily diminishing. The assessment for taxes, embracing all property of whatever description, from 1871 to 1875 decreased more than $42,000,000, being a loss of about 25 per cent. And in that time was forfeited to the State for taxes over 6,500,000 acres of land, being more than 10,000 square miles, and about 27 per cent. of the total area of the State, and being a territory larger than Connecticut, Delaware, and Rhode Island combined, larger than Massachusetts and Delaware combined, larger by 1,700 square miles than New Jersey, and nearly as large as Maryland. This had been private property, much of it improved, and yet in the short space of four years it had all been confiscated by an all-devouring taxation. In addition to this a debt was annually created larger by 50 per cent. than the yearly expenses. And for all this the people had nothing except the sum of $80,000 donated to a railroad company. No public works were undertaken. The taxation and debt were pure plunder and official brigandage.

I am glad to say that since 1875 there has been a great improvement; but still we find it difficult to advance with satisfactory rapidity without capital and without manufacturing. Now, sir, as it seems to be conceded that our tax laws, at least within the revenue standard, shall be so adjusted as to encourage and foster American industry, American manufacturing, I appeal with confidence to the Senate to give Southern and Western manufacturers the aid asked for in this amendment. We want the privilege of buying machinery for manufacturing cotton and wool where we can buy it cheapest. Unless we can do this we cannot purchase at all.

I am able to state as a significant fact on this branch of the subject that I know of two large factory buildings in Mississippi, well adapted to the cotton and woolen manufacture, which are now idle for the want of capital to buy machinery to place in them. In one of these I was at one time interested. It is a most magnificent building and capable of accommodating machinery which would spin and weave over 6,000 bales of cotton per annum. Yet because we cannot buy the machinery in the cheapest market, the building must remain idle. Mississippi, owing to its recent geological formation, has no mines of coal, iron, gold, or silver. But in her magnificent forests of the best timber in the world; in her many rivers and smaller streams, abounding with water-power sufficient to run the machinery to spin and weave all the cotton she grows; in her fertile soil, some of it the most productive in the world; in her salubrious clime, and in the variety of the useful productions capable of being raised there, embracing oranges, sugar, cotton, corn, wheat, oats, barley, ramee, and jute, the best grasses, the best grapes and fruits, she possesses natural advantages which need but to be utilized to make her people wealthy and prosperous. In Marshall County there is a stream, over which the Chicago, Saint Louis and New Orleans Railroad passes, with sufficient water-power to propel the machinery to turn out each year more than $1,000,000 in value of cotton and woolen goods. There are many other similar streams in every section of the State.

You have aided other sections by favoring tariff laws; I ask you to aid us now. Protective laws as against Europe do us no good; they are rather an injury than a benefit to us.

We pay the high prices; we get none of the protection; we have none of the home markets which are so profitable and attractive to those farmers who live in the manufacturing regions. The competition which troubles us is that which comes from the superior capital and the long-established enterprises of the North and West. We cannot get and do not ask protection against these. All we ask is that the Government will so adjust its tariff as to allow us with our small capital in the inception and infancy of our manufactures to buy machinery where alone we are able to purchase it. Unless we can do this, the magnificent picture drawn by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] a few days ago with reference to the future of the South will not be realized for many years.

Mr. President, I appeal to Senators to consider this amendment in a friendly, catholic spirit. If adopted it will hurt nobody, but will benefit millions in the South of both races, and will speedily raise that section into a prosperity and advancement which will gladden the hearts of all who feel an interest in all sections of our country. I make this appeal in some confidence that it will be responded to, if only it be well and fairly considered. My intercourse with Northern and Western Republican Senators since I have been a member of this body has tended to convince me that they desire the prosperity and advancement of the South. From them I hear friendly expressions toward that section which I believe are sincere, and from them also I have received that assistance in the discharge of my duties peculiarly valuable in my inexperience as a member of this body. Many of them too have contributed by their votes and influence to popularizing the idea of Government aid to the levees on the Mississippi River. Yet they seem to think that the greatest blessing now needed by that section is the predominance of the Republican party in its borders.

I will not discuss or dispute about the propriety of that sentiment now. But I will say this: if you desire to have the South join the Republican party show your friendship by beneficent acts of legislation. President Arthur, by his liberal and patriotic message on the Mississippi levees, has done a great deal toward producing a more kindly feeling toward the Republican party on the part of the South. So have the concurring votes and voices of Republican Senators on this floor. I do not object to your making the Republican party popular in Mississippi by such acts. I am a Democrat. I expect to remain so; but I love my State and its people more than I do any party. If you can make her Republican by adopting policies which aid her people to become prosperous and great I shall be content.

Mr. President, the State of Mississippi now raises about $50,000,000 worth of cotton each year; she is capable of raising $300,000,000 worth. But this increase in her crop is not desirable at present. It would reduce the price in the present state of the demand and supply far below what it would cost to raise it. But she has in her borders now unemployed labor, consisting of those who are unfit for work in her cotton-fields, sufficient to manufacture, with proper machinery, the larger portion of her crop. In ordinary goods the manufactured would be worth thrice the raw material, making her cotton crop, if all were manufactured, produce $150,000,000.

This great gain is denied us by reason of our inability to buy the necessary machinery. Repeal the duties on it, and not only in Mississippi but throughout the South and West would grow up factories giving employment to unemployed labor, and a home market to productions which can be easily raised. Is there any reason why this should not be done? Other sections have had the benefit of protecting and fostering legislation, of favoring tariff laws. Till the present time the South has borne the burdens and received none of the benefits of protection.

The result is that the North is immensely rich and the South remains poor. It is time to change this system. We ask no advantage of the North. We ask no bounty from the Treasury, but that we shall have free trade in that which is essential to manufacturing. You admit now free of duties the raw material to encourage manufactures. We have the raw material; we ask free trade only in the instruments of manufacturing. Justice and fairness require that our demand should be acceded to. We have a right to equality in the favors of the Government. We do not get it when we are taxed for the benefit of enterprises in other sections and are denied the only relief that can aid enterprise in our own.

Another provision in this amendment deserves the approval of the Senate; it is the repeal of the duty on cotton-ties. I have shown you that cotton raising has been in the past in the main unremunerative; that taking the whole period since the war it has been a loss. Cotton culture is the most exacting of all work. From the beginning of the year to the end the labor is continuous and exacting. There are no holidays, no seasons of comparative leisure. Every day has its duty which must be performed. It is also the most uncertain of all crops. In the spring there is often a loss of a proper "stand" by cold nights and insects. In the summer it will be ruined by excessive rain, and is subject to the depredation of the army and cotton worm.

In the autumn, when an abundant crop seems almost assured, an early frost will cut off the yield one-half; and still later, when the fields are white with its snowy fleeces, a heavy rain or a storm will destroy it. It is besides almost as inflammable as gunpowder, and after it has been gathered and housed a mere spark from a friction match or the pipe of a careless laborer will consume in a few moments that which it cost a year's labor to produce. It may be said that the tax on the ties is insignificant, but it will amount to a large sum in the aggregate. Besides being an initial tax levied at the custom-house it augments the price in the hands of each dealer by the profits which he charges and must charge on the advance. The importer has his profit, the wholesale dealer his, the jobber his, and the retailer his. And then there is transportation and interest. I know that in actual course of trade the price is more than doubled. The repeal of the tax would be a great relief. The small sums saved would furnish a necessary comfort or a cheap luxury to those who have very little of either. The little insignificant sums which the rich throw away constitute the treasures of the poor. More than one-half of the cotton produced in Mississippi is raised by our colored people, working not for wages, but either as tenants or for a share of the crop. The tax falls heavily on them.

In the main they are without property, without land, without work stock, without farming implements, and without credit except at that excessive rate consequent on a precarious security. They have been enfranchised by the power of the Government, made citizens, equal in rights and privileges with all others. But, sir, it seems the care of the Government for them has stopped there. They, in common with their white neighbors, have been made the victims of a taxing system which allows them but little chance to better their condition in life. It is the desire of every thoughtful Southern man that our colored population should acquire property, become interested in the country. My own opinion is that this is essential not only to their welfare but to the safety of the State. Is it too much to ask that the taxing policies of the Government should be made to favor and hasten this desirable end?

A majority of my constituents are colored. It is my duty as well as my pleasure to represent their interests here with the same fidelity that I represent the whites. The interests of both races are identical. A tax levied on the one falls equally on the other. I have called especial attention to them, because this tax presses directly on a majority of that race, and from their poverty they are especially injured by its imposition.

Mr. President, the amendment also proposes a great measure of relief to the farmers throughout the country. It proposes to allow them to buy their tools and implements wherever they can buy them cheapest. This, sir, is a just measure, and should receive the assent of every Senator on this floor. The price of all the great staples of the farmer in ordinary seasons is fixed not by the home market, so much boasted of, but by the markets in Europe. Except in years of scarcity, of misfortune to the farmer, of crops disastrously short, the surplus of farm products not needed in this country would, without a foreign market, be so great as to depress prices below the point where farming would be profitable.

We have fostered manufactories. I make no complaint now of that. We are certain to continue this policy for many years. The amount necessary to be raised to pay the national debt and for carrying on the Government is so large that it would be almost impossible to levy duties and imposts without protection to manufactures. There is no foreign competition to wheat, corn, oats, barley, cotton, beef, and hog products. You can only favor and protect these industries in the mode suggested in the amendment, by relieving them from unnecessary and burdensome taxes.

Farmers, sir, rarely if ever grow rich. The most they can hope for after years of hard toil, close economy, and the severest self-denial is a comfortable independence. Their gains are slow and small. Their fortunes when at the highest do not amount to the yearly income of men in more favored pursuits. A farmer whose whole fortune equals the annual salary of a Senator is considered fortunate. It seems therefore to be a high duty resting on us to give them the relief asked for in this amendment. To this it would be well to add a repeal of all taxes on barbed wire fit for fencing and on the round wire out of which it is manufactured. This would be a great boon to the farmers of the West, and in fact to the whole country, since it would greatly cheapen fences and put a stop to the enormous waste of our forests in the draughts made on them for timber suitable for fencing.

Mr. President, I desire to say with emphasis and with all the earnestness inspired by a profound sense of the wrongs inflicted on farmers by our taxing system, and the deepest sympathy with that overtaxed and neglected portion of my countrymen, that there is no measure of relief which we can devise, no fostering, no aid which we can give to that interest which ought not to command at once our favorable action. I was born in that class; I have never separated myself from it. My ancestors to the remotest generations belonged to it; the name I bear is significant of their calling; that is also the assured destiny of my descendants; a majority of my constituents belong to it; a majority of my countrymen are a part of it. So, sir, I am impelled not only by high considerations of public duty but by my sympathies as a man, by my associations, by the love of those who are near and dear to me, to urge upon the Senate the adoption of all measures which will tend to ameliorate the condition of the agriculturists of the country.

There is yet another provision in the amendment to which I desire to call the earnest attention of the Senate and to ask for it their favorable action. It is a repeal of all taxes on the tools used by mechanics in manual labor. We hear a great deal said about our duty to protect American manufactures. I want to protect and encourage American mechanics, the workers who create our manufactures. I shall not go into the question of how much protection given to manufactures goes to the laborer who creates them. I do not know that I am capable of doing so. I do not know that I can see through this intricate and involved subject and find how or to what extent the tax levied to protect the thing affects the man who, for wages, creates that thing as the property of another. I do not know how much of the profit directly gained from protection by the capitalist who owns the mill is allowed to go incidentally to the laborer who works in it. This is an intricate, not to say an unknown subject; at least it is unknown to me. Those who are curious on this subject will find it ably and fairly discussed in a speech made in the other House on this subject on the 3d day of May last, by Hon. S. S. Cox, and to that I refer them. I learn this, however, from the history of the times: that the protected capitalist realizes enormous gains; in some instances, as shown by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] in his speech made in this Chamber a few days ago, as much as 77 per cent. per annum. We know they are growing richer and richer every day.

But how is it with the laborer who is said to enjoy this protection? Are they becoming independent? Are they well lodged, well clothed, and well fed? Do their children enjoy such advantages as are useful or necessary to advance them in life? Let the numerous strikes recently and even now prevailing over the country answer. These strikes are the solemn and earnest protest of those who know more of this business than we do, against the unequal division between capital and labor of the gains arising from protection. Shall we assume that there is no just cause for this protest? Shall we assume that labor out of an aggressive and communistic spirit rebels against fair wages and refuses to perform its share in the creation of wealth; that it elects idleness and starvation in lieu of work and plenty?

Large bodies of men never make complaints without just cause. They never undertake to right themselves in a way which puts at peril their daily support, their food and raiment, unless there be a real grievance.

That the relations between capital and labor, between the master and the workman, are unsatisfactory I believe is admitted. It will ever be so, till the large mass of workmen can secure the means of labor and support independent of the will of the master. When there are no other means of living for large numbers, there must be conflict and antagonism. Labor must be as free to decline employment at insufficient wages as the master is to refuse to hire it at what he deems excessive prices. In no other way can they treat on equal terms. Capital idle and unemployed, it is true, gains nothing; it may even lose; but the absence of gain or the actual loss brings no want, no pressing and emergent circumstances to the capitalist. He may wait and watch, secure against such loss as threatens either his comfort or his fortune, and secure also in the assurance that in the end he will be the victor.

Unemployed labor means, in no short period, hunger and pauperism. Thus circumstanced, the parties are not on equal terms, even when labor can (as it rarely or never does) combine as one man to enforce its demands.

I know of no better alleviation of this evil, no better way of equalizing these antagonistic forces, than to encourage and foster such means as will enable labor to work, if even at a disadvantage, independently, combining in some degree the characters and functions of capital and labor. It aids in this direction that the laborer should be the owner of the tools by which he can ply his trade.

Sir, I look with alarm at the modern tendency of affairs to destroy these independent laborers carrying on business for themselves and the absorption of all such in large workshops under a master. I fear this tendency cannot now be successfully resisted. The perfection of the many curious and useful inventions to save human labor, the substitution of the steam-engine and machinery for human muscle and human intelligence, the greater efficiency of labor coming from its subdivision, all tend more and more to put all trades, all mechanical work under the control of large capitalists and in great shops.

It will, however, aid in making labor less dependent if the laborers, or a large part of them, may escape the thralldom and, even though but for a short season, live on their independent resources. Whatever will help this should receive our sanction. Grave as the social and economic questions are to which I have alluded as connected with this subject, there are yet other considerations which demand such action on our part as will enable every mechanic in this broad land to be the owner of the tools with which he works.

There are scattered all over our country hundreds of thousands of mechanics who do not work in these large shops, and who are independent of bosses and masters for employment. They are blacksmiths, carpenters, wheelwrights, plasterers, painters, saddlers, shoemakers, ginwrights, makers and repairers of furniture, and many others. They are useful members of society. They add to the wealth of the nation by their toil. Each of these, when he has the means to purchase the instruments by which he labors, may be an independent contractor or manufacturer; or at all events he has the power to resort to that as a protection against the demands and exactions of his employer.

In behalf of this large and meritorious class this amendment appeals with great force. The enlargement of this class will be well for the Republic; the power to go into it at will is a great conservative force, tending to a nearer equality in the conditions of labor and capital in their mutual relations.

The first effect, as I have shown, of the many inventions of this age has been to create large shops, in which there are many laborers under one master. But we have just begun the great work of the conquest by man of the powers and forces of nature and the subjugation of them to his own use. I believe further progress will lead in the opposite direction and that at last the end will be attained when this subjugation will be so complete, when these forces will be so tamed and trained to obedience to man, that they will be made to aid in human work in that way, in which each worker may have their full, free, and beneficent effect, either by his own individual exertion or by a voluntary co-operation with others, which no economic or financial laws can prevent.

Sir, this may be a Utopian dream, or it may be prophecy. But whether one or the other is for the determination of the future. It is certain, however, that the conditions of the present are in an opposite direction. It is our duty to deal with the present and its hard and stubborn and uncomforting facts. This opposite tendency cannot be wholly destroyed by legislation. We are in that era in the world's progress in which great capital employing large numbers of laborers is the rule. But, like all other ills, it may be ameliorated, though not destroyed. The best means to do this is to foster and encourage so far as we may independent workers in independent employments.

Mr. President, I am no enemy to capital, but its friend. I know, sir, that capital is but the result of saved or stored-up labor, prepared for the world's use while production is going on. I know it is a great blessing, even essential to progress. I know, also, that men will not save, will not produce capital unless it is protected, fully and efficiently protected. Civilization itself cannot be maintained without securing to each man the productions of his own enterprise, intellect, labor, and self-denial. It is this security which creates capital. Destroy it and you destroy civilization itself.

The beneficent and proper use of capital is the greatest of all economic blessings. Its influence and power are felt everywhere in all the relations and affairs of life. There is no interest or business, however great, none however small, beyond the control of this power and influence. Like the atmosphere in which we live, they are ubiquitous, pervading all places at all times and in all seasons, enveloping all interests, all occupations, all affairs. Like that same atmosphere, when this power and influence are rightly and justly exercised they give health, strength, and vigor to all social, all economic, all political forces; but when perverted to improper and selfish ends, like the same atmosphere freighted with malaria, they poison and destroy all within their baleful sway. Capital has its high trusts and its grand duties as well as its just rights. It is a law of nature that it cannot abdicate or abuse the former without imperiling the latter.

In too many instances capital has abused its great powers. It controls the transportation of the country, a high public duty, in its own interests too often in disregard of the rights and interests of the people. It has, under the false plea of protecting American labor, taxed all industries to secure enormous gains for itself. It has, for the purposes of speculation, depressed or enhanced prices at its will. It has controlled elections, dictating who shall sit in the high places of public trust. It owns and controls influential newspapers. It has the ablest and most distinguished advocates to plead its cause before the committees of Congress and the State Legislatures, and exercises a large influence on legislation, both State and national. It has forgotten that being the creature of society and owing its safety and preservation to government it is a servant and not a master.

The American people mean to protect and secure capital as a necessary element of progress and even of civilization, but they reject its pretensions to domination. They do not mean that this shall be a nation of lordly millionaires and servile and obedient paupers. They mean to encourage labor, skill, and enterprise by securing to every one his own gains, whether coming from his own exertions or those of his ancestors; but they mean also that every citizen in this broad land shall have the fair opportunity by his own exertions of securing such a share of the world's goods as may be necessary for his comfortable existence. They mean that the blessings of government, its fostering care and protection, shall come to all equally. They mean that the burdens of government shall also be borne by all equally; that the rich shall have their wealth as the result of legitimate enterprise and labor, not by governmental donations or favors, and that the poor shall be poor from their own fault or misfortunes, and not from governmental exactions. Whoever shall seek for more than this will be resisted and destroyed; whoever is content to receive less has sold his birthright and already forfeited his title to American citizenship.

This bill seems to have been expressly framed in the interest of capital and against the interest of the great mass of our people. The taxes it proposes to repeal are in the main taxes on capital. It relieves banks and those who have money to deposit in banks. It relieves men who have patented for their own profit, or keep a secret from the world, remedies or pretended remedies for sickness and disease, speculators in the misfortunes and ills of the human race. It relieves the fops and coxcombs of society whose delicate and æsthetic natures are shocked if but a plain laborer "shall come between the wind and their nobility," by furnishing them free of tax the lavenders, perfumes, and cosmetics, the use of which is at once the sign, the cause, and the effect of the decay of a vigorous manhood.

The only boon held out to the laborer is the repeal of the tax on lucifer matches—a tax so small, so inappreciable in its effect on prices as to be incapable of expression in any coin in use in this country, as was well shown the other day by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.] I have wondered, sir, why this tax was disturbed. As was demonstrated by the Senator from Delaware, there is no economic or financial reason for its repeal, and so far as I can see there is no reason connected with human affairs, none pertaining to the interests of this world, which could have inspired it. Possibly it may be that the true reason was a provident wish to hasten the entire consumption and destruction of sulphur, a material supposed by some to have an important agency in the world to come in making uncomfortable those who have oppressed or plundered the poor in this.

The bill gives no relief to the farmers or to the laborers of the country. On the contrary, it increases their already too heavy burdens.

The title of the bill, "An act to reduce internal taxes," is a sham and a false pretense in everything except in its relief from just taxation of those most able to bear it, while leaving all others to that long-delayed and contingent relief to come, if it ever comes, in the remote hereafter, when no one shall have an interest in further opposing it.

Mr. President, I shall vote against this bill as it passed the House and as amended by the committee of the Senate. I see in it a favoritism and subservience to capital and a disregard and contempt of all other interests. We are promised relief to other interests hereafter; but, sir, I am not willing to accept promises of relief for the farmers and laborers of the country in exchange for the performance made in behalf of the favorites of this bill. We are told, sir, it is too late in the session to go into the investigation and discussion necessary to grant relief to those who are denied it by this bill.

Sir, if it be necessary, in order to do the public business, in order to pass a measure which shall do equal justice to all the great interests of this country, let the session be prolonged until December. I am unwilling to go home and meet my constituents with the plea that my ease or convenience or private affairs prevented me from enacting laws necessary for their welfare and prosperity. Besides, sir, the people are not responsible for the introduction of this bill at this late day. It is our fault, or rather the fault of the House of Representatives, that this bill has not been sent here earlier. We are not at liberty by any rule known to me to plead our own negligence, our want of fidelity to the high trusts imposed on us in excuse for a further and premeditated dereliction of duty. The people will accept no such excuse, and they ought not to accept it.

Mr. President, I have another serious objection to the passage of this bill in its present shape. The bill is so manifestly in the interests of the money power of the country that its passage by the American Congress will tend greatly to increase the antagonism between labor and capital and to encourage a spirit of communism as the only remedy for oppressed labor. I think the antagonism is too great now. I fear, sir, it threatens serious danger in the near future.

Our free institutions are based upon the theory of the equality of all citizens before the law, equality in civil and political privileges, equality in the burdens and benefactions of government. This equality, as the American people understand it and mean to have it understood and acted on by their servants, must be actual, not theoretical merely—a living, acting, operating principle, originating, guiding, and controlling all legislation and all governmental action. It recognizes inequalities in the conditions of men arising from a difference in natural endowments, in the energies, in the activities, and self-denial of men. It does not ignore that the gifts of fortune are frequently but the acquisition of superior ability, greater exertions, and a more complete self-denial; and that the misfortunes of life are too often traceable to the faults or mistakes of the unfortunate. But, sir, it requires so far as the action of government is concerned that every citizen shall be treated exactly alike, and that every one shall be secured in the fair and equal opportunity to work out his own destiny, to gain for himself that competence and independence necessary for his happiness.

The best security for capital, therefore, in a free country having universal suffrage, is in that just and fair operation of the laws by which the great mass of the people shall either possess or have the fair opportunity of possessing for themselves by their own exertions so much of capital as may be necessary to make life comfortable and to furnish a security against want in old age. Whoever is thus situated is necessarily a friend of property. Communism is not a natural sentiment; it is the outgrowth of unjust and unequal laws. By nature every human being is endowed with that selfishness which makes him desire to be the owner of property himself—to be its master and controller, even as against his own children.

Property is not only comfort and independence but it is power. Men love all these. Hence, sir, the strong conservative force which protects property even when possessed and used in the most objectionable and offensive manner.

But, sir, the contrary results from opposite premises. Let the great mass of the people be without property and without hope of obtaining property; let them be without comfort in their homes, and without homes even, except the miserable lodgings of the poor in the great cities; let their utmost exertions be expended in procuring a scanty and mean subsistence; let them be without hope of bettering their condition and without aspirations for themselves or their children; let them see, sir, that their unhappy lot may be attributed to the injustice of their government—you then have, sir, the conditions which produce communism.

The wretched victims of such a state of affairs embrace despairingly their inevitable doom. They feel no interest in society which thus treats them. They compare their miserable condition with the more happy lot of the property-holder, and seek—madly it may be, but they nevertheless seek—an alleviation of their distress in an attempt to reduce all others to an equal and common wretchedness.

This, sir, is the real danger of communism. That which springs from the false philanthropy of a Utopian philosophy is harmless. It makes no converts. It has no followers but the ingenious sophists who waste their lives in work no more substantial than the aerial architecture of dreams.

It may be said, sir, there is no danger now; but, sir, there is always danger, near or remote, where there is injustice. Already, sir, from the criminal prodigality with which we have granted away so many millions of acres of our public lands has the difficulty of acquiring homesteads by the poor and unfortunate been largely increased. The cheap and easy acquisition of homesteads from the public domain has been our safety in the past; it has prevented pauperism to a large extent; it has increased production; it has enhanced the consumption of our manufactures; it has furnished cheap food to labor.

In a short time, sir, this resource will be exhausted. The lands will be all taken up or held at such prices by the corporations to whom they have been granted, that their acquisition and settlement by the poor will be impossible. Our fertile lands are being exhausted by a cultivation which looks only to present gains. Our population is increasing at an enormous rate. We will soon be a hundred million. Is it wise to wait till the danger is at our door before taking measures against it? It is better, it is wiser to so act as to keep it forever away.

You cannot repress it by a standing army organized to shoot down the hungry crying for bread, and the miserable, frantic and frenzied by want and a sense of injustice. You cannot make war on your own people. You cannot satisfy the cravings of hunger nor bring content to misery and wretchedness by the immolation of a few victims by way of a terrifying example. These methods will not do in a free country.

The only thing left us is the best thing; that is, to administer the Government with justice and equity to all its citizens, to so foster and advance its industries among all its people and in every part of the Union as to cause each American citizen to feel and know that there is room in this broad land and under her beneficent institutions for him to win by his own honorable exertions that comfort and independence, without which it is a mockery to tell him he is free and the equal of all others; and to cause him further to feel and know that in its benefactions and its burdens the Government has no step-children and no favorites. Because this bill is not of this character, but on the contrary confers its benefits on favorites who do not need them, and not only denies benefits but imposes burdens on others equally entitled to the protection of the laws, I shall vote against it, unless these objections be removed by amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to the amendment of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK. As there seems to be some confusion relative to the amendment that I offered and the exact form of it, I now desire to so far modify it as to insert what I send to the desk to be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. Insert after the word "taxes" in line 18:

Now imposed by law on manufactured tobacco on and after January 1, 1883; from and after that date the tax on manufactured tobacco shall be ten cents per pound; and.

Mr. BECK. So as to read:

The taxes now imposed by law on manufactured tobacco on and after January 1, 1883; from and after that date the tax on manufactured tobacco shall be ten cents per pound, and on capital and deposits of banks and bankers, except such taxes as are now due and payable; and on and after the 1st day of October, 1882, the stamp tax on bank-checks, drafts, orders, and vouchers, and the tax on matches, perfumery, medicinal preparations, and other articles imposed by Schedule A following section 3437 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from Kentucky if he will not in the spirit of good order and convenience make that amendment of his apply to section 3, which reduces the taxes on cigars and cigarettes?

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I propose if this amendment is carried to insert "cigars at $3 a hundred;" it may be that $3.50 would be better. I think cigars have been since 1879 left at too high a tax, and I am not sure that it would not be wiser to make the tobacco tax either 8 or 12 cents rather than 10, so that the reduction would be one-fourth or one-half, for the convenience of putting up packages as provided by existing law.

Mr. SHERMAN. What I wish is to have the amendment proposed to the third section instead of the first.

Mr. BECK. I announced the other day that my desire was to endeavor to get a vote upon what I regard as a proposition that would give substantial relief to a large class of our people before we were called upon to consider the proposition of the committee, in order to test the sense of the Senate as to a fair system of relief, because I am willing to vote for some of the propositions of the House of Representatives as amended by the Committee on Finance, but I do not desire to be compelled to vote for them in the first instance, regarding them as secondary only to the main questions. I would be willing to adopt some of them as parts of a system of reduction, and I am disposed, with the views I entertain, to test the sense of the Senate first upon a substantial proposition such as the reduction of the present tobacco tax; and I may as well say now why I think it is proper as at any other time.

Mr. FRYE. What is the present tax upon manufactured tobacco?

Mr. BECK. It is now 16 cents a pound. I have no desire to detain the Senate from taking a vote on this proposition; there are a great many questions to be discussed and decided, and the session is far advanced. I have no speech to make. My general views are well known. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] the other day gave us a very able exposition of the whole system of taxation. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] last week and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] this morning have debated the general questions with such ability that I have no desire to say anything more in regard to them. I am not sure that I would even argue my own proposition relative to the reduction of the tobacco tax but for certain remarks made by gentlemen on the other side.

On last Friday the chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. MORRILL] chose to use this language:

It is perfectly obvious that we may remove all the taxes in the world, and unless we remove the tax on tobacco and whisky we do nothing substantial, according to the idea of the Senator from Kentucky. When we reduced the tax on tobacco from 24 cents to 16 cents a pound we had the pledge of that Senator and of various others that they would not ask for a further reduction upon tobacco for five years; yet now the Senator is the first one to make a proposition to reduce it over one-third.

I propose to answer that not very complimentary suggestion, and also a suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] who said:

It is as clear as day; we are not children here. This is a mere amendment to embarrass the regular order and framing of this bill. It has that effect. The first section relates simply to the proposition to repeal certain taxes imposed by stamps and also the tax on bank deposits. It does not relate to tobacco at all. It has nothing in it about tobacco.

The tone of both the gentlemen seemed to be that I had no object in view except to embarrass the bill, because of some special notions of mine about whisky and tobacco, and that unless I can get a reduction of those taxes I care nothing about anything else, however meritorious, and that I do not care whether or not the reductions reach anything else. I deny that I entertain any such purpose. I believe that we ought to have begun this work long ago, but though we have begun late "it is better late than never" to reduce taxes. I seek to reduce both internal-revenue taxes and tariff taxes by fair reductions that will be beneficial to all and injurious to none. This is the first of the series. I have offered amendments to clauses in the tariff part of the bill, where the committee seek to regulate and reduce the tax on sugar and increase it upon cotton-ties, and one or two other things. All my propositions I believe to be substantial and just amendments. One of them is to reduce the tax on Bessemer steel from $28 to $14 per ton. We shall by this quadruple the revenue, leave ample protection to the manufactures, and give to the country immense relief; with the 110,000 miles of railroad we have to repair the demands must always be enormous, even if we cease building. I have submitted propositions since the committee proposed to repeal section 3 of the act of 1875, to repeal section 4, and thus remove the taxes imposed in 1875, and restore them to where they were fixed by Congress in 1872. I will give good reasons why that should meet with general concurrence. I have submitted another proposition, which is that there shall be no tariff taxation above 50 per cent. ad valorem on imported goods not burdened by internal taxes, and have stated the schedules to which that shall apply. If that does not meet with favor I propose simply to reduce the tariff 10 per cent., as we did in 1872, with a further prospective reduction of 10 per cent. at the end of the next fiscal year, and I know there are very few, if any, interests that cannot stand that reduction. Returning to the question now up, I have proposed to reduce the tobacco tax to 10 cents a pound; I am willing, as I said, to make it 8 or 12. We cannot abolish the tax altogether, much as I desire it, because we must have revenue, and I think I will show that my proposition will not long impair the revenues, while it will be of substantial benefit to all the producers and consumers of the country. If all the tax on tobacco was removed no other interest could be relieved, and I do not propose to take $47,000,000 from a single item.

I propose to reduce the tax on distilled spirits from 90 cents to 50 or 60 cents, I care not which; 60 would perhaps be better as a proper measure of general relief and reduction. By doing that I hope to be able to prove that all the great manufacturing interests of the country will be benefited. Not one-third of what is called whisky is made for the purpose of table use or drinking. Everything that goes into the drugs of the country, everything that goes into varnishes, everything that goes into perfumery, or into the patent medicines, has alcohol in it as a large component part. You charge England with being a free-trade country, but the tax on whisky in all forms there is enormously high. She derives $160,000,000 from the tax on spirits made at home and imported, and when she seeks to send abroad exports composed in part of those taxed articles they go burdened with a heavy load of domestic taxes. If we reduce the tax on alcohol and distilled spirits from 90 to 50 cents, we can compete with her all over the West Indies, South America, China, Japan, and elsewhere, in everything composed in part of alcohol in any form, and build up an enormous trade in very many important articles which we are losing now, and thus add to the trade and profits to our home manufacturers, besides get a market away from home, which we so much need for manufactures. It is because I do not want to make child's play of this bill, and because we are not children here, as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] says, it is because I want to give substantial relief and not relief to but a few classes of men, that I am now seeking to get a vote, first, on the question of reducing the tax upon tobacco, to be followed up by other propositions in regard to snuff, cigars, distilled spirits, &c., and by the several amendments I have named relative to tariff taxation.

The bill as it came from the House and as it was reported to the Senate from the Finance Committee in the first instance, until in obedience to an order, a very wise order, from the Republican caucus it was amended, extended, and recommitted, was simply limited to the relief of the banks, the removal of the tax on matches, patent medicines, and bank checks. That was all there was in it. It seemed to me that the very fact that the Committee on Finance would submit a proposition of that sort to us for serious consideration in the midst of all the burdens of taxation pressing so heavily upon the country was treating the matter as though we were children. The Republican caucus evidently thought it was treating the Senate and the country with indecency, when they met and ordered the committee to take the miserable little bill back and put something in it that had some appearance of cutting off and removing burdens, and the committee had to obey orders the very next morning, because the caucus was wiser than the Republican leaders of the Finance Committee, and appreciated more fully how contemptible the little bankers' job was. I now propose to add other substantial, meritorious amendments, and ask consideration for them, and that is regarded by the fathers of the little bantling as indecorous and out of place, child's play, &c.

I ask the majority of the Finance Committee why they regard the abolition of bank taxes as being the only thing which it is worth while to consider in order to give relief to the people. Why limit our bounty to the bankers of the country? I am willing to relieve them in common with others; but why single them out? It is not a month yet since the House and Senate, at the request of the national banks, gave them an extension of their charters for twenty years, gave them privileges they never had before; indeed, did all they asked Congress to do. Take one example: under the present law, and the charters under which they are now living, they agreed that they would in six months after they went into liquidation, or after their charters expired, or whenever they ceased to use the franchise that we had given them, pay into the Treasury of the United States, in legal-tender notes, a sufficient sum of money to cover all their outstanding circulation. What did the Senate and the House do for them in regard to that? Congress said, "We will not ask you to comply with your contract; we will give you a new charter for twenty years longer, and you need not pay any of our money into the Treasury for three years; six months is too short a time, it is hard on you, and we do not need money." It was said that the extension was given to prevent a contraction of the currency, and yet at the same time and in the same bill Congress said that every bank of $50,000 or $100,000 or $150,000 capital which had before been required to deposit $50,000 in bonds of the United States in the Treasury might keep one-third only, $12,000, $20,000, $25,000 in bonds, and thus contract the currency infinitely more than the amount of notes required by existing law to be deposited could by possibility have done. What did Congress care, so the bankers made money? The average of the bank circulation is about $360,000,000. Five per cent. of that, in my judgment, has been lost or destroyed in the last twenty years; it belongs to the people of the United States. We were entitled to it; it was our money according to their contract, by the terms of their charters, and they were compelled to pay it to us within six months after their terms expired or they closed up the old account. We set all this aside in the bank-extension bill the other day, and said "You need not pay it in six months, keep it for three years; Congress will make you a present of it for two years and a half." Five per cent. on $360,000,000, as I figure it up, is $18,000,000. That is worth to them certainly 6 per cent., I think 10 per cent. At 6 per cent., by the two years and a half extension we gave them of money that belongs to the tax-payers, what amounts to $1,080,000 a year, or $2,700,000; or at 10 per cent. it would be to them $4,500,000. That, I repeat, Congress made them a present of, together with the twenty years' renewal charters. That money was wrongfully given away. With it in the Treasury we could have paid off bonds of the United States or any other obligations that we owed to that extent.

After having given these banks a new charter for twenty years and relieved them from the resposibility for paying up for all their outstanding currency at the end of six months, as they were compelled by law to do on the expiration of their charters or going into liquidation, we gave them what is equivalent to them at 6 per cent. of our own money $2,700,000, and if it is worth 10 per cent. $4,500,000. Ought they not be fully content? Is not that their full share? If we were going to extend relief to other people, after getting such a renewal of their charters, after getting such privileges as we gave them, not compelling the smaller banks to hold $50,000 of bonds as they are compelled to hold now, but reducing it down to $12,000, $20,000, or $25,000, to enable them to go on contracting the currency as they like, and after allowing them to keep money three years instead of six months, ought they not to have said "We have got our share of the reduction of burdens or of the privileges you choose to grant."

Yet further privileges and exemptions to bankers was all in the way of relieving the country that the Senate Finance Committee could see was necessary when it made its report on the 6th of July that ought to be laid before the Senate as a relief bill. The matches were cunningly flung in for buncombe. Now we are told if we ask anything else that we are interrupting the regular course and order of business, that we are seeking delay, acting like children, and interfering with what the wisdom of that committee has decreed ot be the only thing that ought to be done.

Why, sir, the bill would have been contemptible but for the fact that the Republican caucus saw in time that it was contemptible, and ordered the committee to report other reductions, to give the Senate a chance to consider more substantial things and not to be trifling with the country by making another relief bill for banks merely, while pretending to be dealing with the great questions of taxation. The caucus had learned, if the committee had not, that the people are at last aroused and are fast becoming informed on tariff and tax questions, and that it is not safe to trifle with them.

In all seriousness, let me ask, is there any merit in the proposition to relieve the patent-medicine men? Does any man suppose that the people are going to get a bottle of patent medicine a cent cheaper after you have taken off the tax, which now amounts to $1,800,000 a year? No. It is a monopoly now. The proprietors charge what they please. Nobody else can make it. The moment you take off that tax they pocket it. Their customers pay just as much. You put $1,800,000 in the hands of the men who own the patents; you might as well take it out of the Treasury and give it to them. The consumer of the medicines does not get one cent's benefit. That is another of the propositions that the Finance Committee of the Senate saw great merit in. If they would do what I ask them to do, reduce the tax on alcohol, which, being about double proof, now pays a tax of $1.70 a gallon, not quite twice 90 cents, for it is not entirely double proof, they would reduce the cost to the people of all the patent medicines, which are compounded and made up, at least nine-tenths of them, with alcohol. You would reduce the cost 30, perhaps 50, per cent. If you are going to give relief to the patent-medicine men, who seem to be such a meritorious set, let them pay for the privilege of the monopoly they now enjoy and reduce the cost of the materials; give them their alcohol at one-half or two-thirds of what they pay for it now, and then the competition of one patent medicine with another will give the consumers, if there is any value in it, the article from one-third to one-half less than they are getting it now; and you might enable them to build up a large export trade with Mexico, South America, and the other countries of the world.

But all such suggestions as these are child's play, says the Senator from Ohio; these are only the absurd notions the Senator from Kentucky entertains, says the Senator from Vermont. We, the solons of the Senate, will give the patent-medicine men the $1,800,000 the Treasury is receiving now, and we do not care whether the consumer gets the medicine any less or not; we are relieving burdens from a meritorious class of men. I suppose there is not one of these men who will not feel under great obligations when the circular from the Republican committee comes to him asking 2 per cent. of his earnings to give it for campaign purposes, and thank the committee to boot. They ought to feel as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] the other day said he thought the Bessemer-steel men ought to feel, and contribute liberally. Surely the national bankers when Congress has given them $2,700,000 at 6 per cent., or $4,500,000 at 10 per cent., in the extension from six months to two and a half years, will be expected to come down handsomely. Now, if we take the tax off their deposits and their capital they will be in as good a condition to contribute to the political fund as the Senator from Iowa thought the Bessemer steel men were. I see no merit in the committee's proposition beyond that.

Then the tax on matches it was doubtless thought would be a tub to the whale. Why, Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] grew eloquent in regard to that. I said there was nobody demanding it, and I repeat it; but he made a great strike for popularity, which I hope will be of service to him, and used this language on last Thursday:

> The Senator from Kentucky says we propose to repeal certain bank taxes. So we do. We relieve the corporations, not from the tax on circulation, which is the severe one upon them, but the tax on deposits and the tax on bank checks, which is a tax, not upon banks, but upon the business of banking, upon the people who do business with banks. We propose to repeal the tax on matches, which he says nobody has asked for. Why, sir, the whole country asks for it. Every Irishman who smokes his pipe after his dinner, every householder and adult citizen in this broad land asks for this repeal.
> The Senator, however, says he does not care about repealing this tax. If he does not want to repeal the match tax then let him propose instead to repeal or reduce the whisky tax. We will be glad to debate with him on that question.

He said:

> Every Irishman who smokes his pipe after his dinner, every householder and adult citizen in this broad land asks for this repeal.

I do not believe one word of it; but let me say to the Senator from Ohio if you reduce the tax on the tobacco that he puts into his pipe from 16 to 10 cents or 6 cents a pound, the 6 cents on that pound of tobacco, that will not last him a week, I do not care how moderately he smokes, will be a greater reduction than the reduction of the price of matches that he will get during the whole year by taking off the match tax. My relief to the Irishman who smokes a pipe, for whom the Senator from Ohio seems to be so nervously anxious, will give him more relief on a single pound of tobacco than the relief that the Senator proposes to give by taking the tax off matches will give him in a year, for a pound of tobacco will last him a week if he is a moderate smoker, and a half dozen boxes of matches will last him fifty-two weeks; 6 cents a pound on tobacco will give him fifty-two times the relief you propose to give him. I want no child's play about that.

Matches a burden! Why, sir, we are drawing over $3,000,000 a year from that single item. Nobody feels it, nobody knows anything about it, nobody is oppressed by it, nobody complains of it. But that was to be paraded as a great benefit to the Irishman who smokes a pipe, and all the poor men of the country were to be persuaded that they had been given immense relief, while the tax on their tobacco is to be kept up, the tax on their whisky is to be kept up, and every thing else is to remain heavily burdened, their blankets are to be still taxed 100 per cent., the railroads upon which they travel are to be taxed 100 per cent. in the interest of the Bessemer-steel monopolies, and yet Senators gravely pretend that we are going to give relief by reducing paltry taxes. It is like the proposition to reduce the tariff on Bessemer steel from $28 to $20 a ton, when $20 at the present price is about as absolute a monopoly as $28, and every well-informed man knows it. That is another pretense flung into this bill to head off my proposition for a reduction to $14. But returning to the proposition to reduce the tobacco tax and its bearings upon the revenue as well as its relations to other much needed reduction.

Mr. President, I would be glad to accept the views taken by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, Mr. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, who this morning sent me a very able speech that I had read before, delivered at the protective-tariff convention in New York on the 29th of November, 1881, in which he insisted upon the absolute abolition of the tobacco tax. He gave a great many reasons why it ought to be done, but his great object was the maintenance of protective-tariff duties by depriving us of all other revenue. I know, and the Senate knows, that we are in no condition now absolutely to repeal all the taxes on tobacco. It brings us in $47,000,000 of revenue annually. That much cannot be taken away from the revenue with safety from one article if we mean to give the relief to other articles that the interests of the country require should be given. Therefore, however willing I might be, if there were revenue enough without the imposition of still greater and more oppressive burdens, to agree with Mr. KELLEY and remove the tax on tobacco altogether, it is well known that we cannot do it, and it would be only a feeble effort to obtain temporary local popularity for any of us to advocate it.

The men who think that a proposition to remove the tobacco tax altogether will be popular in their respective neighborhoods will find that they are mistaken, because the people know that the tax has to be kept up to some extent, as revenue must be provided; and our revenues are no small matter now. Tobacco must furnish a reasonable proportion or other great interests must suffer.

I looked over the appropriations this morning, or rather caused the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations to look over them for me, and I find that, including the Post-Office, (though we get back some $40,000,000 of that by postal revenue,) we have already appropriated this year, saying nothing of the private pension bills and other bills we are passing, $293,000,000, nearly $75,000,000 more than we appropriated last year, to be reduced by about $40,000,000 to come in from the Post-Office. We are now away beyond the estimates of the Secretary. Our permanent appropriations are estimated at $126,202,939.22. The total for 1883, as shown by the books of the Appropriations Committee, up to this date is $419,202,939.22, even if we should adjourn to-day and not increase any of the bills we have yet to act upon. So our net surplus is not going to be so very great. Our revenues, however, have increased enormously during the last year. I sent to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue this morning for his receipts; I sent to the Register of the Treasury also, and from the report from the warrant division I find this state of things:

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, we collected from customs $198,159,676.02; we collected for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, $219,986,223.70. We collected from the internal revenue imposed, most of it from whisky and tobacco, $135,264,385.51 for 1881, and $146,436,377.80 for 1882. We collected from the sales of public lands $2,201,863.17 for 1881; $3,343,776.02 for 1882. We collected from miscellaneous items in 1881 $25,154,850.98, from the same miscellaneous items in 1882 $34,087,097.71. The total of our revenues collected for 1881 was $360,782,292.57, and the total for 1882 $403,853,475.23, $43,000,000 increase during the year just ended.

Our expenditures during the same years were in 1881 for civil and miscellaneous, $64,416,324.71; in 1882, $57,219,750.98; War Department, $40,466,460.55 in 1881; $43,570,494.19 in 1882; Navy Department, $15,686,671.66 for 1881; $15,032,046.26 for 1882; Indians, $6,514,-161.09 for 1881; $9,736,747.40 for 1882; pensions, $50,059,279.62 for 1881; $61,345,193.95 for 1882; interest on the public debt, $82,508,-741.18 for 1881; $71,077,206.79 for 1882; making the aggregate of net ordinary expenditures $260,712,887.59 in 1881, and $257,981,439.57 in 1882.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to whom, as I said, I sent this morning for information especially relative to the receipts from tobacco, was unable to give me in detail all his receipts for the fiscal year, but he says:

> TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
> OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
> Washington, July 17, 1882.
> DEAR SENATOR: I hand you statement in compliance with your request. The returns for June not having been received, I am unable to give you data for the fiscal year, so I have given figures for twelve months, ending May 31, 1882. I will soon be able to give details for the fiscal year and will take pleasure in furnishing you with the exact information required.
> Very respectfully,
> GREEN B. RAUM,
> Commissioner
> Hon. J. B. BECK, United States Senate.

The details are very satisfactory as to our receipts. The abstract is this:

> TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
> OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
> Washington, June 17, 1882.
> Statement showing the receipts from leading sources of revenue for the year ended May 31, 1882.

The receipts from the several sources cannot be given for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1882, as all the returns for June, 1882, have not yet been received. The receipts from the stamp tax on matches, bank checks, proprietary medicines, &c., cannot now be given separately.

GREEN B. RAUM,
Commissioner.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator know what was received from manufactured tobacco, the tax on which he proposes to strike down to 10 cents a pound?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir. Cigars, $18,146,279.24; cigarettes weighing less than three pounds per thousand, $967,309.23; snuff, $775,058.85; chewing and smoking tobacco, $24,995,670.54; all other sources relating to tobacco, $2,365,573.35.

These exhibits enable us to understand the present condition and the future probabilities of our resources. If we can grant relief to the people from taxation, largely decrease their taxes, and at the same time obtain a very large revenue, almost up to what we are now obtaining, if we do not give the relief, surely that is a wise thing to do. I know that I have been sneered at over and over again on the floor of the House and the Senate because I have made the statement I am now about to repeat, that whenever you impose a tax on any article at a very high rate cheating and smuggling will cut down the legitimate revenue; and when you reduce taxation to the revenue point consumption increases, the taxes are more honestly paid, and the revenue is better collected. When I attempted to obtain a reduction of the tax on chewing and smoking tobacco to 16 cents in 1872, being then a member of the Ways and Means Committee, the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] then chairman of the committee, fell into the error that others fall into. I will show you how that was, if Senators will bear with me.

In 1872 when we reduced by 10 per cent. the duties upon cottons, woolens, iron, and other articles, we gave much relief and did a great deal of good. Mr. Burchard, of Illinois, and others proved conclusively that we reduced taxes on the people $230,000,000; while the actual taxes taken off were only $43,000,000. The Treasury Department of course resisted and protested; the officials furnished the then chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DAWES] with a statement of the serious loss of revenue that would be caused by reducing the tobacco tax to 20 cents. It was then 16 and 32 cents, the great bulk of it being at 32; at least nine-tenths of it. The statement will be found in the speech of Mr. DAWES on the 16th of April, 1872, in the Congressional Globe of that day. They alleged and he insisted that $6,720,000 would be lost to the revenue if we reduced the tobacco tax even down to 20 cents. I did not believe it; I denied it in a speech I then made and insisted that it would do no such thing. I demanded reduction to 16 cents. The Senator from Massachusetts presented to the House on the authority of the Treasury Department this table to show the effect of the reductions proposed in 1872. I may as well read it. It is as follows:

Notwithstanding this exhibit the House by a vote of 153 to 52, on a call of the yeas and nays, reduced the tobacco tax to 16 cents. The bill was sent to the Senate. It fell, of course, into the hands of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] and of course they defeated the House proposition and made the tax 20 cents. The result was that we not only did not lose $6,720,000 by the reduction to 20 cents, as was predicted both in the House and the Senate, and as the Treasury Department declared we should, but we lost less than a million dollars the first year, and the next year we were $2,000,000 in advance; and the next year $4,000,000 in excess of what we received before we made the reduction.

Then 1875 came and the craze about the sinking fund took possession of the Senate and the House on the ground that we had not made any provision for the sinking fund. I wish I could take time to read the speech of the Senator from Ohio, in which he declared that the sinking fund was as sacred as a mortgage given on his property would be, that nothing ought to endanger it, and nothing should touch it, although we proved then by repeated official statements that we were by payments for that object nearly $228,000,000 ahead of its requirements. Still, under the pressure of providing for the sinking fund, so ably and artfully urged, Congress reimposed the tax on tobacco at 24 cents a pound. I again in my place protested that the revenues would not increase to the extent predicted, and it was soon proved that I was right. In 1879, when we put it back to 16 cents, the Senator from Vermont—I have his speech before me—denounced us pretty much as if we were robbers of the Treasury, seeking to take away $12,000,000 a year from the revenues. That was his assumption and charge; and he was backed by the Treasury Department, the Senator from Ohio being then Secretary of the Treasury. Document after document was sent to us to prove that we would virtually steal $12,000,000 out of the Treasury, and that the faith of the nation would be repudiated and the sinking fund would be ruined unless the tobacco tax was left at 24 cents. In 1875 they told us that we should obtain by the increased tax on tobacco $4,200,000 a year. We received less than $2,000,000. In 1879 they insisted that if we reduced it to 16 cents $12,000,000 would be taken from the Treasury. The Senator from Vermont on that occasion scouted the idea of any increase from increased consumption. Among other things he said:

The idea that any increased consumption will be stimulated to compensate for the proposed reduction of the duty must be regarded as wholly groundless. Its use at home and abroad is limited to a fixed and inflexible quantity. To obtain as much revenue for the present fiscal year from manufactured tobacco taxed at 16 cents as we obtained last year at 24 cents per pound there must be an increase of consumption from 105,500,736 pounds to 158,250,988 pounds per annum, or a gain in the amount consumed of 52,750,252 pounds. There is no sane man who cannot see that this is an impossibility. There can be no increase of consumption until we have an increase of population, nor then unless that population becomes addicted to and afflicted by the use of tobacco.

Again he said, (I hope he will adhere to it now when we have more revenue than we need, and are therefore devising how to reduce taxes:)

Mr. President, whenever the Treasury shall be in a condition to cut off revenue, there is no Senator who will more gladly hail the day or more cheerfully join in the reduction of taxation than myself.

I want some reduction more of burdens than of revenue on tobacco and whisky, to be followed by relief in other things with increase of revenue.

I propose when the proper time comes to act on Bessemer steel, to reduce the tax down to an average of 50 per cent. of what it now is, or to $14 a ton from $28, which I will show will largely increase the revenue. After the speech of the Senator from Vermont, I expect him to vote with me, but I doubt whether the expectation will be realized. I will bring Bessemer steel within the principle of the following remarks of the Senator:

If I could accept the arguments deemed by some sufficient for a reduction, they would be conclusive with me for the full and complete repeal of the tax. The internal-revenue taxes and duties on imports are measures which can be most properly considered together, and when the time arrives that we can part with millions, let us be sure that burdens the most onerous are those first to be removed.

This was in 1879. We did reduce the tax on tobacco then; we made it 16 cents; and what happened? Instead of losing the $12,000,000 which the Senator said we would lose, we lost less than $1,000,000 the first year, and the second year we were $2,000,000 ahead at 16 cents over what we were at 24 cents, and the third year we were $5,000,000 in advance, and this is the fourth year, and we receive now $9,000,000 more revenue at 16 cents than we received at 24 cents. I wonder if the Senator still calls that robbery of the Treasury. Let me give a specimen of how men were oppressed, before that reduction, by the increase in 1875. Tobacco in 1879 had fallen so low that from 1875 the best quality had fallen from 13 down to 8 cents; that known as good from 12 down to 7½ cents; the medium from 10 down to 6 cents; common, from 7 down to 4 cents; what was known as lugs from 5 down to 2 cents. In order to induce Senators to vote as they did, and to show that the existing tax on common tobacco was ruinous, I said to the Senate, among other things:

I read from a very able article, signed by J. T. Johnson, president, and Thomas H. Wright, secretary, in which they give information that speaks louder than all the arguments that can be made. They say:

"Several million pounds of leaf tobacco have been sold this year at an average of 3 cents. This tobacco, after deducting the transportation to market, warehouse expenses, inspections, commissions, and charges, cannot possibly net more than 14 cents per pound, leaving little or nothing to the producer for the year's hard labor of himself and family. In the last week in November a manufacturer in Cincinnati bought at open market in Louisville 100,000 pounds of leaf tobacco at 2 cents per pound, paying therefor $2,000. This, after paying the freights and all the expenses on such a quantity, would not net the producers over $500, which amount is less than the same quantity of hay would have brought. Upon this amount of an agricultural product, $500, the manufacturer who bought it will be required to pay the Government a tax of $24,000.

"Was there ever such a tax? Twenty-four thousand dollars added to the value of a farm product for which the farmer received only $500! And who pays it? The poor laboring-men of the country, whose wages have been reduced fully one-half what they were. They, in the main, pay it. Thus out of these oppressed farmers, and mainly the poor laboring-men of the country, has been wrung during the past year over $41,000,000."

The Senate took that view of it, and in spite of all the protests of the Senator from Ohio and of the Senator from Vermont the tax was reduced to 16 cents. I do not like to read my own speeches, but I said at that time:

I know that all the statements made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the men who are backing him, as to the loss of revenue, are exaggerations. I feel confident that if the tax remains as it is now we will not obtain as much revenue in the next three years—certainly not in the next five or six—as we will if it is reduced to 16 cents.

My words have not only been verified but we are receiving nine millions more:

The same outcry as that made by the present Commissioner was made by the equally intelligent Commissioner who was in power in 1872, (Mr. Douglass,) to the effect that we would lose $6,720,000 if we reduced it to 20 cents then. Yet we gained instead of losing by the change. We will not gain the first year by the proposed reduction and we may lose a little for two or three years; but in five years we will be $5,000,000 ahead of what we are receiving now. But, Mr. President, we are called agitators. Are people to cease agitating in the midst of sufferings like these? It is impossible. The Commissioner has portrayed very truthfully the effect of agitation.

The Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Ohio now repeat the same arguments against me to-day that they did then, "agitation," "child's play," "nonsense;" all wisdom is concentrated in the Treasury Department! They announce that we shall lose revenue largely by my proposition now. I again deny it. The present Committee on Ways and Means of the House and the Committee on Finance of the Senate—I mean of course the majority on each—do not think there is any merit in giving relief to men who raise tobacco or any other agricultural product. All the relief they regard as necessary is to relieve bankers and patent-medicine venders, take the tax off matches, and tell the people that they are going to help every poor Irishman to light his pipe; but they refuse to take any of the tax off one of the great agricultural products of the country, the cultivation of which is as legitimate as the production of anything else. Its export alone brings in more money than all the balance of trade in our favor, even in the most flourishing times.

I repeat now, Senators, as I said in 1879, and as the facts have proved I said truly, that when you reduce this tax you add to the profits of the producers of tobacco, as reduction did 2 cents a pound at once in 1879, when we made the reduction of the tax to 16 cents. Reduce it now to 12 and you will of course reduce the price to the consumer; you will increase consumption; you will aid export; you will aid everything connected with the trade. You will give relief reaching far up into the millions of dollars and lose really nothing.

I read on the floor of the House at one time a report made by the Committee on Ways and Means in 1868, when the tobacco tax was imposed, in which they said to producers of tobacco, "All we ever want to produce from any tobacco tax is $25,000,000." Tobacco has been producing forty millions some years; thirty-three millions some years; thirty-five millions others; now $47,000,000. Surely when we can afford it we ought to give them reasonable relief. This was our committee's pledge. They consented to be taxed to pay war debts and obligations. The war is over; the interest on the national debt, which was once $150,000,000 a year, is now only $58,000,000. Our whole debt was then $2,700,000,000; now it is less than $1,700,000,000. It is said I promised not to ask a further reduction for five years if the tax was put at 16 cents. I said then and say now if the revenues of the country reqnire it and taxes have to be kept up tobacco is a legitimate object of taxation and ought to pay its fair share, and unless there was a surplus of revenue I would not ask for a reduction on it now.

I think it unfortunate that either at Chicago or New York last fall promises were held out by protective-tariff agitators of a reduction of the taxes on whisky and tobacco. I think the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, in the speech I hold in my hand, made in New York, did himself and his adherents no good and did the country great injury by telling the people to agitate for the removal of the whisky tax and the tobacco tax and all other internal taxes, so that he could keep up his tariff on pig-iron and other things and make them as highly protective as possible. I think he made a great mistake when he did it, but it is done, and we should do what is best for all under the circumstances. The revenues will permit reduction. Producers and consumers of tobacco ought to have their share of the benefits of the reduction. They are numerous and in all parts of the country. The benefit will be equally distributed and therefore just. While it will amount to a million or two of revenue reduction, as I admit it will, for a year or so, it will at 12 cents in five years—I think in three—come back to the forty-five, forty-six, or forty-seven millions that it yields now. I have no doubt about it. It was because I wanted to present this question fairly at the beginning of the consideration of this bill that I desired this amendment brought up now; and if it meets with favor I will aid the committee in giving some of the relief they seem to have so much at heart.

I should be glad, as I said before, to take the tobacco tax off altogether. It would be very popular in Virginia, North Carolina, and Kentucky. We raise in Kentucky 40 per cent. of all the tobacco raised in the United States, and nothing would gratify our people more than to have me vote for and advocate the total abolition of the tax, the removal of the espionage connected with it, and the removal of all the hardships and oppressions that they complain of as resting upon them; but I know it cannot be done. I do not propose to seek to accomplish impossibilities even to gain temporary popularity.

There is another thing that I urged in the House time and again, and passed in that body once or twice, but never could have favorably considered in the Senate, that is to allow the producer to sell his own tobacco to whomsoever he pleased. The Senate would not agree with the House on that. I admit that there would be the greatest difficulty in collecting the revenue if that was carried out absolutely, because there would be no trace of tobacco thus sold. We at that time had very heavy taxes upon peddlers and upon retail dealers; we have reduced them until they are nominal. This bill proposes to reduce them still further. I would reduce them down to a mere nominal sum, $1, $2, $5, anything that kept them within the control of the Government and made them give an account of the tobacco they sold, because while we should protect the man who raises tobacco we must take care to see that the man who manufactures the tobacco and pays taxes on it to us, and sells it tax paid, is not cheated by smuggling. Each man in a great system like this must give up something of his rights in order to protect the rights of others; and unless we have some guard so that the tobacco can be traced and the untaxed product kept out of the market, I agree that our revenues are in danger and the men who are paying the heavy taxes would be the main sufferers, as they must compete against all the tobacco that gets upon the market clandestinely.

That proposition, while it is popular, while I have thought of it a great deal and have desired to do it if I possibly could, does not seem to me to be one of the things that can now be done; but the reduction that I propose (and I think 8 cents would be better than 10, to make it half the present rate, so that packages could be divided, they are put up in particular packages, and I am not sure that 12 cents would not be better than 10) or some reduction ought to be made. Ten cents struck me as being the proper reduction when I offered the amendment. However that is, some reasonable reduction on tobacco ought to be had.

I agree that there is merit in some of the propositions relative to bank taxes, and especially that as to the tax on capital. I have never believed that to be a just and equal tax. I will tell the Senate why I think so.

The capital stock of the national banks is $462,000,000, their individual deposits $1,070,000,000; the capital of banks other than national banks is $210,000,000; the deposits of banks other than national banks is $1,527,000,000. The tax paid by national banks on deposits is $4,940,000, the tax on the capital of the national banks is $431,000. The tax on the capital of banks other than national banks is $811,000. The injustice, according to my idea, consists in this that banks other than national, with a capital of only $210,000,000, as against the capital of the national banks of $462,000,000, pay a tax of $811,000 to the National Government as against $431,000 paid by the national banks. The reason of that is that no tax is paid by the national banks on so much of their capital as they hold in United States bonds. I have always regarded that as being an unjust discrimination in favor of one set of banks against the other. I would remove the tax on bank capital. I do not think it fair that State and private banks, with only two hundred and ten millions of capital, should pay double as much tax on that capital to the National Government as another set of banks with four hundred and sixty-two millions of capital; for the State banks pay $811,000, while the national banks pay only $431,000. I want the whole business of banks ing to be fair and equal in its burdens, so that the different classes of banks can compete with each other. That helps to keep down interest in dealings with their customers. I have always thought that the tax on capital was a bad tax.

I desire to say a word or two relative to other propositions which will, I trust, be part of the bill before it leaves the Senate.

I have made a proposition to reduce Bessemer steel from $28 to $14 a ton. We have 110,000 miles of railroads in the United States, according to Poor's Manual of the railroads of the United States. It requires about 100 tons of steel rails to every mile of railroad. Every man or company who buys Bessemer steel rails with a duty of $28 per ton pays at least $26 per ton more than the rails are really worth. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] shakes his head. I have before me in the speeches of Mr. HEWITT, of Mr. CARLISLE, of Mr. HARRIS of Tennessee, and some made by myself, tables showing the prices of Bessemer steel landed in New York and at other ports of the United States, and the price at which it is selling here, and it varies from $25 to $29 a ton in favor of the protected article. The speech of Mr. TUCKER contains the tables given both by Mr. CARLISLE in his speech and in his own, and here they are in my hand, [exhibiting,] showing what I state to be true.

Let me state another fact. I saw this spring a gentleman who was for a long time vice-president of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, now its attorney; one of the ablest men in the country. He assured me that the roads that are being built through Mexico from Laredo toward the capital were having Bessemer-steel rails landed there at $26 per ton cheaper than he could land the same steel rails at Fort Worth, Texas, which is about the same distance, I believe, from the seaboard. I allude to Hon. John C. Brown, of Tennessee, as the gentleman with whom I had the conversation. They bring the Bessemer-steel rails from Liverpool to New Orleans, carry them through this country in bonded cars, and take them to Laredo, Mexico, and deliver them there $26 per ton cheaper than the men who are building the railroads in Texas can obtain the same rails at Fort Worth. That company is now engaged in building a railroad from Fort Worth, Texas, to Denver, Colorado, and they are paying $26 more a ton on the average for their steel rails than the men who are building the road from Laredo down to the city of Mexico are paying, and so in proportion for all the chairs and everything else that they are using in the way of Bessemer steel or of iron manufacture.

Mr. FRYE. What does the Senator suppose they would have been paying to-day if there had not been any protection of Bessemer steel and any manufacture of it in this country?

Mr. BECK. They would not have been paying a dollar more than they are paying now; they would have paid $28 a ton less if the tariff protection had not been imposed.

Does the Senator think that all the inventive genius of the world is confined to this country? Does he not know that the Bessemer patent is an English patent? Does he not know that the English, too, made their improvements, and that they have to make them in competition with Germany, France, and all the world as well as with us? Does he not know that improvements in machinery and improvements in these steel processes were English patents and English inventions, bought by corporations here and used by them, and that England herself in competing with the rest of the world brought down the price of Bessemer steel, and had to do it in order to compete with the inventive genius and progress of other countries than this? That is the reason why the price has come down.

Does the Senator think that anybody can now make the old scythe compete that he perhaps and I used? I know I had to use it when a boy in mowing hay, and I expect he had to use it. Does he think that the old scythe and the old rake could compete with the grand agricultural machinery we see now all over the country? I have seen two hundred reapers on the Dalrymple farm in Dakota, each one with Wood's patent twine-binder, running at one time, and each one of those twine-binders with a little bit of cord was doing the work of five men, and saved Mr. Dalrymple the pay of a thousand men a day, beside feeding and taking care of them, as that number would have been necessary to do the work that that little twine-binder was doing attached to those two hundred machines. Do you think protection had anything to do with that? No; it was the improvement in agricultural machinery. I never see a mower and a hay-rake, which I think are the most perfect machines I ever saw, doing their work but I feel somewhat envious that those things were not invented when I was a boy and had to mow and rake and yet not do one-twentieth part of the work that they are doing, with fellows riding while driving both the rake and the mower. Machinery is doing the work now. We are not protecting labor; it is machinery that we are protecting, which is superseding human labor. Machinery, which is the unpaid, unfed, and unclad slave of its owner.

The same gentleman, Mr. Brown, of Tennessee, told me that they were delivering locomotives in Mexico, across the bridge at Laredo, at $10,500, while he was paying $15,000 for those, exactly like them, at Fort Worth for his road. What is the meaning of all that? It shows the effect upon the great railroad system of the country and the men who own the railroads. Mr. Poor tells us the number of miles operated in 1881 was 94,486, and he said it would be 10,000 more for 1882, with the gross earnings for 1881 at $725,325,119. They could have done the work, built the roads, and paid the same profits to their owners, charging only 66 per cent. of what they charge now but for the infernal protective tariff on everything that constitutes a railroad or is connected with it. From the farmer, who raises the grain and other products to feed the world, and has to take it off by rail, the railroad owner has to charge 33 per cent. more than other people do in other countries in order to get the same money back. These burdens the man in Texas and the man in Kansas and all who use those roads have to bear, as the charges on the road must conform to the cost of the road.

I want relief from these extortions and a good many others like that in this bill. I want to reach the question of blankets on which we are paying a bounty or bonus of 100 per cent. when we ought not to be paying over 40 or 50 per cent. at the outside. It is because I want to reach a great many other things that I propose to be moderate in my demand as to tobacco and moderate in my demand as to the reduction of the tax on distilled spirits, only seeking to reduce taxation so as to give relief to the people without taking off too much of the revenue, and reserving the right of reduction upon a great many other things embraced in our tariff schedule, so that we can give relief all around to the consumers of the country, to the men who wear blankets and use other clothes. I will show, I think, some very remarkable things before this debate is over in regard to very many of those things. I trust the Senate will approve the reason which induced me to move the amendment. I repeat that it was offered in as good faith as ever an amendment was offered to any bill. Senators can do what they like with it. I have no interest in it except what is common to all.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, when the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] rose and read an extract from my brief remark the other day, stating that he did not regard anything as a substantial reduction of taxes unless it reached tobacco and whisky, and that the Senator had pledged himself when the last reduction took place upon tobacco that he would not again ask for a further reduction for five years, I supposed that he was going to make some apology for deserting the position he assumed on that occasion; but instead of that I do not find that he has said a word in relation to his change from his pledged faith at the time of the last reduction; nor do I see in the course of his remarks any evidence that he is to be satisfied with anything substantial unless it reaches tobacco and whisky.

The Senator wonderfully mixes up his subjects and his arguments, so that it is difficult to tell at all times what he is discussing, but you will see tobacco and whisky sticking out all the time. From the course of his suggestion you would suppose that we were not able to reduce the revenue at all; but the Senator concludes with the statement that he is going through the whole list of articles to make a reduction on Bessemer steel, blankets, and everything else.

Mr. President, I desire to say a single word in relation to Bessemer steel. When the present duty was placed upon Bessemer steel it was worth $150 or $160 a ton, and $28 was a very moderate sum as a duty to be placed upon it. That induced a large number to go into the manufacture of Bessemer steel. A great many who went into the manufacture failed; hardly one of them made any dividends in the course of six years. But for the fact that we now produce more Bessemer steel than all of Great Britain the price of it would be probably twice as high as it is at the present moment.

I merely desire to say this much, and to remind the Senator from Kentucky that he utterly failed to make any explanation of his pledge about the further reduction of the tobacco tax when the last tobacco bill was before the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I understand the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky to be an amendment to the bill and not an amendment to the amendment of the committee. If I am right in that I presume it is open to amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I beg to suggest to the Senator from Virginia that he is mistaken. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky is an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I do not so understand it; it does not propose to change any amendment of the committee.

Mr. HARRIS. It is an amendment of that part of the committee amendment that proposes to insert, and comes in after the first word of the amendment to be inserted.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It proposes to add another subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is an amendment to an amendment. The committee amendment is an amendment and this is an amendment to it pending.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Then an amendment to that would not be in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir; no amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky would be in order.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words on that point, and now, when the subject is up, I will indicate what amendment I propose to the proposition of the Senator from Kentucky, in order that the vote may be had upon it at the proper time. I submitted an amendment which I had intended to offer as a substitute for the second and third sections of the bill, being the sections which relate to the tax on tobacco in its various forms, my amendment providing for the total abolition of the tax on tobacco. I am still in favor of that, and desire it to be done at the earliest possible moment, but from the various expressions I hear around me in the Chamber I suppose the Senate is hardly prepared to adopt that measure at this time. For that reason my idea now is to put that section, if to be retained at all, on the best possible footing for all classes, for the manufacturer, the producer, and the consumer. To effect that I shall propose, at the proper time, to amend by making the tax on tobacco 8 cents, and making the reduction take effect on the 1st of next January, and allow a rebate on all unbroken factory packages on that day. I desire to give a few reasons for that proposition.

I must be allowed to express my astonishment at the Senator from Ohio. He proposes, as I understand, to benefit the Irishman who smokes tobacco. If that is his object it would seem that the natural way would be to reduce the tax on tobacco itself. But the Senator says, "Oh, no; I will leave the tax on tobacco, but I will reduce it on the match with which the Irishman lights his pipe." That is his way of getting at the object of benefiting the Irishman who smokes.

Until 1872 the tax on tobacco was 32 cents and 16 cents according to quality. In 1872 the tax was fixed at a uniform rate of 24 cents; at a later day it was put at a uniform rate of 20 cents, and at a still later day it was put at a uniform rate of 16 cents. Each one of those reductions recurring in periods of six, seven, or eight years, was attended with an agitation of the subject which was very injurious to all classes of people engaged in the business. It was injurious to those who raised tobacco because of the uncertainty of the market in which they were to sell. It was injurious to the manufacturer because he was afraid to invest lest the tax should be changed and loss result to him in consequence.

While we are on the subject of the tobacco tax, it is important, if possible, if the revenues will allow it, and if it can be done with safety to the Government, to put the tobacco tax at a point at which it will remain until it is finally abrogated. If it is put at 12 cents a pound or at 10 cents a pound, it will not produce that effect, because as long as the tobacco tax is so high, each and every year hereafter whenever the subject of the reduction of taxes or the repeal of taxation is brought up, that will be one of the subjects on which a reduction or repeal will be attempted, and the same effect which has been produced already will be produced again.

Therefore, for the purpose of stability, for the purpose of securing a rate at which the tax will remain, and below which there will be no occasion to reduce it, if reduced at all, and the next step from which will be its entire abolition, the tax on tobacco ought to be put at 8 cents a pound, because that rate is so low that no lower rate would be worth imposing for the benefit of the Government, and whenever it would be changed at all it would be changed to its utter abolition. For that reason I think the tax ought to be put at 8 cents.

One thing is very sure, that the mere reduction of the tax on tobacco one-half will not produce a diminution of the revenues by one-half. The Senator from Kentucky has already cited instances of the previous experience of the country in that regard and has shown that the reduction of the tax has not produced a corresponding reduction of the revenue, but has on the contrary been attended by an increase of revenue. The tax being 16 cents, its reduction to 8 cents would not reduce the revenue one-half. The reasons for that are very obvious. There are some reasons which affect persons and affect interests which apparently are not directly connected with the tax.

Those who know anything about the raising of tobacco know it to be the case that there are certain tobacco lands which will only produce a particular quality of tobacco. You may change the quantity produced on those lands, but you can do nothing to the land itself which will change the quality of the tobacco. It is like the wines in parts of Europe where certain lands produce a certain fine quality of wine and contiguous lands will not do the same thing. So with tobacco, you will find certain lands produce a fine quality of tobacco while other lands produce only a low quality of tobacco and of course a cheap tobacco, and all the efforts which have yet been applied to the land cannot make it bring any other kind except that. The sole effort can only be directed to increase the quantity but not to improve the quality.

The men who own that kind of land and raise that quality of tobacco are very much interested in a tax that will enable them to sell their tobacco. If upon a low quality of tobacco, one that only brings 3, 4, or 5 cents a pound, the tax is 24 cents or 30 cents a pound, a man cannot afford to buy that tobacco and manufacture it, because when manufactured, being a cheap article, it will not bring the price that it has cost to raise it and to pay the tax upon it. Thus that sort of tobacco is excluded from manufacturing altogether; but as you get down lower in the scale and reduce the tax on tobacco, you avoid that difficulty. Each reduction brings into market and into manufacture a cheaper quality of tobacco that could not be easily manufactured with a higher tax. If the tax is 8 cents and the tobacco is worth 5 cents a pound it enables a man to sell it and to have it manufactured, which could not have been done if the tax had been 20 cents or 24 cents a pound.

For that reason the reduction of the tax on tobacco brings into the hands of the manufacturer and thus into the market more tobacco than would come in if the tobacco tax was kept high. The amount manufactured is increased in that way. In that region of Virginia where the coarse tobacco, as it is called, is produced, the lands have absolutely been destroyed in value because the people cannot raise tobacco that they can sell to the manufacturer. Not only is the land destroyed in value, but labor is demoralized, and those parts of the State of Virginia can never be very prosperous until the tobacco tax is reduced to a point at which the people can afford to raise tobacco and have it manufactured.

Mr. LOGAN. Will not the land produce anything except tobacco?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Certainly; but tobacco is their staple, and why should we deprive them of their staple?

Mr. LOGAN. If such a mean article of tobacco is produced, why put the tax down so as to enable it to be sold? Nobody would use it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It is a cheap article, but it is exported and used for various purposes. I insist that every reduction of the tax on tobacco has the effect of increasing the quantity of tobacco manufactured. It is undoubtedly to our interest both for revenue and for other purposes that the tobacco raised in this country should, if possible, be manufactured here in order that the Government may get the revenue and in order that the people of the country who need it so much, and especially the colored people of the tobacco States in the South, may get it. In the State of Virginia, the State of Tennessee, and the State of North Carolina, the principal support of the colored population is in connection with tobacco in one form or another. They raise it and manufacture it and they acquire very great skill in the manufacture of it. There seems to be a sort of adaptability between the colored man and colored woman and tobacco; they have a natural facility for both its raising and its manufacture. Anything that will increase the quantity of tobacco manufactured, to that extent increases the employment and gives benefit to the colored people of the South, and to the people generally. Therefore it is very desirable that the tax should be reduced.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator at this point (I do not want to discuss the question with him, for I am not well enough to-day) if his argument does not tend to prove that the amount of revenue is increased as we lower the tax for the reason that a poorer class of tobacco is produced? Is not that it?

Mr. JOHNSTON. No, sir; I did not say that.

Mr. LOGAN. Did not the Senator say that a poorer class of tobacco would be produced, and thus the people would be enabled to sell the poor tobacco that they raise? Is not that it?

Mr. JOHNSTON. No.

Mr. LOGAN. What is it?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I said a reduction of the tax on tobacco did not produce a corresponding reduction of the revenue.

Mr. LOGAN. I understood the Senator to argue that reducing the tax down to where tobacco would be worth only 3 or 4 cents——

Mr. BUTLER. Stimulated the production.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly; and put it into the market.

Mr. JOHNSTON. No, put it into the manufacturer's hands.

Mr. LOGAN. The manufacturer is not going to manufacture it unless he has a market for it. The argument, if I understand it, amounts to saying that the more you reduce the tax the poorer the tobacco will be, and if you want good tobacco the tax must be kept up.

Mr. JOHNSTON. No; that is not it.

Mr. LOGAN. I cannot understand the argument of the Senator if that is not his argument.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Then the Senator did not listen to it.

Mr. LOGAN. I did try to do so.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I said suppose the present tax of 16 cents a pound is reduced to 8 cents a pound, the reduction is one-half, but the revenue derived will be more than one-half that which is now realized, for the reason that people who cannot raise tobacco now practically, or even if they can raise it, who cannot sell it, will then be able to sell it. The tax would be so low that the manufacturers would buy it and manufacture it and then sell it; but if the tax remained high the manufacturer could not afford to pay the man for his tobacco, and pay the expense of manufacturing it, and pay the tobacco tax, and then sell the low quality of tobacco.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator a question for my own information. I have noticed that the reduction of the tax several times on different articles did not have the effect to cheapen the article in the hands of the consumer. What is the Senator's experience in reference to that?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I have no doubt if the tax is put down to 8 cents a pound it will reduce the price to the consumer.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not talking about 8 cents. The Senator is from a tobacco-producing part of the country, and I ask him if, when the tax on manufactured tobacco was reduced to 20 cents, it reduced the price of tobacco to the consumer?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Everything else being equal, undoubtedly it would.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not asking about everything else being equal; I am asking for the fact. My understanding is that it did not reduce the price to the consumer, but that the only effect of the reduction of the tax on tobacco has been to put a large amount of money into the hands of the manufacturer, and not into the hands of the producer or into the hands of the consumer. That is the effect of it, just the same as it was at the time we took off the tax on coffee. That did not cheapen the coffee in this country, it only gave the people in Brazil and other countries and places from which we purchased coffee a chance to increase their profits. That was the effect it had.

So it was in the reduction of the tobacco tax. It gave the manufacturer, of course, all his profits, but it did not decrease the amount that the consumer paid for it. I have noticed this several times in this reduction on tobacco. I beg the Senator's pardon if I am taking the floor from him, but I want the Senator to answer these propositions. Every few years we have a spasm on the subject of tobacco and whisky. I notice these spasms are produced just about the time that some large dealers in the country have accumulated a large quantity of whisky and tobacco on hand. I notice that that is the fact. I conversed with a gentleman the other day about tobacco and he told me of one firm in New York who would make half a million dollars on the proposed reduction of the tobacco tax. I know one man myself in the city of Louisville who owns to-day 10,000 barrels of whisky and who has not paid the tax.

It has been the case every time the attempt has been made to reduce the tax on tobacco and whisky that it has always come about at a time when large purchasers had a heavy amount on hand. Then an economical fit struck us all at once to reduce taxes for the benefit of somebody, but it never changed the price to the consumer a quarter of a farthing. I want to know why it is that these economical spasms strike us just at this time.

Let me say to the Senator that there are now 80,000 barrels of whisky in bond on which the tax has not been paid, which belong to purchasers who purchased it from distillers, and it is for their benefit that the attempt is being made to reduce taxes, and there will be the same corresponding result in reference to tobacco which has been purchased and hoarded up, waiting merely for this proposed reduction of the tax to be made. I speak of what I know.

Mr. BUTLER. The economical fit struck the Republican caucus, I understand.

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; the economical fit never struck any Republican caucus on the subject of tobacco and whisky. I will say that to the Senator, speaking outside of the caucus.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to amend the statement a little by saying that there has been a chronic economy in the Republican caucus on the subject of tobacco and whisky. The extravagance in regard to those articles has been on the other side.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not discovered it in appearances.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Virginia allow me to say one word to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. When we reduced the tax from 24 cents to 16 cents the producers of tobacco all over the country got the benefit of from a third to a half of it, and got it within the first month, and the consumer got the benefit of nearly all the rest. The manufacturers got a very small item. I will be able to prove that to the Senator before this debate is over.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; I only say to the Senator from Kentucky that that is not my understanding.

Mr. BECK. I know the fact to be true as to the producers, because they are my neighbors.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not use tobacco enough to know anything about it from experience. In regard to smoking, I know, so far as concerns the cigar question, that the reduction of the tax on tobacco did not reduce the price to the consumer of cigars. The Senator may know more about the other subject than I do.

Mr. BECK. The Senator will allow me to say that we made a mistake in not reducing the tax on cigars at that time, as we ought to have done.

Mr. LOGAN. In the State in which I live there is a great deal of tobacco produced. When I say "a great deal," I do not mean to compare it with Kentucky or Virginia or some of those tobacco-producing States, but in the southern part of my State a great deal of tobacco is produced for that part of the country, and so in many of the Northern States. What I can say about it is not from my experience but from what I have learned in regard to the prices of tobacco now and the prices of tobacco then. You may go to the tobacco stores to-day in the city of Washington and buy your Gravely tobacco, which is considered the best that you produce in Virginia, and they will charge you the very same price for it that they did before the tax was reduced, and you cannot get it any cheaper than it was before.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I think the Senator from Illinois is very much mistaken in supposing that the reduction in the tax would cause no reduction in price to the consumer. Of course everybody knows that the price of all agricultural products and everything else depends very much upon the demand and supply. If the tobacco crop is short the price is higher; if the tobacco crop is abundant the price is lower, and these fluctuations in the price of tobacco and of various other commodities are produced by causes altogether different from the tax upon the article and by causes which belong to business all over the world in the very nature of things. Supposing an equal crop of tobacco, all the other circumstances being equal, undoubtedly the reduction of the tax reduces the price to the consumer. I think the Senator is mistaken also in the other fact so far as my experience and observation go. Men who do large business and the largest manufacturers in the United States, the strongest firms, those who have most on hand and make most money by it, are the very men who are all the time opposed to any reduction of taxation.

Mr. LOGAN. Those are the men who deal in the best tobacco.

Mr. JOHNSTON. No, sir; such men as the Lorillards, in New York, and men of that class are all the time opposed to any reduction whatever. They do not care how high the tax is, because they have the capital; they have the means; they can buy the tobacco; they can buy the stamps, and they can await their chance in market; but smaller dealers, smaller manufacturers, cannot do that; they have to sell in order to carry on business. For that reason the large manufacturers are the very men who are opposed to any reduction of the tax. The demand for reduction comes from the producer, from the consumer, from the laborer, from the smaller manufacturers, and from the people generally.

In regard to the diminution of the tax increasing the quantity manufactured, I have a little table here. When the tax on tobacco was reduced from 24 to 16 cents the amount manufactured was only 131,000,000 pounds in round numbers. The next year after that the amount was raised to 146,000,000 pounds, and the year after that, in 1881, to 161,000,000 pounds. For the present year I do not know what the figures are, and I do not know that there is an increase corresponding with that. That increase has not been made in consequence of increased production, but in consequence of a diminution of the tax, which operated in the way I have suggested, by allowing lower qualities of tobacco to be manufactured than would otherwise have been. We may safely calculate that with the tax at 8 cents a pound, instead of 161,000,000 pounds being manufactured there will be at least 200,000,000 pounds of tobacco manufactured. If so, that would yield an income of $16,000,000 alone upon that single article, and in that way the tax would go beyond one-half what it is at present.

I am satisfied, therefore, that this reduction in addition to the other reductions in the bill would put the reduction of tax on tobacco at a figure beyond $15,000,000. The only question is whether that can be afforded. As I understand, the reductions proposed by the committee are about $35,000,000. Is that the sum by which the committee propose to reduce the revenue?

Mr. SHERMAN. From $35,000,000 to $40,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Then if I am right in the idea that the reduction to 8 cents will accomplish a reduction of only $15,000,000, or even not so much as that, say $12,000,000, it will make the total reduction about $47,000,000. With a surplus revenue of $100,000,000, and according to the estimates for the next year of $60,000,000, with a reservation of $40,000,000 for the sinking fund, that leaves us an abundant margin for the reduction that I propose.

That is all I desire to say at this particular time. My only object was to indicate the amendment I proposed to move in regard to the reduction of the tax on tobacco to 8 cents a pound, and to give the reasons why I think it is best to so reduce it. I have no desire to detain the Senate any longer on that point at this time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I had hoped that this measure, being a comparatively brief bill for the reduction of taxes, would be considered in a logical, orderly way, so that we might give to the people of the United States the largest possible benefit from the proposed reduction of taxes, but it seems to me that the mode in which my honorable friend from Kentucky, a member of the Committee on Finance who concurred in reporting this bill, conducts the opposition to it is likely to defeat this beneficent and orderly process. He is putting the cart before the horse. It is hard to tell how to meet this opposition.

That Senator has determined to thrust the tobacco tax into the forefront of the bill before any other vote shall be had in the Senate to indicate what amount of tax the Senate is willing to repeal. I say it is putting the cart before the horse; it is not the orderly, proper mode of proceeding in an important bill which ought to be made to render great benefit to the country. I submit to any Senator on that side whether it is fair to thrust the tobacco question forward before any action shall be taken on the amendments of the committee, and before any logical opportunity has been given to present the main facts upon which the reduction is proposed to force a vote on that question when there is in the third section of the bill a proposition to largely reduce the tax on cigars and cigarettes, to which the proposed reduction of the tobacco tax would be proper and germane.

But waiving that for the present, there is one question that the Senator from Kentucky talked about a good deal, at one time averring that our expenditures were so largely increasing that perhaps it was not safe to reduce taxes at all, that we had better have this surplus to wait until we could revise the tariff more perfectly and perhaps better distribute the reduction of taxes on a greater number of articles. Then he fell back to his proposition for a reduction of the tobacco tax to 8 cents a pound or $13,000,000.

The first question I take it we ought to consider is how much can we afford to reduce the aggregate of taxes? What is the condition of our finances that enables us to repeal taxes? This is shown by the last report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

We had this last fiscal year, closing the 30th day of June, 1882, an income of $403,853,475. We had a net expenditure of $258,886,537. That left a surplus of $144,900,000, or in round numbers $145,000,000. If that surplus were to continue, we might reduce the tax on tobacco and a good many other taxes; but let us see what is to be the probable condition of our finances during this and the next fiscal year as shown by the appropriations of Congress at the present session.

Suppose our revenue should continue next year to be as much as it was last year, and more than that could not reasonably be hoped for. It is the largest revenue that was ever collected upon the present basis of taxation. We must not forget that there are, as was shown very clearly by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] many elements of uncertainty in the immediate future.

There is in the first place a remarkable change in the balance of trade with foreign countries, so remarkable as to excite the attention of every intelligent man. Within a single year this state of affairs has occurred: in the month of May, 1881, we had an excess of exports over imports of $8,636,457. This year in the month of May, 1882, we had an excess of imports over exports of $19,255,326, showing a change in the balance of trade in the month of May, 1882, compared with the same month last year of something like $28,000,000 against us. For the five months ending May 31, 1882, we had an excess of imports over exports of $27,987,000. For the five months ending May 31, 1881, we had an excess of exports of $93,470,000, showing in five months a change against us in our balance of trade of $121,000,000. In the eleven months ended May 31, 1882, we had an excess of exports of $37,000,000. For the eleven months ending May 31, 1881, we had an excess of exports of $255,000,000, showing a change in the balance of trade of over $218,000,000.

We all know what will be the natural result of this remarkable change in our foreign trade; that this excess of importations must fall off largely and with it our revenues, as it has occurred over and over again in our history. Unless some change should take place that would restore the condition of trade to what it was a year or two ago, we must expect a falling off of customs revenues. Our only hope is that our exports may largely increase and thus enable us to pay for excessive importations. Our revenue depends upon importations and the amount of these depends largely upon our exportations and the general prosperity of the country, and especially upon the amount of our crops and the demand for them. These are always elements of uncertainty, but it is certain that we cannot maintain our present volume of importations upon the basis of a large and increasing balance of trade against us. The inevitable result is the falling off of our revenues, and, what is worse, the drain of our gold to meet the current balances on foreign trade.

There is another element of uncertainty. The prospects of the crops in Europe are very favorable. The crops in this country are extremely favorable. Probably there never was in the history of this country or in any country so large a production of cereals as is already reaped and harvested. From the accounts from Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas there is the largest wheat crop already garnered that was ever known in this country. From the statements furnished to us from agricultural sources there is no doubt we have also growing a very large crop of hay, corn, oats, and potatoes. The indications are also that in all the European countries from which cereals are drawn there is a large wheat crop and favorable prospects for a large crop of other grains and food which tend to reduce the demand for wheat; but whether those indications will be continued or not until August or September, when the crop is gathered, we cannot tell. So far as France, Hungary, and Russia are concerned, it is settled that there are large cereal crops already harvested.

The effect of this European supply upon prices will be very great and will regulate the market value of all these products in all countries. Suppose, for instance, the prices of wheat, which ranged last year in Chicago, the great wheat market of the country, at say 130 cents, should fall, as it has done over and over again, to 80 cents, to 90 cents, or to $1 even, that would make an enormous change in the aggregate market value of our exportations. We may not be able to send to Europe the enormous supply of agricultural productions at large prices that enabled us two or three years ago to swell the balance in trade in our favor. This is an uncertainty which we must face when we are considering the difficult problem of how much taxes we may reduce. Cheap food will be a great blessing to our own people, but it will also lessen our ability to pay for the enormous importations of the last year; it will reduce the volume of these importations, and thus reduce the revenue upon the estimate of which we base our enormous appropriations and this bill to reduce taxes. We may by our action illustrate the folly of the milkmaid in counting her chickens before they were hatched.

But there is one other element of danger still, and that is the prevalence of strikes all over the country. A great deal that the Senator from Delaware said I cheerfully concur in. These strikes are the result of real suffering in many cases; they are the result of just complaints. The men who strike are not lawless men, but they find that their wages will not purchase the same quantity of food that they did a year ago; that their wages will not furnish the same amount of clothing and other things; that their wages are not sufficient to furnish themselves and their families that degree of comfort which they had two or three years ago; and therefore there is a great disturbance of labor which already has caused the loss to them and to the production of the country of tens of millions of dollars.

The productions of iron and even our commerce and navigation have been very seriously affected by these strikes. The strikes in the city of New York among the laboring-men who load the goods from the docks onto the vessels have delayed vessels in their sailing. These strikes have extended all over the country, and especially in the heart of the great industrial States of Pennsylvania and Ohio and in Chicago and Saint Louis.

These are disturbing elements which every sensible man must consider before he throws away revenue recklessly and regardless of consequences.

Take the most favorable circumstances. Suppose that our revenue this coming year should be four hundred millions, how has Congress treated the matter? Upon the basis of last year's expenditures we will have a large surplus revenue, of one hundred millions, after paying the sinking fund. But how is it now? The appropriation bills have been enormously increased. They go through the Senate here and the House without attracting much attention. I have taken the pains, through the clerk of the Committee on Finance, to ascertain from the Committee on Appropriations the amount of increase in the appropriation bills which have already passed this body. The amount of increase is $37,000,000 in the appropriations already made by the Senate in the appropriation bills over the same bills for last year.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say to my friend that that estimate does not include the pension appropriation bill, I suppose, for that is $40,000,000 in excess of last year.

Mr. SHERMAN. It includes only the present pension bill, but not the deficiency, which will be pretty large. We have largely increased the ability to pass upon pension cases, so that the amount of pensions will be greatly increased, and to that $37,000,000 will be added whatever increase is made in the sundry civil bill and in the naval appropriation bill. I put that at $10,000,000. The chairman of the committee [Mr. ALLISON] thinks I place it too high. I assure Senators that I am keeping these figures within the limit, because I do not want to excite any unnecessary alarm. The appropriation bills for pensions alone were $34,000,000 this year over last year, and with a certainty that at least about $35,000,000 will be required as a deficiency to be paid some time during the course of the fiscal year. We know very well the state of the river and harbor bill. Take all these things into consideration, and you cannot estimate the amount of appropriation by Congress this year at less than $50,000,000 more than the appropriations made last year. Add that $50,000,000 to the amount of expenditures last year, and then to that add this item for a sinking fund, which by law and by the common consent of all parties we are bound to pay, which is $45,611,000, and the aggregate of these sums would make our expenditures next year, including the sinking fund, $351,611,000. So you see we are not dealing with $150,000,000 of surplus, we are not dealing with $100,000,000 of surplus; we are dealing at most with a surplus of from $45,000,000 to $50,000,000, and with many uncertainties as to whether that surplus will be realized.

There is a good deal of force in the suggestion that under the circumstances we had better let this surplus accumulate and await the course of events; but on the other hand it was said that as we could reasonably count now, with the prospect of good crops and with the present condition of the country, upon a surplus of $40,000,000 or $50,000,000, we might reduce taxes to an amount approaching that sum.

What taxes shall we reduce? Is it worth while for us to range through the whole gamut of external and internal taxes from top to bottom? Is it worth while to make over again our tariff speeches and recite again the peculiar theories, doctrines, or dogmas we stand upon? Is it worth while for each Senator to snatch out from among this mass of taxes of $400,000,000 the very one that on account of the local interests of his State he desires to have reduced? Not at all; but we must take a view of the whole field, and we must give the utmost relief possible to all classes and all interests fairly apportioned among all sections and among the people that can be given by the repeal of $40,000,000 of taxes.

No prudent man with this exhibit before him will say we ought to repeal taxes to the extent of more than $40,000,000; because if we do we will then probably have a deficit instead of a surplus, and the condition of our finances will be certainly changed. In view of the strikes, the disturbances among the laboring-men; in view of the uncertainty of the crops in Europe, with the prospect of large crops there and with large crops in this country, reducing necessarily the price of our products, because the law of supply and demand is stronger than acts of Congress; in view of the largely increased appropriations by Congress—it is not wise for us to propose or even talk about a reduction of more than $40,000,000.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the statement of the Senator is correct we cannot properly contemplate any very great surplus the next year, and the question I wish to ask is, why should we attempt to make any reduction, and, if any, why should that reduction be upon the banking institutions of the country principally? Why not make the reduction in a direction which would benefit the people?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will show that the statement made by the honorable Senator from Delaware is an utter fallacy. The chief reduction is not upon banking capital. You have got to deal with this question in a little broader light than to raise the ghost of banks. I know it is very common among the people of the country, probably of both parties—I do not blame anybody for it—to think that a bank is something that anybody can kick and scout at. The banks are already reduced in their profits. Banking is just like any other business. The business is free and open to all. Those taxes are upon banks which have no special privileges. Banks are started like blacksmith shops or like any other form of industry; they are free and open to all. Men with money always have an advantage over those without money. Persons cannot start a bank without money, and therefore, as they must necessarily be composed of moneyed men, though they may be widows and orphans and persons of small means, yet it is thought to give a kind of cheap popularity to kick at a bank and abuse a bank as though it was not entitled to enjoy the ordinary benefit of our laws and a fair consideration in the reduction of taxes.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Not wishing to interrupt the Senator, I wish to say that I have no desire to scout at banks or to do any injustice to any bank in the country, but I know of no bank in my State, and I suppose it is true of almost every other State, that fails to declare a dividend of at least 6 per cent. annually upon its capital. I know there is not a bank in my State but what after paying all the taxes now imposed declares annually 6 per cent., and some of them declare 8 per cent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall not go into that question, and I trust, as I am making a dry statement of figures, Senators will not interrupt me unless I state something that they think is not correct, in which case I shall be very glad to be corrected.

We have taxes imposed by internal-revenue laws to the amount of $146,000,000 and taxes imposed by what are called customs duties to the amount of $220,000,000. Now, the question is which of these taxes shall we reduce? There is a school in this country which sometimes expresses a desire to repeal all internal taxes in order that we shall not disturb the external taxes. It is not necessary for me to say anything about them. Those who believe that the higher the duties the better the country, necessarily do not wish to bring about a state of affairs that will render possible a moderate reduction of duties on imported goods; but to see my friend from Kentucky fall into that slough is rather strange, for I look upon him as the most thoroughly honest free-trader in principle in the Senate.

Here is a lot of internal taxes the residuum of a greater number which have been reduced or repealed from time to time, and let me say that the Republican party always felt the necessity of reducing those taxes from the very beginning. The Republican party is the only one, if I am at liberty to refer to party in this connection, that has largely reduced these taxes, and it has done it two or three different times, until finally it has reduced the internal taxes to those on whisky, tobacco, beer, a few stamp taxes, and the tax on banks. Instead of favoring the banks it has left the banks as a solitary monument of our old system of internal taxes. Formerly, when the bank tax was imposed, internal taxes extended to nearly all employments, productions, and property. All taxes on capital, business, or employment have been repealed, except alone the taxes on the capital and employment of banks and bankers. These are still taxed solitary and alone, and now this bill proposes as a simple matter of justice to leave the business of banking, like all other business, free from tax.

By the common consent of all nations, of every civilized nation which imposes any kind of taxes, whisky, tobacco, and beer are regarded as the best subjects of taxation. Why? Because they are articles of luxury in one sense, and the more our tax tends to prevent the consumption of whisky and tobacco the better for the consumer. It is looked upon not only as a wise tax but as one that is not felt or complained of. No one consumes whisky or tobacco unless he does it willingly and is very willing to pay the tax on it. There is no complaint among the people of the country of either party in regard to the whisky, tobacco, and beer tax. Generally the men engaged in the business do not object to it. These taxes ought to be left as a part of our permanent system of taxation as long as any other taxes, internal or external, more oppressive remain on the statute-book.

In all European countries where taxes are levied these articles are the proper subjects of high rates of taxation, largely in excess of their value. Here we have a comparatively moderate tax on whisky, tobacco, and beer. The first idea of the committee of the House evidently was to strip the internal-revenue system of all taxes except those on whisky, tobacco, and beer, and to let these stand to await the coming inquiry that is now about being made into the tariff. This is manifestly a wise conclusion. The taxes the House proposes to repeal may not, in the opinion of some, be the most burdensome, but the rule adopted is the most logical and just. They propose to repeal all other taxes than on spirits, tobacco, and beer, and to reduce the taxes on cigars and cigarettes so as to correspond as near as may be to the existing tax on tobacco.

What then are the taxes that are repealed? Let us see. General Raum has very kindly furnished me a statement of the actual product of all these taxes, and a long tabulated statement here, which I will hand to the Reporter and will not trouble the Senate to read. It gives the items more in detail than is necessary for my purpose.

The tax on the capital and deposits of banks and bankers other than national banks yielded in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, $3,762,000. For the same year the tax on the capital and deposits of national banks amounted to $5,322,178.

The Senator from Kentucky calls attention to the fact that the tax on the capital of State banks and bankers is higher in proportion than the tax on the capital of national banks. So it is, and for the manifest reason that by law you require the national banks to hold your bonds, which bonds by law are not taxable in the hands of any one. These bonds are a part of their capital. The State banks and bankers are not compelled to hold national bonds, but to the extent that they do hold national bonds their taxes are abated. So that the same rule is applied to both.

The total amount of the taxes on banks is, say $9,000,000. That was, as I have said, an exceptional tax. At a time when we repealed all other taxes on all other employments we left this because it was said these banks were wealthy, rich, better able to pay; and that argument, although it may be an argument of injustice sometimes, prevailed, and these taxes were left until now we are considering the propriety of wiping out all internal-revenue taxes except those on whisky, tobacco, and beer. Would you let these taxes upon banks stand any longer when the necessity of their imposition has passed, when the reason for their imposition has passed, more than ten years after you have repealed the tax on every employment in life except that of banking? It is preposterous to carry a prejudice so far. It would be running demagogism to seed to continue these taxes after the necessity for their existence had ceased and the reason for their being had passed by.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The tax on bank circulation is still continued.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly, it is still continued, and why? Because that tax on circulation was imposed as a means of paying the expenses of issuing bank notes. It is true the cost to the Government of issuing the bank notes is only about one-fifth the tax levied; still it is fair to levy this tax on their circulation as in the nature of a compensation for a franchise granted to them, and therefore that tax ought never to be repealed as long as the banking system prevails.

Here is a tax on bank checks; that is not a tax on the banks. It is a tax of 2 cents on you and me and all of us who have occasion to draw a check upon a bank. That yields $2,253,000. It is not so much that the tax is oppressive. One thinks more of the trouble and bother of looking for his stamp and putting it on than of the amount. It is an exceptional tax on business. We wipe it away. It is not a tax on the banks at all. The banks pay no part of it. On the other hand, they sometimes get a profit from the sale of the little check-book with the stamps printed upon the checks.

Both the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Virginia have had their joke at me because I said the repeal of the tax on matches would relieve the Irishman and relieve everybody. They want, to use a common phrase, to "go it better;" they want to repeal the tax on tobacco. I should be perfectly willing to repeal the tax on tobacco—that is a tax I pay some of myself—if the circumstances would justify us in doing it, and if I thought that would give the greatest relief, more than the repeal of $13,000,000 of taxation in other quarters.

The tax on matches yields $3,278,000. The manufacturers of matches do not want the tax repealed, because they have a practical monopoly of the manufacture. I remember before this tax was devised there were matches made all over the country; they were made in the town in which I live; they were made in every community; they were made in small lots and sold. It seems to me that the removal of no tax could give more immediate and substantial relief. The tax is an annoyance and nuisance to everybody, and totally out of proportion to the value of the article taxed.

There is a tax on proprietary medicines and on perfumery, cosmetics, and all the various articles of that kind. They yield $2,226,000. The aggregate of these taxes for the year ending July 30, 1881, was as follows:

Capital and deposits of banks and bankers other than national banks	$3,762,208
Capital and deposits of national banks	5,372,178
Bank checks	2,253,411
Matches	3,278,580
Proprietary medicines, &c.	2,226,503
Total	16,892,880

During the year ending June 30, 1882, these taxes yielded something over eighteen millions, and including the reduction proposed in special taxes on dealers and on cigars and cigarettes amount for the last year to $25,888,245:

NOTE.—The comparison cannot be made for the fiscal years ended June 30, 1881 and 1882, as the returns for June, 1882, have not been received.

These are the taxes that are to be swept away. It is true some of these taxes do not amount to much; they are not very burdensome; and if we had to keep up our system of internal revenue as largely as it has been kept up before, many of them might be retained. But when we have a surplus of $40,000,000 to deal with we propose to wipe them out, to get rid of them, and thus simplify our system of taxes.

The Senator from Kentucky says we shall not even have a vote on that proposition until we decide about tobacco. Why tobacco? Why should tobacco be considered before all these other matters? Why can he not wait until in due order and economy of time he can present his proposition to repeal or reduce the tax on tobacco?

The House of Representatives has not overlooked the tobacco tax. After full discussion they propose to reduce by this bill two forms of taxes on tobacco imposed by the internal-revenue laws. One is the special tax levied upon dealers and manufacturers of tobacco, retail dealers in leaf tobacco, dealers in leaf tobacco, peddlers of tobacco to various classes. We propose to remit the tax imposed on dealers to the amount of $1,137,852. These are all taxes on poor people except the dealers in leaf tobacco, who are generally large. Then it is proposed to reduce the tax on cigars and cigarettes, which yields about $18,000,000; to take off cigars, cigarettes, cheroots, &c., $6,602,464. So that we have shown by this bill a disposition to relieve tobacco and the people who consume tobacco in a form that will likely best yield a satisfactory result.

It may be asked why select cigars instead of selecting chewing-tobacco? The reason is because three years ago there was a reduction of one-third in the tax on chewing-tobacco, and now this is a reduction on cigars, about equivalent to the former reduction on chewing-tobacco.

But the Senator from Kentucky must have his tax on tobacco reduced. Why, sir, he promised the Senate only three years ago—I have the language here before me—in the most positive way that for years if they would only reduce the tax to 16 cents he would not ask them to reduce it any more. He has read us some portions of that speech, I suppose it was on the same occasion, but there is a little piece here I wish he would stand by:

I repeat that there never was a more legitimate proposition made to the representatives of the people in behalf of a meritorious class of citizens than that now made, which is to give the men whose soil is adapted to the raising of tobacco, and who are paying forty millions of revenue, the relief sought—

I think he read from this speech—and I will pledge you on their behalf—

The tobacco dealers—

if it is given, that for years they will ask no further change.

Mr. FARLEY. It has been three years.

Mr. SHERMAN. So it has, but I do not think that the statute of limitations has run out; at any rate he ought not to be in such a hurry about it.

It is shown that by these provisions the bill already provides for a reduction of internal revenue of $26,000,000 which is at least two-thirds of what any prudent man under the circumstances would advise the reduction of. Now, what will be done with the rest?

The Senator talks a good deal about the caucus. Well, sir, what was done in that caucus is not a legitimate matter of inquiry. If that caucus recommended a little further reduction, not to take it all off internal revenue, but to take something off customs duties, it was a wise resolve by that caucus—no doubt about that. It is not necessary for me to defend the caucus; it is able to defend itself.

What topic, what subject of taxation created the most complaint? Was it tobacco? Not at all. No petition came up here praying for the repeal of the tobacco tax; on the contrary the dealers generally were opposed to it; the producers made no complaint about it; there was no desire for a further reduction on tobacco; but on the other hand there were certain taxes imposed by the customs laws that were believed to be oppressive. There were also certain incongruities that had sprung up in the administration of the customs laws that were plainly unjust, one of which, by the decision of the Supreme Court, enabled men lawfully to commit a practical fraud on the Treasury of $2,000,000 a year. Another, a tax on that which is an absolute necessity of life, sugar, had been levied some years ago, at a time when we desired to increase revenue, and an additional tax of 25 per cent. was added to sugar. That tax yields us more revenue than any other. It is the highest tax of most general distribution; it is a tax that is distributed among all classes of the people just about in the proportion of their means and of their ability to consume.

It was proposed to take off the 25 per cent. addition made in 1875, about 20 per cent. of the whole tax. The tax yields near $50,000,000. It is by this bill proposed to repeal $10,000,000 on sugar. Was not this reduction the best under all circumstances?

Sometimes it is complained that this is an article produced by a Southern State, Louisiana, and that if we reduce this duty we impair the protection given by our laws for the benefit of the home producers of sugar. On the contrary, this increase in 1875 was not in any sense a law for the purpose of protection. It was the addition of a tax imposed merely for revenue, to meet an emergency, and was not desired or claimed as a matter of protection. They still have the specific duties levied by law under the old standard. They have the specific duties, which are ample protection to encourage the cultivation and largely increase the cultivation of sugar cane in all the sugar-growing region of this country. They still have a protection of 1¾ to 2½ cents a pound.

What else did we do? There was complaint made about Bessemer-steel rails, and a just complaint, but that was not the fault of any one. It was not the fault of the law when it was enacted. But the great changes that have been made in the manufacture of steel and iron have produced an enormous reduction in the cost of these metals. When this duty was levied steel ranged from $100 to $150 a ton, and steel was worth twice as much as iron; but by the subtle processes, devised partly by American and partly by English inventors, the requisite ductility was given to steel in the process of manufacture, so that to-day by the Bessemer process steel can be manufactured just about as cheap as iron.

The wonderful processes by which this is done no doubt have been seen by every Senator. That created a disturbance, an inequality in the relative tax of these two metals.

Besides, when these taxes were imposed there was an endeavor to make the duties on iron and steel specific, so much a pound, rating the grade per pound according to the commercial value of the articles, making it a tax of 30 or 35 per cent. ad valorem reduced to specific rates. But by the sudden fall of iron to less than one-half what it formerly cost the specific rates became very high ad valorem rates. They were double or treble in some cases what they had been. On the other hand the ad valorem rates which on manufactures of iron and steel, that from their nature could not be specified, were fixed at 35 to 45 per cent. ad valorem, which properly were higher than the specific duties on the raw iron and steel of which they were manufactured. By the change in the value of iron and steel the specific duty on the raw article became higher than the duty on the completed manufactures, an unforeseen result from an unforeseen change in market value.

Thus by the change in the prices of these articles these duties became incongruous; they did not relate to each other in the proper way; the original idea being that specific duties should be applied to all the great articles of iron which can be named and described in a tariff bill, and that an ad valorem duty more than equal to it should be applied on the manufactures made out of iron and steel as the raw material; but the sudden change in the prices has disturbed that and we have endeavored to correct it.

The Senator from Kentucky says he will move to reduce the duty on Bessemer steel to $14 a ton. How does he know the effect of it? I think he is very much mistaken in the effect of it. I think the committee have gone as far as they ought to go in the reduction of the duty on Bessemer steel until the general revision takes place that will equalize things. I believe that the general range of duties on great bodies of articles in the tariff laws ought to be reduced; and although I thought it would have been better to have the proper committees of the two Houses make this reduction, yet I still am hopeful that the tariff commission will give us the basis upon which a reduction can be made.

This bill with the amendments proposed by the Senate Finance Committee reduces taxes nearly $40,000,000, the duty on sugar counting $10,000,000, and then the reduction of the duty on Bessemer steel, making about one million, and the aggregate is as much as a safe, prudent man would say the reduction ought to be now. Is it not better to take this bill as it is? Is it wise for us at this period of the session to embark in all the wide sea of general discussion on this subject of the tariff? Why not, like practical legislators dealing with the interests of our people, carefully watching that no harm is done to them by the provisions of this brief bill, seeing that the general relation of the remaining taxes to each other is maintained and kept up, pass this bill, leaving the general subject to be decided hereafter, next winter, when the tariff commission shall report?

I agree in the main in the general argument made by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES,] but I do not agree at all with his conclusion. If he expects the Democratic party to deal wisely with the tariff question he is very much mistaken. The strength of the Democratic party lies in the city of New York and in the Southern States where, by prescription you may say, by long usage, by long study, the leading classes are opposed to what is called the protective school of politics. They honestly believe as agriculturists that free trade will be better for them. I do not think so, and if my friend from Indiana expects to carry out the Coleman letter of General Jackson—and General Jackson undoubtedly was a protectionist in a moderate way—if he expects the Democratic party to carry out those ideas he will be mistaken. He will have to fall back after all upon that party which believes that it is best for the farmer, best for the cotton-grower, best for all classes of citizens that our industries shall be diversified, by wise protective laws; that wherever a trade, an occupation, a manufacture can with a reasonable prospect be built up with the aid of some assistance from the tariff laws, that assistance should promptly be given.

And, sir, I say to him that I am in favor of protection, but not to the capitalist. The capitalist is able to take care of himself. There was a time when it was the interest of this country to build up capital and induce capital to be invested in machinery and to start factories; but the growth of wealth in this great country of ours has been so rapid that already there is more surplus wealth here than in almost any country in the world. It is no longer necessary to protect the capitalists; but we must protect labor. The people of this country never will and never can be made to compete with the labor of European countries. They are not accustomed to the hard usage and hard fare. They will not do with the food and care and nurture and housing of the laborer of Europe. It is for that reason that the laborer of Europe, whenever he can, comes here to share our blessings.

The object of these protective laws, if wisely administered, wisely carried out, is to protect the laboring-men, to give them opportunities to educate their children, to give them a comfortable home, a comfortable housing, good clothing, and fair wages, and enable them to make their way in life. Thus it is and by means of agencies like these that we find the richest men in this country to-day were the laborers of only a few years ago. In every city of the country you will find the men who now are called the capitalists were the laboring-men who labored with their own hands in honest toil, and probably laid the foundation of their fortunes in that labor.

I do not want to go further into this subject except to say that I trust the Senate will regard this as an opportunity of doing a great good to the people of the United States; that we ought to confine the operations of this bill to such a reduction of taxes as will render the greatest possible service. I do not, for one, believe that tobacco is deserving of any more reduction of taxes than is given by this bill, to the amount of $7,000,000 or $8,000,000. If you reduce the tobacco tax $13,000,000 more, as is now proposed—the tax on manufactured tobacco yields $26,000,000, and if you take $13,000,000 off that, you disable yourselves from making those necessary reductions and modifications in the tariff laws when the time shall come when we can properly and fairly deal with that question.

I say, "let well enough alone;" let us do what good we can now, with the assurance that within one year from this time we may be able, or shall have the opportunity at least, to correct any other incongruities in the tariff laws or make any reduction that is then in our power to do.

On the question of the sugar reduction I may have occasion, when the subject comes up properly, and when that subject alone is considered, to say something further about the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand there is a necessity for an executive session. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator withdraw that motion for a moment?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH EUROPE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (S. No. 2084) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe, returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was read, being in section 1, line 9, after the word "amalgamation," to insert "combination to establish rates."

Mr. WINDOM. I ask that the Senate concur in the House amendment. I am sure there will be no objection. It simply prevents combinations with other companies.

The amendment was concurred in.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 604) granting a pension to Margaret Beymer;

A bill (S. No. 984) increasing the pension of Emma H. Collins;

A bill (S. No. 1040) granting a pension to Theodore Ranthe;

A bill (S. No. 1068) for the relief of certain citizens of Tennessee;

A bill (S. No. 1201) granting a pension to Jacob Nix;

A bill (S. No. 1886) donating four condemned cast-iron cannon for the soldiers' monument at the village of East Bloomfield, New York;

A bill (S. No. 1942) granting condemned cannon to Abe Lincoln Post No. 29 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, for monumental purposes.

A bill (S. No. 2050) donating four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cast-iron cannon-balls for the soldiers' monument at Ironton, Ohio; and

A bill (S. No. 2057) granting condemned cannon, &c., to the city of Marshalltown, Iowa.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1858) to provide additional industrial training schools for Indian youth and authorizing the use of unoccupied military barracks for such purpose was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 4443) to amend sections 3 and 4 of the act of February 21, 1879, to fix the pay of letter-carriers, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MORRILL. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-nine minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at six o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 17, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MCLANE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to trespass upon the attention of the House for a few moments. On last Saturday I was not present in the House, being detained by indisposition. When the item in the river and harbor bill appropriating $20,000 for the survey of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal was under consideration, the honorable chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. PAGE] stated that if I were present I would no doubt agree with the committee to non-concur.

I want to confirm that statement, and to say in explanation that this was the course agreed upon by the committee with reference to all the amendments of the Senate without regard to their merits. We deemed this the best method of dealing with the bill and bringing all its items to the attention of the committee of conference. Therefore, the conclusion which was drawn by more than one honorable gentleman on this side of the House that there was nobody here to defend the item was altogether unwarranted. Not only was this conclusion unwarranted, but so far as I am personally concerned I desire to say to at least one of those honorable gentlemen, my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE,] that I have not only advocated the proposition with reference to the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, which was contained also in the last river and harbor bill, but I have been a supporter of the proposition to purchase for the Government and dedicate to the commerce of the country the Louisville and Portland Canal. At the unanimous request, as I supposed, of the Kentucky delegation of the last Congress and in this, I have voted to put that canal in the possession of the Government and make it a free canal, regarding that as one of the wisest measures that could be adopted by the Government. So far as the principle is concerned, I for one am fully committed to it, not only with reference to that and other Western canals, but also to the Delaware and Chesapeake Canal, as wise measures for facilitating commerce.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 1068) for the relief of certain citizens of Tennessee.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. R. No. 174) for printing the report of the Life-Saving Service.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 6514) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. JONES of Nevada, and Mr. RANSOM.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of parliamentary and personal privilege. I regret to do so in the absence of the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] but I have no choice.

The SPEAKER Does the gentleman rise to a personal explanation?

Mr. HEWITT of New York. I rose to a question of personal and parliamentary privilege concerning the integrity of the records of the House.

It will be remembered that the debate on the naval appropriation bill was closed by the gentleman from New Jersey on the 6th of July. His speech did not appear in the RECORD until the 11th. At that time I was at home sick, and only saw the RECORD on the 13th. I at once returned to Washington, and came to the House on Saturday for the purpose of calling attention to the matter to which I shall now request the consideration of the House. The gentleman from New Jersey was not then in his seat. I have therefore waited until to-day. To-day again he is not in his seat. This afternoon I am compelled to leave the city, in order to meet my family, who have just returned from Europe, and who have now landed in New York. I will therefore forbear to make any comments whatever upon the nature of the matter which I wish to submit to the House.

On the 11th of July there appeared in the RECORD the speech of the honorable gentleman from New Jersey, in which I find the paragraph I desire to have the Clerk read.

The Clerk was proceeding to read, when

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, (interrupting,) said: I suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] whether the proprieties of the case would not dictate to him that he wait a few moments. The gentleman from New Jersey is now in the building and has been sent for.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I will gladly wait. I myself sent for him, and I was told that he was not in Washington.

Mr. O'NEILL. He has just arrived.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Then I prefer to defer the matter, with the consent of the House, until the gentleman from New Jersey is present.

AMENDMENT OF RULES—ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. POUND. Mr. Speaker, in order to enable this House, during the little remnant of time left it, to reach the consideration of public business other than privileged questions or those favored with special assignments, I desire to give notice that on to-morrow I shall submit the following resolution——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had better send it to the Clerk to be read.

Mr. POUND. It is my writing; and if I can make myself heard, I prefer to read it:

Resolved, That during the remainder of this session of Congress it shall be in order, immediately after the approval of the Journal, to proceed in the House as in Committee of the Whole to the consideration, for the period of one hour, of public bills and resolutions which shall have been previously reported by standing committees of the House and such reports printed, and Senate bills and resolutions on the Speaker's table, the substance of which shall have received favorable action of appropriate House committees, in the following manner, to wit: The Speaker shall call the standing committees in their order, whereupon, by direction of committees so-called, not more than two measures may be severally called up for final consideration. If not more than four members object, such consideration shall proceed, providing that debate on each bill or resolution shall be limited to ten minutes, exclusive of five minutes which may be occupied in reading reports of committees.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is not in order, I believe.

Mr. POUND. I desire to give notice——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. POUND] desires to give notice that he will call it up under the rule to-morrow.

Mr. POUND. I desire to give notice that I will submit it to-morrow.

Mr. RANDALL. It is a complex proposition.

The SPEAKER. Its appropriate reference would be to the Committee on Rules; but the Chair has notice that there are precedents——

Mr. HOLMAN. It is not before the House, and I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order of business.

Mr. VAN HORN. Have it printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. There are precedents under the rule which would seem to be right in favor of giving notice one day that the next day a certain thing would be called up for consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has the gentleman the right to do it under the rules?

The SPEAKER. Of course notice is required of a change of the rules of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. It can come in regularly on Monday under the call of States for bills and joint resolutions.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. How does this come before the House?

The SPEAKER. Because it relates to the business of the House, and as such takes precedence.

Mr. ATKINS. Does notice that to-day a certain matter will be called up to-morrow take precedence under the rules of the House?

The SPEAKER. That notice is required by the rules of the House. It cannot be considered to-day.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman to let it go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. POUND. I do not offer the resolution now, but give notice I will do so to-morrow.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the regular order of business.

Mr. POUND. I have given notice in conformity with the rules of the House that I will call it up to-morrow, and in the mean time I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to know whether this motion to change the rules or to adopt a new rule must not go to the Committee on Rules for consideration?

Mr. POUND. That question will arise to-morrow when this is before the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules all matters relating to a change of the rules when referred must be referred to that committee. The rules also provide that upon one day's notice a change of rules may be moved.

Mr. BLACKBURN. "May be moved," but does that do away with the requirement of the rules that it shall be referred to the Committee on Rules for consideration?

Mr. POUND. I submit that question is not before the House for consideration at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has given no particular consideration to this question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to call the Chair's attention to it, and shall ask him to rule at the proper time.

The SPEAKER. It does not arise at this time, but the Chair prefers it should go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. RANDALL. It will expedite business to send it to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman consent to its reference to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. POUND. I desire to proceed in my own way in this matter, and then the House can decide.

Mr. O'NEILL. I desire to proceed in my own way, and shall ask to take up Senate bill No. 297, which is unobjectionable to members.

Mr. COX, of New York. Let us have the regular order of business.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The proposed change of rule will of course be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Of course.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. PAGE. Before the regular order is called I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the river and harbor appropriation bill and agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as managers of said conference on the part of the House Mr. PAGE, Mr. TOWNSEND of Ohio, and Mr. REAGAN.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. REAGAN, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for the day, on account of sickness.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 1048) granting an increase of pension to Bernard Brady;

A bill (H. R. No. 1543) granting a pension to Albert O. Miller, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 2104) granting a pension to Mrs. Electa L. Baldwin;

A bill (H. R. No. 2872) to increase the pension of James Hawthorne;

A bill (H. R. No. 4082) granting a pension to Ellen Gillespie;

A bill (H. R. No. 4166) to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts; and

A bill (H. R. No. 5809) for the relief of Jacob Humble.

CALL OF STATES FOR BILLS, ETC.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for printing and reference. Under this call also joint and concurrent resolutions of State and Territorial Legislatures are in order, and also resolutions of inquiry addressed to the heads of Departments for reference to appropriate committees.

AMERICAN CITIZENS IMPRISONED ABROAD.

Mr. COX, of New York, submitted the following resolution of inquiry; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Resolved, That this House earnestly request the President to insist on the release of the remaining American citizens, imprisoned by the British Government under a suspension of law in Ireland, and especially the case of D. McSweeney, of California, confined for more than thirteen months, without charge, trial, or conviction, whose innocence of crime is proven by the fact that the British Government offered him freedom on condition of returning home immediately.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a resolution of inquiry upon the same subject, which, however, is wider and broader in its scope than that introduced by my colleague, who has just given me notice of his intention to offer the resolution which he has submitted.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby respectfully, but urgently, requested to inform this House when it may expect an answer to its resolution of June 18, now twenty days ago, adopted unanimously, calling for any additional information not heretofore communicated to Congress relative to our citizens still suffering unjust imprisonment in British jails; and whether any proposition has been made to any American citizen to accept their release upon conditions, and whether he has yet made the demand which this House unanimously requested him to make forthwith on said 28th day of June, 1882, and to report all the facts and proceedings as soon as practicable, in compliance with the imperative provisions of the law of July 27, 1868; and whether any correspondence has taken place with James Russell Lowell, nominally our minister to Great Britain, but really doing police duty and detective work under Lord Granville in discovering imperfections in certificates of American citizenship, even when certified under seal of our courts and State Department, relative to his resignation or recall, as requested by numerous petitions and resolutions presented to this House from the principal cities and States of the Union.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

NORTH CAPITOL HORSE RAILROAD.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, (by request,) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6770) to incorporate the North Capitol and Glenwood Cemetery Horse Railroad Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

AMERICAN CITIZENS IN BRITISH PRISONS.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, also submitted the following resolution of inquiry; which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby directed to inform this House whether he cannot now communicate the telegrams relating to our citizens in British prisons, the publication of which was thought to be incompatible with the public interest as expressed in his letter to the President of April 5, 1882 and that he is hereby directed to communicate every item of correspondence relating to these citizens by mail or cable, not hitherto communicated, which, even if their publication may be deemed incompatible with the public interest, may be considered in secret session of this House or of its Committee on Foreign Affairs.

INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, also submitted the following resolution of inquiry; which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State, in view of the present political disturbances in Egypt and one of its most recent results, namely, the closure of the Suez Canal to navigation and the resulting injury to the commerce of the world, and the possible recurrence of such an event if national public works be carried out under the assistance and superintendence of European powers on the soil of the sister republics of this continent, is hereby directed to inform this House if the State Department has any information to communicate with regard to the progress toward construction of the interoceanic canal across the isthmus of the United States of Colombia, and whether it be not advisable at this time that this country should reassert its intention to be governed by the principle of non-allowance of the intervention of European governments in public affairs on this continent.

AMERICAN NAVAL FORCES AT ALEXANDRIA.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, also submitted the following resolution of inquiry; which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby instructed to communicate to this House any correspondence with or instructions to Commodore Nicholson relative to his extraordinary threat to open fire upon the city of Alexandria under certain contingencies; and also to inform the House whether he has been informed that American sailors and officers are performing police duty in the city of Alexandria under the British Admiral, and if so, by what authority.

ISHMAEL JONES.

Mr. PRESCOTT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6771) granting a pension to Ishmael Jones; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference has now been concluded.

PEACE CONGRESS.

Mr. PEELLE. I have here a memorial of 106 citizens of my district, in reference to a peace congress; which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the body of the petition printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The memorial is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned citizens of seventh Congressional district of the State of Indiana respectfully represent that they are deeply interested in the proposition presented by the President to your honorable bodies in his message of the 18th of April, 1882, in reference to a congress of all the independent countries of North and South America "for the purpose of considering and discussing the methods of preventing war between the nations of America."

Your petitioners respectfully but earnestly urge that you confirm the action of the President toward convening said congress and authorize him to appoint delegates to represent the United States therein.

Your petitioners would further ask that the President of the United States be authorized or directed to invite all the powers of the civilized world to join us in this league of peace and amity, and that such appropriation of the public funds shall be made as will enable the President to carry out this beneficent and humane undertaking.

REPRINT OF AN ACT.

Mr. CRAPO submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 3,000 copies of the act approved July 14, 1882, entitled "An act to enable national banking associations to extend their corporate existence, and for other purposes," be printed for the use of the House.

WATCHMAN FOR HOUSE FOLDING-ROOM.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be and is hereby authorized to employ a night watchman for duty at the folding-room at 217 East Capitol street, at a salary of $75 per month, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

VINEGAR MADE FROM GRAIN.

Mr. CARLISLE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6797) to regulate the manufacture of vinegar made from grain; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions having been concluded, the regular order to-day, this being the third Monday of the month, is the consideration of motions for suspension of the rules submitted under instruction of committees. The last committee called under this order was the Committee on Military Affairs. The next in order is the Committee on Naval Affairs.

OCEAN TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION.

Mr. TALBOTT. I am authorized by the Committee on Naval Affairs to move that the rules be suspended to take from the Speaker's table and pass with an amendment the bill (S. No. 2084) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Robert Garrett, William F. Burns, and William F. Frick, of Maryland, their associates, successors, and assigns, shall have the right to construct, lay, land, and maintain a line or lines of telegraph or submarine cables on the Atlantic coast of the United States of America, to connect the American and European coasts by telegraphic lines, wires, or submarine cables: Provided, That said company shall begin to lay said cable or cables within two years from the passage of this act: And provided further, That no amalgamation, union, or sale of cable interests established under this act shall be made to any existing European or other cable companies.

SEC. 2. That any telegraphic line or cable laid be subject to the following conditions, stipulations, and reservations, to wit:

First. The Government of the United States shall be entitled to exercise and enjoy the same or similar privileges with regard to the control and use of such line or lines, or cable or cables, as there may, by law, agreement, or otherwise be exercised and enjoyed by any foreign government whatever.

Secondly. Citizens of the United States shall enjoy the same privileges as to the payment of rates for the transmission of messages as are enjoyed by the citizens of the most favored nation.

Thirdly. The transmission of dispatches shall be made in the following order: First, dispatches of states under such regulations as may be agreed upon by the governments interested, the rates not to exceed those charged to individuals; secondly, dispatches on telegraphic service; and, thirdly, private dispatches.

Fourthly. The lines of any such cables shall be kept open to the public for the daily transmission of market and commercial reports and intelligence, and all messages, dispatches, and communications shall be forwarded in the order in which they are received, except as hereinbefore provided.

Fifthly. Before extending and establishing any such line or lines, or cable or cables, in or over any waters, reefs, islands, shores, and lands within the jurisdiction of the United States, a written acceptance of the terms and conditions imposed by this act shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State by the parties above named, or a majority of them, their associates, successors, or assigns, or by the company or corporation which may be organized to construct and operate cables under this act.

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall be construed to limit the United States in granting to other persons or companies similar privileges herein contained.

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time is hereby reserved to Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves to suspend the rules to pass this bill with the amendment, which amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "amalgamation" insert "combination to establish rates."

Mr. DEZENDORF. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. TALBOTT to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendment read, it was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

LETTER-CARRIERS.

The SPEAKER. The next committee in order under this call is the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am directed by that committee to move a suspension of the rules so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, and pass the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4443) to amend sections 3 and 4 of the act of February 21, 1879, to fix the pay of letter-carriers, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That section 3 of an act entitled "An act to fix the pay of letter-carriers," approved February 21, 1879, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. Upon the recommendation of the postmaster of any city the Postmaster-General may establish a third grade of letter-carriers, known as auxiliaries, who shall be paid at the rate of $600 per annum, and who may be employed at any letter-carrier office."

SEC. 2. That section 4 of the act aforesaid be, and the same is hereby, amended so that it will read as follows:

"SEC. 4. Appointments of letter-carriers in cities having two or more classes shall be made to the class having the minimum rate of pay, and promotions from the lower grades in said cities shall be made to the next higher grade at the expiration of one year's service, on certificate of the postmaster to the efficiency and faithfulness of the candidate during the preceding year: Provided, however, That the Postmaster-General be, and he hereby is, authorized to appoint one or more substitute letter-carriers, whose compensation shall be $1 per annum and the pro rata compensation of the carriers whose routes they may be required to serve: And provided further, That no boxes for the collection of mail-matter by carriers shall be placed inside of any building except a public building or railroad station."

SEC. 3. That all laws inconsistent herewith are repealed.

Mr. McMILLIN. I demand a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] desire to control the time in opposition to the bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish first to hear the reasons that may be given for the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] will explain fully to what extent this bill increases salaries.

Mr. BINGHAM. This subject is so familiar, especially to those who represent large cities, that I had not expected it would be necessary on this occasion to make any presentation of facts in connection with the bill, or urge anything in its support. I will, however, explain the changes which it proposes to make in the existing law on the subject, the law of 1879. This bill proposes to establish by law a grade of substitute letter-carriers. Such a grade has been organized for seventeen years under the regulations of the Department; but the Postmaster-General in his report has asked that this body of letter-carriers may exist under statute. To this class of employés $1 a day is at present allowed, in order that they may come under the obligations of the law; and in addition they receive for every day's service that they perform the pro rata compensation of the man whose place they fill. The average pay received by these substitute letter-carriers is about $400 a year.

The law of 1879 fixes the grade of auxiliary letter-carriers with a compensation at $400 a year. It has been found that with the present cost of living this compensation is unjustly and unreasonably small; for these auxiliary carriers in the large offices, by reason of the increase of work since the establishment of this grade of carriers, perform the same service as those receiving $800 a year and $1,000 per annum. This is the fact at all first and second class offices. It is proposed in this bill that hereafter auxiliary letter-carriers shall be appointed at $600 per annum instead of $400.

There is another class of carriers who receive $800; and let it be remembered that a man is not appointed in the first instance to an $800 position, is not appointed to the position even of auxiliary carrier at $400 or, as we propose, $600; but in the first place he must go in as a substitute carrier; and in all the large cities it takes a little more than two years before a man advances from the grade of substitute to that of auxiliary.

Again, the carrier has reached the $800 grade; it is the purpose of this bill after one year's service in said grade that he shall be promoted to the $1,000 class. In other words, to state it briefly, in accordance with some letters I have before me—I will read for the better information of the committee, so that the illustration will more forcibly exhibit the delay attending any increase of pay to the $800 carrier unless after many years of service:

POST-OFFICE, CINCINNATI, OHIO, May 15, 1882.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 11th instant is at hand.

So much depends upon the increase of force by authority of the Post-Office Department, and upon the uncertainty attending casualties in the higher grade, that it is difficult to give a satisfactory answer to your questions. I will, however, give some facts in connection with the matter, and make as close an approximation as possible to the time you inquire about.

Since the present law went into effect but two carriers of the $800 class have been promoted to the $1,000 class in this office.

During the same time nine auxiliaries have been promoted to the $800 class, four by vacancies in the higher grade, and five by order of the Department.

It takes over two years in this office for an auxiliary to reach the $800 class, and no substitute has ever reached the $1,000 class, nor are any likely to for a good many years.

I believe I am safe in saying that a man who should be appointed a substitute carrier in this office to-day would not reach the $1,000 class in less than twenty years, provided of course that no extraordinary increase in the carrier-service takes place.

There would be forty $800 men between the ranking auxiliary and the $1,000 grade, the larger portion of whom are young men.

I trust you will pardon me for going outside the subject of your letter sufficiently to say that I am now working my auxiliaries very nearly and in some cases quite full time. I cannot otherwise meet the demands of the public with my limited force. I justify myself for imposing upon these men work entirely disproportionate to their pay by the hope that relief will soon be afforded them by your honorable body.

Very respectfully,

S. A. WHITFIELD, Postmaster.

Hon. HENRY H. BINGHAM, Washington, D. C.

The postmaster at Chicago, Illinois, writes me as follows:

CHICAGO POST-OFFICE,
Chicago, Illinois, May 15, 1882.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 11th instant, asking me to inform you of the length of time it will take to promote a substitute carrier to auxiliary, through the auxiliary class, to $800 class, and through that grade to the $1,000 grade, has been received.

In reply, I have the honor to inform you that, as shown by our records since 1879, the average time a substitute has had to serve as such before reaching the grade of auxiliary has been one and eleven-twelfths years, and for an auxiliary to the $800 grade, one year.

In regard to the estimated length of time of a person appointed a substitute to-day before he would reach the $1,000 compensation under the conditions of existing statute I have selected a case approximating a fair average. This man was appointed a substitute July 15, 1879, promoted to auxiliary April 1, 1881; service as substitute, one year eight months and seventeen days. He was promoted from auxiliary to $800 grade December 16, 1881, having served as an auxiliary eight months and seventeen days. This man is number seventy-seven on the roll of second ($800) class carriers. There have been eleven carriers of this office advanced to the $1,000 grade during the past two years. Taking the individual case I have mentioned as a basis, fourteen years would be required from the time a carrier entered the second grade before he would reach the $1,000 annual compensation; add to that the two years five months and three days he served before reaching the second grade, would require sixteen years and five months for him to reach the maximum grade.

Very respectfully, &c.,

F. W. PALMER, Postmaster.

Hon. HENRY H. BINGHAM,
Chairman Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The postmaster at Saint Louis, Missouri, writes me the following:

POST-OFFICE, SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, May 15, 1882.

SIR: I inclose you a detailed statement of ten carriers which I think will fully answer your questions. You will observe that there are forty-eight carriers of the second class now awaiting promotion; the last of whom would under the present law, according to the average changes, reach the first class about the years 1890-1892. The carriers come into more direct contact with the people than any other class of employés. The position is one of great responsibility. Often large sums of money, important business contracts, and even human life is at stake and depending on a prompt and correct delivery. Your intelligent experience, however, in the conduct of a large office makes any enforcement of this argument unnecessary. The facts demand that the men who are placed on the force should be competent and reliable men, and to procure and retain such men they should be paid a reasonable compensation, and certainly $1,000 is not too much. Our service is often crippled by the fact that our best men gradually resign because they cannot live respectably on $800, and can do better elsewhere, especially when business is prosperous and other avenues of compensative labor are open to them.

Very respectfully,

SAMUEL HAYS, P. M.

HON. HENRY H. BINGHAM,
Chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads,
Washington, D. C.

THIRD DIVISION, SAINT LOUIS POST-OFFICE.
(Carriers, Box, and General Delivery.)
Saint Louis, Missouri, May 15, 1882.

SIR: The last five carriers who were promoted to first class are as follows:

R. L. White, substitute, July 1, 1875; second class, December 1, 1875; first class, September 3, 1881.

J. H. Mitchell, substitute, October 1, 1875; second class, February 10, 1876; first class, September 16, 1881.

B. C. Wetmore, substitute, October 22, 1875; second class, February 10, 1876; first class, October 25, 1881.

H. M. Day, substitute, November 13, 1875; second class, February 10, 1876; first class, April 28, 1882.

L. Merz, substitute, February 18, 1876; second class, July 25, 1876; first class, May 1, 1882.

The last five who were promoted to second class are:

J. H. Getty, substitute, December 4, 1880; auxiliary, October 1, 1881; second class, January 21, 1882.

P. E. Hanley, substitute, January 22, 1881; auxiliary, October 1, 1881; second class, February 4, 1882.

W. C. Flynn, substitute, April 7, 1881; auxiliary, October 1, 1881; second class, April 25, 1882.

W. T. Wheeler, substitute, April 8, 1881; auxiliary, October 1, 1881; second class, May 1, 1882.

J. Finan, substitute, June 2, 1881; auxiliary, October 1, 1881; second class, May 15, 1882.

There are forty-eight second-class carriers awaiting promotion to first class between the two groups above mentioned.

Respectfully, yours,

H. C. WRIGHT,
Superintendent.

SAMUEL HAYES, Esq., Postmaster.

The postmaster at Boston writes me as follows:

POST-OFFICE, BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS, May 13, 1882.

DEAR SIR: Will you kindly allow me to add to my letter of this date, in reply to yours of 11th instant, that I most sincerely hope that the compensation to auxiliary carriers will be raised to $600 per annum. It is clearly, in my judgment, in the interest of true economy and the morale of the service, and is indeed right and just in every aspect of the matter.

Very respectfully, yours,

E. S. TOBEY, P. M.

Hon. H. H. BINGHAM, M. C., Washington.

The postmaster at Albany, New York, writes:

Eight hundred men have been in the service seven, eight, and nine years; but two promotions since 1879. Would take about fifteen years to gain the first grade.

The postmaster at Baltimore, Maryland, writes:

Not more than one or two promotions occur during the administration of a postmaster's term of four years, and the last man will grow gray in the service before he reaches the first grade under present law.

The postmaster at Detroit, Michigan, writes:

There has been but one promotion in three years, and taking that as a rule it will be forty-eight years before the man who is now last on the list will reach the first grade.

The postmaster at Pittsburgh says, "it will be from ten to twelve years."

I will also include in my remarks the circular notice issued by the postmaster at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, relating to applicants for place in the carriers' service and the character they must maintain and possess:

POST-OFFICE, PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA, June 2, 1881.

Circular for the information of persons applying for positions as letter-carriers.

After July 1 the carrier force of this office will be composed of 269 regular carriers, 65 auxiliary carriers, and as many substitute carriers (40 to 60) as may be required to do the work of absent regular or auxiliary carriers.

The pay of carriers at this office is as follows: 168 regular carriers, $1,000 per annum; 101 regular carriers, $800 per annum; 65 auxiliary carriers, $400 per annum.

Substitute carriers do not have regular work and do not receive regular pay, being entitled only to the pay of carriers whose work they do for such time as they actually work.

Substitute carriers should earn, on an average, as much as $400 per annum.

A substitute carrier furnishes a bond for $1,000 and takes the required oath of office, which stands good until he is promoted, unless, for any reason, a new bond or oath is required.

Each regular, auxiliary, and substitute carrier provides himself twice a year with a regulation uniform.

A man appointed to the carrier force of this office has his name placed at the bottom of the list of substitute carriers, and is entitled to promotion in turn only as vacancies occur above him.

The work required of carriers is severe and responsible, and only men who are physically strong, who are regular and steady in their habits, who desire to remain permanently in the service, and who can and will support themselves and families without incurring debt should apply for positions on the force.

An applicant must furnish ample and satisfactory proof of his integrity of character before any examination will be made as to his other qualifications for the position.

H. S. HUIDEKOPER, Postmaster.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these statements illustrate the hardships of the present law. A man in this service, commencing as a substitute, making about $400 a year, takes from twelve to twenty years before he reaches the grade of $1,000. This bill proposes simply this: to appoint a man a substitute carrier. He averages about $400 a year. It takes him two years to get through that grade, and he is then to be appointed an auxiliary carrier, at $600. After one year's service in that grade he is promoted to $800. After one year's service in that grade he is promoted to $1,000. It is only a fair living to a class of men who are under security, who buy two uniforms a year, who deliver registered and other valuable mail matter, always under temptation, who are never allowed a day's leave of absence, if sick must pay for their substitute, and must be on duty every day, working the three hundred and sixty-five days of the year. I will include in my remarks the address of the auxiliary carriers of Boston, Massachusetts, which clearly sets forth their difficulties and hardships:

Address by the auxiliary corps of letter-carriers of Boston to the members of the Forty-seventh Congress.

GENTLEMEN: We, the auxiliary corps of letter-carriers of the city of Boston, Massachusetts, do earnestly petition you to look with kind and attentive consideration on our deplorable condition. For $400 a year we labor hard and intelligently; for $400 a year we are obliged to support a family, which amount is utterly inadequate for providing ourselves with the bare necessaries of life. Suppose, as an example of the inadequacy of our salary, that we cite the cost of a few things in order to show how far a man can go on the yearly stipend received by a member of our class: two uniforms a year, at a cost of $35; rent of tenement in any respectable part of our city, $15 a month, making a yearly amount of $180. Already, but for two items, uniforms and rent, $215 is expended, leaving $185 for providing clothes, fuel, food, light, &c., for our families, almost every one of us being married. We are expected to be of good moral character, of more than average intelligence, to possess the energy and peculiar ability requisite for the performance of our duties; our hours are long and labors severe, and as compensation for all this we receive not one-half what we would command in any other business demanding as many qualifications.

As an incentive, the chance for advancement is held up, which chance is not only no better but not even as good as that thrown out in the ordinary business walks of life. It may be said that the advantages of advancement will repay deficiencies at present existing with us, advancement will come in three or four years; but until it comes how are we to keep body and soul together? Is it not handicapping the settled man of family and giving the chance to irresponsible parties whose sole ambition is to take care of themselves only and whose intention is to lead an unsettled life? When advancement occurs is the salary then so large as to allow a man to do much more than support himself and family in a respectable manner and in any better manner than do thousands of others in business which requires neither the same amount of responsibility nor of intelligent labor? We cannot exist under our present conditions. We are compelled to live, be clothed, and act in a way which will reflect honor and credit upon our Government, and must we be compelled to withdraw from necessity and count the time spent in the Government employ as so many months or years of our lives thrown away? What we ask for is but a chance to live.

Gentlemen, we have now stated our case to you and we rest satisfied that after knowing our condition you will assist in speedy legislation toward the alleviation of our reasonable wants.

Submitted with respect.

A. F. GORDON, Secretary.
G. W. GOODELL,
G. W. HARRINGTON,
R. T. MURPHY,
E. L. SMITH,
A. J. BAILEY,

Executive Committee of Boston Auxiliary Letter-Carriers' Association.

Mr. Speaker, I now reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Was not this bill unanimously reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads?

Mr. BINGHAM. It is reported unanimously from that committee.

Mr. McMILLIN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who reported this bill, for a few moments. If I understand the proposition correctly it is confined to first-class cities of this country. Am I correct as to that?

Mr. BINGHAM. It will be necessary to explain what second-class cities are. Cities with a population less than 75,000 are second class. It is only in the very large cities they have substitute carriers.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman mean this applies only to first-class cities?

Mr. BINGHAM. It applies to first and second class cities. In the second-class cities the auxiliary letter-carrier will receive $600 a year.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to ask my friend another question. What will be the annual increase if these salaries be increased as proposed?

Mr. BINGHAM. That will depend wholly on the appropriation annually allowed for the postal service.

Mr. HOLMAN. If we allow this increase of course appropriation will have to be made to carry it into effect.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope gentlemen will speak a little louder or that conversation will cease in the Hall, for it is next to impossible to hear what the gentlemen are saying.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course, Mr. Speaker, appropriation will be made in accordance with any law passed by Congress. I wish to know from the gentleman from Pennsylvania if this bill be passed what will be the annual increase required?

Mr. BINGHAM. I think about $100,000, and possibly not that much, and for this reason: the Department has waited assignments to the letter-carrier cities until Congress determined in reference to this proposition. It will be a month, or one-twelfth of a year, before it will go into effect. The annual increase caused by this bill will amount perhaps to $100,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me a fairer rule could be adopted than that proposed by this bill. I think the law as it has heretofore stood was reasonable enough, except it would be just and fair and promotive of valuable public interests in large cities if there were a moderate annual increase of salaries. The benefits of this law will suggest itself at once, and to go up $200, from $400 to $600, from $800 to $1,000, and at once make an annual increase of the expenses of the Post-Office Department, I think, is not a reasonable proposition.

The tendency to increase the salaries of Government employés is naturally very strong in this country. Many influences are brought to bear in that direction. Here for instance is a very meritorious class of public employés who come in daily contact with the people of the cities whom they serve, and hence the effect has been that efforts have been made for years to secure an increase of their compensation. Now I think the compensation is fully up to the average compensation received throughout the country for services involving the same amount of labor, and the same degree of responsibility; and I do not believe that the salaries of the employés of this Government should materially exceed the compensation paid to men in private life; and I believe that the real reform in the civil service of this country, that which will purify and elevate, will be the removal of those incentives which now exist and are largely increasing to draw into the public service young men from all classes of our populace who have a desire to press into such employments for the reason that they furnish perhaps larger salaries and ordinarily less exhaustive labors than equal service in private employment, either physical or mental.

I do not therefore believe in the increase of salaries as a general rule, nor do I believe in paying any salaries to Government employés beyond what is fair and reasonable, so as to secure the best degree of integrity and efficiency in that service. On the contrary, I regard the tendency to increase salaries and the increased eagerness to enter public employments as the great evil of the hour attaching to our republican system of Government; and while it may be said with perfect truth that this class of employés now under consideration is a very meritorious class, yet the fact that gentlemen are anxious to secure these appointments and are willing to perform the duty at the salaries now paid is an indication that the compensation is fairly sufficient. Hitherto, as has been admitted on all sides, this service has been well supplied.

Another thing, Mr. Speaker, this is a service which pertains exclusively to the larger cities of the country, and is undoubtedly paid at the expense of the rural populace. The great cities of the country will undoubtedly perpetuate this system, and the smaller cities will have it increased from time to time, and yet the whole amount of the expense is not paid by them but is drawn from the general revenues of the country, and it is consequently that much taken from these revenues drawn from all alike, as much from the rural population as from the cities for the benefit of these favored localities where this service exists. I believe the system of letter-carriers is now regarded as an admirable one, and, as I have said, will naturally be perpetuated, and it would be useless as well as unwise to make an effort now to do away with it.

But I must insist, as one of the representatives of the people upon this floor, that it is not the part of wisdom nor sound policy to seize upon the efficient manner in which such public service is performed as a means to secure an increase of salary beyond the compensation received by the same class of persons, or persons performing duties no more onerous and exacting in private life. I would be content, as I have suggested already to the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to commence with the salaries as they are now fixed and take that as a basis, and because of the integrity with which the duties are preformed and the faithfulness of the officers grant a small annual increase of compensation. But I doubt the wisdom of adding at one time the large increase which is proposed here, involving an expenditure of $100,000 from the public Treasury.

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana, if he will permit me, if he has any idea of the amount of labor performed by this class of employés, the auxiliary letter-carriers?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes. I understand they have very considerable work to do, and, as I have said, the work is very well done.

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows that in summer and in winter, in cold or in heat, these men have to deliver from a thousand to one thousand two hundred letters per day?

Mr. HOLMAN. Undoubtedly my friend must understand that I am aware of these facts.

Mr. ELLIS. That they have to knock at a thousand doors, or mount a thousand or one thousand two hundred door-steps, and ring a thousand or one thousand two hundred door-bells to deliver these letters?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am very well aware of the extent of their duties, but I do not believe that they do more in that respect or that the labor is any more exacting than that which is done by the great majority of people in private life who are employed in private establishments.

Mr. McMILLIN. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] has failed to assign any good reason why the salaries proposed to be raised by this bill should be now increased that did exist when the law was first enacted. I am one of those who do not believe that salaries should be raised until we are able to reduce the burdens now resting upon the people, and therefore I am opposed to the increase of salaries for these or any other of the employés of the Government. But my object in rising, sir, was principally to call the attention of the House to the fact that we are now in a condition when we can properly relieve the people to a limited extent at least by a reduction of the postage upon letters and newspapers mailed from the office of publication. I must express my surprise that notwithstanding the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have had lying before them for some time bills for this purpose, they have not reported any of them, but instead have brought in a bill to increase the salaries of the employés of that Department, thus necessitating the absorption of the receipts of the postal revenues and thereby postponing the opportunity for reduction of the rates of postage.

Mr. COX, of New York. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois, if it should turn out that this measure would save revenue and not be a measure of expense, if he would vote for it?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It would take longer than the time that I have at my command for gentlemen to convince me that raising salaries can increase the revenue of the Department. I will further say, upon the question of reduction, I am satisfied it will be found at this day, as it was found in England and as it has been found in every instance in this country where we have reduced letter postage, that the reduction will greatly multiply the letter mail matter and thereby will increase the receipts of the Department; and I feel sure this committee would perform a meritorious duty to the country by reporting the measure to reduce letter postage at least to two cents per half ounce.

Again, I wish to call particular attention to a bill which I introduced and had referred to a committee repealing the section of the law requiring postage on newspapers mailed from the office of publication. I regard that as a tax upon the intelligence of the people which the postal revenues can afford to dispense with. This would occasion but a comparatively small reduction of receipts. In answer to a resolution of inquiry which I presented to this House, the Postmaster-General on the 18th of May last reported to this House that the total receipts from second-class matter or newspaper postage mailed from offices of publication was only $1,399,048.64, and the Postmaster-General recommended the repeal of postage on second-class matter and to allow newspapers and magazines mailed at the office of publication to be sent free through the mails. This is done now within the boundaries of counties where newspapers are published. I think we might well take off the postage entirely from newspapers that are mailed from the office of issue and leave them to go through the mails free.

This would greatly tend to cheapen the cost of newspapers to the people and promote the diffusion of knowledge among the people.

I also concur in the suggestion that the postage on merchandise should be increased. If this is done the reduction of letter and newspaper postage will be fully covered.

I ask that the letter of the Postmaster-General be published in the RECORD:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., May 18, 1882.

SIR: In response to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 29th of April, 1882, "that the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, requested to inform this house of the total weight, cost of carrying, and the postage collected on second-class mail matter during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, together with his opinion of the propriety of abolishing the postage on such mail matter," I have the honor to state that the revenues collected from mail matter of the second class during the years specified were $1,399,048.64. That sum is equal to about 3.3 per cent. of the whole postal revenue for the year.

It is not possible to do more than approximate to the weight of that class of matter transported; the records of the Department show only the weight of matter on which postage by law is chargeable. That weight, of course, is 69,952,432 pounds. That portion of second-class matter which circulates within the county of publication, and so under the law pays no postage, is not weighed.

The only data in the Department from which the weight can be estimated points to the conclusion that postage is paid only on about one-fourth the total weight of second-class matter carried. It is still more difficult to estimate the cost of transporting such matter.

The cost per pound at which the mail is carried differs according to the mode of transportation. The rate is different on star and steamboat routes from what it is on railway lines. That rate also, as is well known, differs greatly on different railways, according to the total weight carried thereon.

The following table, prepared by the Superintendent of Railway Mails, shows the different distances for which two cents will carry one pound at the rates paid on different roads:

Rate paid per mile per annum.	Average number of pounds carried daily.	Distance for which 2 cents will carry one pound.
		Miles.
$42 75	200	34.15
64 13	500	48.06
85 50	1,000	85.47
106 88	1,500	102.50
128 25	2,000	113.89
149 63	3,500	170.80
171 00	5,000	213.50
192 38	7,000	683.06

But for the express command of the House of Representatives I should hardly venture to express an opinion as to the propriety of abolishing postage on second-class matter. I have no exclusive or exceptional means of forming an opinion on the subject. Nevertheless, my opinion is that such postage should be abolished. Of course it will add somewhat to the cost of the service and it will diminish the revenues nearly one and a half million of dollars.

I may be too sanguine, but unless I am misled by figures, which seem to have been well considered, the business of the Department will, during the next fiscal year, upon the present basis, show a surplus nearly equal to that sum.

It is true the deficiency in the postal service for the fiscal year which ended on the 30th of June last was $2,481,129.35. That is a large deficit. It does not encourage the remission of postages. But the very rigid and judicious scrutiny which during the last year the Second Assistant Postmaster-General bestowed upon that branch of the service under his direction has already effected a reduction in the cost of transportation over star routes of more than $1,700,000. Very nearly the whole of the star and steamboat service has been readjusted and relet for a term of four years from the 1st of July next.

The precise cost of that service under the new contracts cannot now be stated, but it is believed it will be quite a million less than the present cost. If this estimate is realized more than the whole deficit of June, 1881, will be saved in the cost of the star and steamboat service during 1883.

This, however, is not all profit. As the quantity of mail matter increases, the cost of handling it must increase, though not in the same ratio. And while the cost of star service is greatly diminished, the cost of railway service will be considerably increased, because both of the greater number of the pounds carried and the greater number of miles traversed. After these deductions are made, however, it is believed the total cost of mail transportation will be considerably less during the next fiscal year than in any recent year.

It is also gratifying to know that while expenditures are decreasing the revenues are increasing. That, indeed, has been our experience from year to year.

Even if these gratifying predictions are not realized, it does not necessarily follow that postage on second-class matter should not be abolished.

There seems to be a conflict of opinion as to whether the postal service should be administered as a business or as a beneficence. It is in fact under existing laws administered upon neither principle. Existing laws discriminate both in respect of sections to be served and of classes of mail to be handled. In one section of the Union the mail service is a lucrative business; in the other it is a great charity. In twelve States and one Territory the service yielded during the last fiscal year a net revenue of $4,892,219.65. In the remaining States and Territories the same service was conducted at a net loss of $7,501,127.49.

First-class matter, consisting of personal correspondence, sealed or open, is undoubtedly handled at a profit. Fourth-class matter, consisting of merchandise in packages not exceeding four pounds in weight, is handled at a great loss. No one will dispute the first proposition; no one can safely dispute the last.

The Government has no monopoly of the carriage of merchandise as it has of letters. It competes with all other carriers for the business of carrying merchandise, and it competes upon very unequal terms. The Government has but one rate for all distances, long or short. All other carriers vary rates according to distance. Sixteen cents per pound is an exorbitant charge for the carriage of goods between Boston and New York. But as the Government will not carry for less, other carriers do that business. That rate does not pay between New York and Arizona. Consequently, the mail is burdened with everything which can be sent in four pound packages to such distances. Wherever a profit is to be made others make it. Only where a loss is to be incurred are the mails employed for the carriage of fourth-class matter.

Consequently, the nation is taxed that the trader in New Mexico or Idaho may stock his shop with small wares at less than the cost of transportation, and that he may buy in New York or Boston rather than in San Francisco. To discriminate in favor of one section of the Union is sanctioned, if not by reason, at least by prescription. It has always been so, but to discriminate in favor of merchandise as against letters and newspapers or magazines is sanctioned by neither. That practice is of recent date and seems unwise.

If the public is to be taxed for the transportation of either class of mail matter, unquestionably it should be not for the fourth class, but for the second. Intelligence rather than trade should be fostered by the Government. It does not much concern the whole people what it costs the merchant of Montana to transport his teas or his shoes from New York or Boston. On the contrary, the diffusion of intelligence is a matter of public and of general concern.

It is hardly an extravagance to say that the circulation of newspapers and magazines in Texas is a benefit to Vermont, and vice versa. This fact is recognized by existing laws. To spread information among the people the Government not only sends free of postage hundreds of thousands of volumes through the mails, but actually prints them for free distribution.

If it be said these volumes detail the transactions of the Government which it is of prime importance to have widely known, that must be admitted. But it may well be doubted if the whole people get as much information of public affairs from the volumes gratuitously thrown at them as they do from newspapers and magazines which they purchase and pay for.

It is also noticeable that such publications are, under existing laws, distributed through the mails free of postage within the county of publication. There does not seem to be any sound reason why the Government should distribute a New York newspaper freely within the county of New York, or a Boston paper within the county of Suffolk, and yet charge postage on the same newspapers when they cross the lines of those counties.

It happens not unfrequently that newspapers or other second-class matter is published in towns which are traversed by the line dividing two counties. It does not seem reasonable to send papers free to the subscribers on one side of the line and to exact postage from those on the other side.

Other considerations might be urged, but the foregoing are the principal ones which have led me to the conclusion that Congress may, at the present time, safely abrogate all discrimination between subscribers to newspapers and magazines, and send the same through the mails without charge, whether such subscribers reside within the county of publication or outside of it.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. O. HOWE,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. J. W. KEIFER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that in the ten or twelve minutes occupied by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, who asks the passage of this bill, not a single fact was given showing that the public service demanded this increase of salaries. You may read his speech when it appears in the RECORD, or you may recall it now as it fell on your ears, and the fact stands that the only reason he gave for the bill was that the promotions are not rapid enough.

I for one hold that the object of the establishment of this Government is not to increase promotions. I think it will be accepted, too, as sound doctrine that the Post-Office Department ought ultimately, if it can, be made self-sustaining, in order that those who use the service may pay for it. It can only come in that way. That day is postponed every time we increase the expenditures of the Department.

If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] wants to increase promotions and give equality of salaries he may begin at home. For right here in this House and in the other end of the Capitol and in the folding-room you will find men performing the same service, and one getting a salary 20 or 25 per cent. larger than the other receives.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. DUNN.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has no time to yield. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] desire to occupy the remainder of his time?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire, if I can, to get the attention of the House. I think the House ought to vote intelligently on this matter.

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order.

Mr. COX, of New York. The Speaker will remember the trouble we had in having the pay of these letter-carriers raised against the same kind of objection as is now urged. The matter is certified to as beyond all doubt that these local letter-carriers are a source of revenue and not of expense.

I have only two minutes, but I will ask the Clerk to read a statement from the report of the Postmaster-General, which shows in 1881 a surplus of nearly $800,000 growing out of this very service.

Mr. BINGHAM. And this year it will be a million.

Mr. COX, of New York. And this year, as the chairman of the committee, who was formerly a postmaster himself, holding that position in Philadelphia, tells the House, it will be a million. I know the surplus is growing in New York, and I know every man who will take the trouble to read the statistics on this subject will vote for this bill, especially those men who claim that they wish to increase the revenues of the Department, and not add to its expenses. I especially desire to have this read for the benefit of my distinguished friend from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSHEND.]

The Clerk read as follows:

The receipts for local postage at the larger post-offices have enabled the Department to show, in several successive annual reports, that the free-delivery service, as a whole, has become a source of revenue instead of an item of expense; and I present herewith, in tabular form, a statement showing the remarkable increase during the past ten years, both in the operations of the service and in the receipts from local postage incident thereto:

Fiscal year ending June 30—	Letters, &c., delivered and collected by carriers.	Expenditures free-delivery service.	Receipts from local postage.	Deficiency.	Surplus.	Number of offices.

Mr. COX, of New York. That shows the truth of what I stated. We can make money out of this business instead of losing by it.

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. ROBINSON.]

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I am in favor of the passage of this bill. I desire to say a word to my distinguished friend from Illinois, who seems to be afraid that by reducing the postage we will make a great hole in the revenues of the Department, so that it would not be wise to increase the pay of these letter-carriers. I hope we will reduce the postage on letters to a great extent; not to two cents, but to one cent; and if there was a coin less than one cent in the currency of the country, I would move, when the bill comes properly before the House, to have the postage half a cent or a quarter of a cent on each letter under half an ounce. The moment you reduce the postage to one cent, you will have ten letters sent for one cent each for every letter now sent at three cents; and you can easily calculate the difference.

One pound of a certain kind of mail-matter is carried for two cents. With letter postage at the present rates there would be required ninety-six cents to carry the same weight of letters. If letters were charged at one cent each half ounce, it would require thirty-two cents to pay for the same amount of letter matter as is now carried for two cents, of a certain kind of mail matter.

I have not the time to go into the subject in two minutes. Whatever may be the result of this bill, I believe we are going to make a large reduction in the rates of letter postage, which reduction will double, treble, and quadruple the amount of income from the postal service. This country, with 50,000,000 of people, will then send ten and twenty letters for every one now sent. That very reduction of postage will place an additional burden upon these letter-carriers, who are the most meritorious and the worst paid class of employés that we have.

Mr. BINGHAM. I now yield one minute to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MCCOOK.]

Mr. MCCOOK. In my judgment, no more meritorious bill has ever been presented for the consideration of this House than the one now called up by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BINGHAM.] I know from personal observation that the letter-carriers of the city of New York are the hardest worked and the poorest paid public officials, not only in that city but in the United States. And so with the letter-carriers in every city in the United States.

I will guarantee that the letter-carriers of the city of New York do more work in one day and receive less pay for it than the average clerk in the city of Washington does in three days. It seems to me that we cannot go astray if we make some additional provision for this very worthy class of office-holders.

Mr. BINGHAM. I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUTTERWORTH.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I wish to supplement what my friend from New York [Mr. MCCOOK] has said, in this: the object of this bill is to do what was originally intended to be accomplished by the law of 1879, to secure adequate pay to these men. It so happened, however, that the peculiar drafting of that law failed to accomplish what it was intended to accomplish. It was thought that promotions would be sufficiently rapid to secure the proper and adequate compensation of these men. It turns out that owing to the peculiar phraseology of the law, by its practical working, they are not adequately paid.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If I have time to answer it.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Will you agree that these officers shall be excepted from the 2 per cent. assessments?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly; I am willing to have every official of the Government excepted who desires to be; it is entirely a voluntary thing.

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TOWNSEND.]

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. The present law was passed when I was a member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and I had charge of the bill on this floor. It was the best law we could pass at that time, and the most equitable. But it was then understood that in the operations of the departments amendments and changes would become necessary.

I have examined this bill carefully and I am satisfied that it is a good bill. It is but equitable that we should increase the pay of these employés, and the increase proposed by this bill will amount to only about $100,000 for the entire service, which is not so much as the increase of receipts from this service in a single year. I trust, therefore, that this bill will become a law, believing as I do that it will result to the best interests of the service.

The question was taken on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill as read; and upon a division there were—ayes 121, noes 15.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman call for the yeas and nays?

Mr. SCALES. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and there were—ayes 20, noes 100.

So (one-fifth not voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Accordingly the rules were suspended and the bill was passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

BUSINESS FROM THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. POUND. By direction of the Committee on Public Lands, I move to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday, p. m., the 20th instant, after the recess of said day, be set apart for the consideration of bills favorably reported by the Committee on Public Lands, and Senate bills upon the Speaker's table the subjects of which have been favorably reported on by said committee; this special order not to interfere with privileged reports, and if displaced by privileged reports, then to take effect the next succeeding day not occupied by privileged reports or previous special orders.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The subject-matter of the resolution does not seem to have been referred to that committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that makes no difference; it is a matter presented by the committee.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I call for a second.

Mr. O'NEILL. The gentleman ought to make it a general proposition to take up all Senate bills.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the second will be considered as ordered.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I object to that.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. POUND] should also except revenue appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin regulates this matter. A second is demanded of the motion to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution which has been read.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. VAN VOORHIS and Mr. POUND were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 31, noes 67.

So the motion to suspend the rules was not seconded.

INDIAN TRAINING-SCHOOLS.

The SPEAKER. The next committee in order under this call is the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HASKELL. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to move that House bill No. 1858 be taken from the House Calendar and passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to provide additional industrial training-schools for Indian youth, and authorizing the use of unoccupied military barracks for such purpose.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to set aside, for use in the establishment of normal and industrial training-schools for Indian youth from the nomadic tribes having educational treaty claims upon the United States, any vacant posts or barracks, so long as they may not be required for military occupation, and to detail one or more officers of the Army for duty in connection with Indian education, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, at each such school so established: Provided, That moneys appropriated or to be appropriated for general purposes of education among the Indians may be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the education of Indian youth at such posts, institutions, and schools as he may consider advantageous, or as Congress from time to time may authorize and provide.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand a second upon this motion.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will be recognized to control the time in opposition to the motion.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] will explain fully the character of this bill.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, very nearly $200,000 have been appropriated by this Congress to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior for the education of Indian youth belonging to tribes with whom we have treaty stipulations. This bill simply provides that military barracks unused and not needed for military purposes may, if the Secretary of War shall so desire, be set apart for the establishment of industrial training-schools for Indian youth, thereby saving the expense of erecting buildings for the purpose. The measure has been twice reported unanimously by the Committee on Indian Affairs. It has been urged upon Congress by every board connected with Indian education. It has been recommended by both the present Secretary of the Interior and his predecessor. It contains no appropriation of money. It simply allows the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent of the Secretary of War, to take possession of these unused military posts wherever they may be contiguous to this educational work, to establish schools there, and expend there the money already appropriated or such sums as may hereafter be appropriated. It binds Congress to no appropriation in the future. The schools will be continued from year to year only as you appropriate for them. If they are continued, these unused posts may be used, so that no money will needlessly be expended for the erection of buildings.

The bill also provides that if the Secretary of War chooses he may detail an Army officer to take charge of the schools. But the policy of the present Secretary of War and of the Commander-in-Chief is against this to a great extent; and it is not expected that this authority will be exercised, although if it be desired in behalf of this educational system the bill allows it to be done.

I yield five minutes to my former colleague on the Committee on Indian Affairs, the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. POUND,] who introduced this bill.

Mr. POUND. Mr. Speaker, having introduced this bill, and taking as I do a deep interest in the question involved, I had expected when it came up for final action to submit a brief argument in its support. I am thoroughly convinced that ample provision for the industrial education and training of Indian youth, male and female, removed from parental and tribal influence and control, is the true policy for the Government to adopt. Such a policy vigorously prosecuted will, in my opinion, very soon solve the vexed Indian problem.

Train up the youth of both sexes to habits of industry and personal independence on the plan so well inaugurated by Captain Pratt at Carlisle Barracks, Pennsylvania; dissolve all tribal relations so far as they interfere with civil accountability; allot their lands in severalty, and encourage individuality of interest in labor and its results. In place of the distribution of food and raiment substitute farming and other industrial tools and implements; give them spades in place of powder, plows in place of guns, opportunity rather than hymns and prayers. Make every person amenable to law, and subject to local as well as national authority. Encourage citizenship, with all the responsibilities and privileges which it implies; break down as rapidly as practicable reservation lines; endow border communities with authority and means of defense; turn the face of the red man eastward, toward the rising instead of the setting sun.

But, Mr. Speaker, the condition of our Calendars will not justify prolonged discussion, and I respectfully ask that the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which is brief and which does me the honor to adopt the report submitted by me to the Forty-sixth Congress in support of a similar bill, be printed in connection with or as a part of my remarks. I trust the bill will pass without a dissenting voice.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1858) to provide additional industrial schools for Indian youth, and authorizing the use of unoccupied military barracks for such purpose, report said bill back to the House with the recommendation that the same do pass.

There are now three training schools for Indian youth in the United States—one at Hampton, Virginia, one at the old military barracks at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, and one established by State authority in Oregon.

The result of these experiments demonstrates that this method of massing the Indian youth, male and female, at the training schools is the true way to advance civilization and education among the Indian tribes.

A very exhaustive report on this subject was made to the Forty-sixth Congress, second session, by Governor Pound, in which he embodies the report made on this same subject, on the 14th of June, 1879. This report of Governor Pound is adopted and made part of this report.

"The Committee on Indian Affairs, having further considered the bill (H. R. No. 1735) entitled 'A bill to increase educational privileges and establish additional industrial training schools for the benefit of youth belonging to such nomadic Indian tribes as have educational treaty claims upon the United States,' report the same back with amendments, with the recommendation that it pass when so amended.

"The committee, in reporting this bill for final action, beg to restate and reaffirm the considerations set out in their report of June 14, 1879, submitted for printing and recommittal, and to supplement and emphasize the same by citing a few pertinent facts of subsequent history. The following is from the report above referred to:

"'Your committee beg to submit, in support of such recommendation, that the Government has made treaty stipulations with several nomadic tribes of Indians, specifically providing for educational advantages for their youth "between the ages of six and sixteen;" notably with the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, Kiowas and Comanches, Crows, Navajoes, Sioux, Utes, and the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes.

"'These several treaty provisions now in force are, in like terms, as follows. (See treaty between the United States and the Cheyennes and the Arapahoes, proclaimed August 19, 1868, article 7:)

"'"In order to insure the civilization of the tribes entering into this treaty the necessity of education is admitted, especially by such of them as are or may be settled on said agricultural reservation; and they therefore pledge themselves to compel their children, male and female, between the ages of six and sixteen years, to attend school; and it is hereby made the duty of the agent for said Indians to see that this stipulation is strictly complied with; and the United States agrees that for every thirty children between said ages who can be induced or compelled to attend school a house shall be provided and a teacher competent to teach the elementary branches of an English education shall be furnished, who will reside among said Indians and faithfully discharge his or her duties as a teacher."

"'The treaties referred to were made in 1868; the tribes named including about 71,000 Indians, having upward of 12,000 youth eligible to such school advantages. Ten years have elapsed since these treaties were concluded, (twenty being the term of the stipulation,) and less than 1,000 youth have received schooling as provided. In what degree the failure to carry into effect these treaty provisions may be attributed to the failure on the part of the United States to provide adequate school facilities, or on the part of the several tribes to a disinclination or refusal to accept such facilities and compel the attendance of their children, your committee cannot definitely state, neither is it deemed material. It is clear that the material interests and well-being of the Indians and the Government, as well as the cause of civilization and humanity, alike demand that these provisions be fully carried out and enforced. This bill provides for the utilization, for such school purposes, of vacant military posts and barracks, "so long as the same may not be required for military occupation," and the employment of officers of the Army, either from the active or retired list, as teachers or otherwise, to be detailed by the Secretary of War, with no extra allowance for such service; such schools to be conducted as normal and industrial schools, for the training of Indian youth of the nomadic tribes, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. It is believed that the measures and methods so provided will prove economical, acceptable, and efficient, and, if thoroughly carried out and enforced, must eventuate in great and incalculable good to the Indians and to the Government. Industrial education, as a means of civilizing and elevating the savage, has ceased to be experimental.

"'The effort in this direction recently undertaken and now in successful progress at the Industrial and Normal Institute at Hampton furnishes a striking proof of the natural aptitude and capacity of the rudest savages of the plains for mechanical, scientific, industrial, and moral education, when removed from parental and tribal surroundings and influences. Upon this subject, in his report of November 1, 1878, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says:

"'"Experience shows that Indian children do not differ from white children in similar social status and surroundings in aptitude or capacity for acquiring knowledge, and opposition or indifference to education on the part of parents decreases yearly, so that the question of Indian education resolves itself mainly into a question of school facilities."

"'He further speaks of the present policy in this regard as not only "short-sighted," but "in direct contravention of treaty stipulation," and concludes that "what should be the work of a year will be protracted through a decade, and the work of a decade through a generation." In a letter addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, April 28, 1879, relative to the provisions of this bill, the Commissioner says "that the proposition to make use of unoccupied military posts or barracks and the detail of certain Army officers in connection with industrial and normal training schools for the benefit of Indian youth has the unqualified approval of this Department;" and, after quoting from his annual report, wherein attention is called to treaty violations on the part of the Government, and to the deficiencies of the present system, he adds:

"'"The plan of utilizing vacant military posts and barracks will in a degree meet the great deficiencies of this work. It has in it the merit of saving much in the cost of buildings for such as can be accommodated, and it is hoped the speedy execution of it may not be delayed for want of such necessary authority as is needed from Congress. The experience of the Department has been that the best results are obtained by a removal of the children from all tribal influence during the progress of education, so that educators can command all the time and attention of their pupils. Youth so educated return to their tribes as teachers, interpreters, and examples in farming, &c., and, if properly sustained and guided thereafter, prove far more effective guides than whites of the same capacity. Nothing is more essential than that Indian youth while passing through school should have thorough instruction in some practical branch of labor that will meet his or her needs for obtaining a livelihood after leaving school."

"'The schools contemplated to be established by the bill under consideration will have this direction. Farming, the care of stock, mechanics, and other needful industries will be an important feature, and it is expected that in course of time many of the teachers, interpreters, farmers, blacksmiths, carpenters, and other employés required at the agencies may be supplied by Indian youth educated for that purpose.

"'The Department has in course of training at the Hampton Normal and Industrial school in Virginia sixty-six Indians, boys and girls, from eight different nomadic tribes, and although this work was only begun last year the results already demonstrate that no better plan now exists. The Hampton school was established in the interest of the colored race, with the avowed purpose of teaching the "salvation of hard work." This spirit seems to meet the needs of the Indian race equally well, and the very considerable number of agents, teachers, missionaries, and others engaged in or interested in Indian educational work, who have visited and witnessed the methods of Hampton, join in commending it as just what the Indian needs. The intercourse between the youth at Hampton and their parents and people on the plains has produced extraordinary interest and demand for educational help from these tribes.

"'It is as commendable as it is notable that our modern systems of education are looking more and more to the training of hands to work. Useful employment either of the head or hands for all classes of society is absolutely essential to the preservation of good order, public and private morals, and good government. It therefore cannot be too strongly urged that in the education of Indian youth the primary aim should be to train the hands to work, and to impress upon them the absolute importance of useful labor to insure their well-being and happiness as well as the ability to properly converse, read, write, and calculate.

"'The following are some of the vacant posts with barracks and quarters which may be used for school purposes as proposed by this bill, named by the Adjutant-General, to wit: Fort Bridger, Wyoming; Carlisle Barracks, Pennsylvania; Fort Craig, New Mexico; Fort Cummings, New Mexico; Forts Harker and Larned, Kansas; Fort Marion, Florida; Fort Rice, Dakota; Fort Sedgwick, Colorado; and Camp Stambaugh, Wyoming.

"'Is it not wise economy to occupy these Government buildings and premises for the objects contemplated, employ (in part) Army officers who are fitted as teachers and otherwise in connection with such schools, and to vigorously and adequately provide for and enforce the treaty stipulations recited; thereby not only discharging a solemn government obligation and duty, but speedily accomplishing the education, elevation, and civilization of all the savages in our land? It is believed that herein will be found the true solution of the Indian question, and if adopted and duly executed a generation will not pass before the use of a standing army to protect our frontiers from Indian raids, depredations, barbarities, and murders will no longer be required.

"'In view of its treaty obligations and of every consideration of sound public policy, the Government can surely afford to enter upon and speedily consummate such a work. It cannot afford to longer neglect it.'

"Pending action upon this measure, and in pursuance of its policy, a school has been established in the Carlisle Barracks, in the State of Pennsylvania, which is progressing in a most successful manner.

"Section 7 of chapter 35 of the statutes passed at the first session of the present Congress provides 'that the Secretary of War shall be authorized to detail an officer of the Army not above the rank of captain for special duty with reference to Indian education.'

"Under authority of this act Captain R. H. Pratt, of the Tenth United States Cavalry, was detailed for this special service, and the barracks named above were assigned for the use of such school, which was opened in the month of October last with one hundred and fifty-eight pupils in attendance, of whom forty were females. These youths were voluntarily committed to the charge of Captain Pratt by their parents, and are mainly children of the chiefs and headmen of the Rosebud, Pine Ridge, and Sisseton agencies in Dakota Territory, the Cheyenne and Arapaho, Kiowa and Comanche, Pawnee, Ponca, and Nez Percé agencies in the Indian Territory, and the Green Bay agency of Wisconsin. Received in the rudest state of savagism, their progress is already most remarkable.

"Your committee, accompanied by the Secretary of the Interior and others, made a visit of inspection to this school on the 21st of February last, and were highly gratified with the methods of education and training adopted, and the marvelous advancement already manifest, which fully attest the feasibility and wisdom of such a policy. The following extract from a report submitted by Captain Pratt to the visitors on the occasion referred to will be of interest in this connection:

"'The aim of the school is to give education in the common English branches adapted to the condition in life of students; to inculcate habits of industry and thrift and to impart to them such knowledge in common useful pursuits as will make them feel self-reliant and incite them to free themselves from the position of Government paupers.

"'It is claimed for this school that it serves a double purpose—first, as an educator of those who are here, and second, as an educating and controlling influence over the Indians of the West. It is plain that they will feel a lively interest in an institution which shelters and provides for their children. It is also plain that the fact of having here so many children of chiefs and headmen is an effectual guarantee of the good behavior of the tribes represented. Our buildings furnish ample accommodation for 350 students; and by adding recitation-rooms, 500 can be handled. Increase of numbers would reduce the per capita cost.

"'An ordinary intelligence is now exhibited by the pupils in all the departments, and their progress is already greater than we had expected. Their personal influence on the Indians at home is very great, and is entirely on the side of friendship, good feeling, and progress. The tide of Indian sentiment has set toward education. Our correspondence with agents, educators, missionaries, and Indians themselves is very large, and it all indicates that the time has arrived when almost every Indian child may become a pupil in an English school.

"'The bill submitted by the Indian Committee, directing the use of vacant military posts for the establishment of industrial training schools, ought to provide the best opportunities for thousands, and their agency schools would receive new impetus, and through these means most of the wild Indians can surely be placed upon a self-supporting basis before many years.

"'To the foregoing might be added many significant data and other pertinent considerations, showing the feasibility, economy, and eminent fitness of the policy so well initiated in the school above described.'"

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Speaker, I sympathize in the objects of this bill, but I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin whether the proviso does not give the Secretary of the Interior too large a discretion. It provides, I believe, that all moneys appropriated for Indian education may be used for the purposes contemplated by the bill; and under this authority the Secretary of the Interior may at any time, it would seem, suspend the schools on reservations, and appropriate the money to these schools. Is that so?

Mr. POUND. I do not so understand it. Even if the discretion is so wide, there can certainly be no danger in it, for no Secretary would encourage any such policy.

Mr. SCALES. It seems to me dangerous, however, to give him the discretion to divert money from the purpose for which it is appropriated.

Mr. HASKELL. The appropriations as made provide what shall be done with the money.

Mr. POUND. Yes, sir; there are certain funds specifically appropriated for Indian education at the different agencies. This bill does not divert or encroach upon those specific appropriations; it only refers to the general educational fund.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, from a hasty examination of this bill it seems to me a very proper measure. Where the Government has abandoned its military posts in the West, it would seem to be eminently proper that those ancient agencies of oppression and wrong toward the Indian tribes should be made available to enable the Government to display something like the national humanity which it owes to these native tribes. I think, sir, that when the history of the last one hundred years shall be written it will be a pleasant thing for our children to find here and there a green spot in reference to our treatment of the Indians—an expression of national sympathy and national honor toward these disappearing tribes.

For myself, I am willing to go to any reasonable extent in aiding these remnants of the tribes to advance in the path of progress and development. I think the effort now being made by Congress and by our people everywhere to do something like justice to the Indians is deserving of the warmest commendation and support. I hope there may be no objection to the passage of this bill.

Mr. SCALES. Just one moment. I believe I was mistaken in the view I took of the pending proposition, because it gave to the Secretary of the Interior too large a discretion. I have since examined it, and find the provisions of the bill cover the point I was aiming at. I shall therefore, Mr. Speaker, support the bill.

Mr. HASKELL. I believe the bill is agreed to on all hands. I yield now to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. DEERING.]

Mr. DEERING. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this proposition, looking, as it does, to the education of Indian children. If we are right in our civilization, if education is better than ignorance, industry than indolence, then it is certainly time that we should give to this ill-fated race the benefit of a change.

Now, sir, what has been the policy heretofore of this Government toward the Indians? Until very recently it has been to drive them as far away as possible from us, to make and break treaties with them, and to carry on savage warfare and keep them in barbarism. If we wish to improve the condition of the Indians and settle the whole question we must change entirely the policy of the past. It is necessary that we should educate and lift them up to a higher plane, and in order to do that we must bring them nearer to us and more directly under the influence of our civilization.

We have in this country only about 253,000 Indians, all told. That is about a fair average of what we have had for a century. Only a few more in number than the population of the district I have the honor to represent on this floor, and still this handful of savages, barbarous people, has kept this country in constant perplexity, turmoil, and savage warfare since the foundation of the Government.

I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that the right way has been found at last. We have determined to devote attention to the Indian children, to educate them and train them up in habits of industry. The industrial policy is the all-important one. They must be made to understand that if they wish clothing and food and other necessaries of life they must work for them and earn them as white people do.

In a speech made by me on this floor in 1880 I declared that lawlessness and indolence would make fiends of any people on the face of the earth, and I am of the same opinion still. Take any community of white people, establish agencies among them, supply them with food and raiment and other necessaries, inculcate no habits of industry, but on the contrary let them live in indolence, roaming aimlessly from day to day and year to year, and how long would it be before they would degenerate into barbarism?

In 1880 it was my privilege to visit the Indian school at Carlisle. There I found Indian children representing eleven or twelve different tribes of wild Indians. They had just commenced their studies. Two or three months ago it was again my privilege to visit that same school, and there I found those same Indian children ranged in rooms and pursuing various industries with success and skill. In one working-room every part of the shoe was manufactured, in another every variety of tin-ware, and in another every part of the market-wagon; and I was informed that those Indian youths who were being instructed at that school could of themselves and without assistance lay out the work and put up entire the two-seated wagons upon which they were then employed. At that time I remarked to a friend near me: "Here, then, is the solution of the vexed Indian problem. When we can educate the Indian children, train them up to trades and the arts of farming and other industries, other matters of citizenship, homes in severalty, and other kindred questions will naturally take care of themselves."

That is all I have to say on the subject, Mr. Speaker; I am decidedly in favor of the pending proposition and hope the bill will pass.

Mr. HASKELL's motion was agreed to; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to a matter of personal privilege which was temporarily suspended in consequence of the absence of the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON.]

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the gentleman from New York will proceed. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I shall be very brief. Mr. Speaker, in the discussion of the naval appropriation bill, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] on the 6th instant closed the debate. I listened to the argument of the gentleman and to his remarks with a great deal of care and attention, because I had received an intimation that something of a personal nature would be introduced by him and used in his remarks against me, and that I had better give attention to it. But in the speech as delivered I observed nothing open to just objection. I find in the published report of this speech, however, which was delivered on the 6th of July and published in the RECORD of the 11th, a paragraph which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

I regret very much, Mr. Speaker, that I have but little time left to review the presentation of these subjects made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT.] That presentation was specious, though it pretended to be candid; was extravagant, though it assumed to be careful; was false, though it claimed to be frank. Though it was evidently founded upon information gathered from the malevolence and misrepresentations of others, the gentleman who presented it gave it the stamp of his approval with all that reckless confidence which seems to be his nature when called upon to indorse anything which impugns the conduct or misrepresents the motives of others. But time will only permit me to answer him in general terms.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Now, as I have said, I listened carefully and deliberately to the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey, and I am prepared to say that not one word of the paragraph which has just been read was delivered on the floor of this House in that connection. If it had been so delivered I should have availed myself of such privilege as the rules of this House afford and the usage authorizes on such occasions to protest against the use of such language.

In the first place, I will add that I have caused the notes of the official stenographer to be examined, and he informs me that no portion of that sentence is to be found in his notes of the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey on that occasion, which confirms the statement I have made.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should not make the slightest reference to this interpolation if it were an exercise of the ordinary privilege which is given to all gentlemen, as an enlargement of the argument of the gentleman from New Jersey. I concede it to be his right to make such enlargement and to make such statements in a fuller and plainer manner than he may have made them upon the floor of the House, and to render them clearer by any warranted addition. But it is not his right, in the revision of a speech, to insert a personal attack upon another member, and thus put into the RECORD a personal assault which he did not utter upon the floor of the House.

The attack to which I call attention here is personal in this sense that it charges me with having made misrepresentations, or false statements—not erroneous statements, not statements derived from false information, as he afterward did say, when I intervened promptly and corrected him—but that I had made absolutely "false statements" in this connection; this was not made upon the floor of the House, but the gentleman deliberately sits down in his study and inserts a personal charge which he did not make on the floor against me, of having made a false statement upon the floor and then proceeds to impugn my motives. Now, Mr. Speaker, whatever my motives may have been, the proper place to have impugned them was upon the floor of the House where I was face to face with the gentleman and ready to make such answer and such denial as the circumstances of the case warranted, and not insinuate them into the RECORD where I had no opportunity to reply.

I do not propose to criticise the language or the action of the gentleman from New Jersey beyond the mere statement of the fact as I have given it, that he availed himself of what he conceived to be his opportunity to attack me covertly after his speech had been delivered in open House, and leveled at me a personal attack charging false statements; a charge which he did not make upon the floor of the House, and which if made would have given me an opportunity then and there of meeting it and of protesting against the use of such language as a violation of the ordinary parliamentary rules of the House.

I confess, sir, that I do not know what my remedy is. But as the language was inserted in the RECORD and not used upon the floor of the House I think I have the right to require that that sentence shall be stricken from the RECORD. I therefore ask the Speaker of the House to order that the sentence just read shall be stricken from the RECORD, and if the Chair declines to do so I shall be compelled to ask the House to require that that sentence containing this attack upon me shall be stricken from the RECORD—I mean from the stereotyped edition.

Mr. ROBESON. I would be glad, Mr. Speaker, if the Clerk would report again the sentence to which the gentleman from New York has called attention.

The Clerk read as follows:

I regret very much, Mr. Speaker, that I have but little time left to review the presentation of these subjects made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT.] That presentation was specious, though it pretended to be candid; was extravagant, though it assumed to be careful; was false, though it claimed to be frank. Though it was evidently founded upon information gathered from the malevolence and misrepresentations of others, the gentleman who presented it gave it the stamp of his approval with all that reckless confidence which seems to be his nature when called upon to indorse anything which impugns the conduct or misrepresents the motives of others. But time will only permit me to answer him in general terms.

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Speaker, it is not my habit to write out my speeches. It is my habit to make what lawyers call "briefs," containing general propositions, from which heads certain arguments are made and conclusions drawn. How much of the sentence was actually delivered and how much was heading in my brief I cannot now say; but the gentleman from New York a few days previous to the day upon which I spoke had himself made an elaborate speech more than half of which was not delivered upon this floor, but which was afterward printed in the RECORD. Indeed, the gentleman himself said:

I have reached a point where I have carefully prepared my speech, and I therefore ask leave to print it—or something to that effect.

But for myself I am not accustomed, Mr. Speaker, to say anything on this floor which I do not believe to be a proper characterization of the subject-matter of which I treat. I repeat that the general presentation of the case as made by the gentleman from New York was specious, but not candid; that the presentation was fallacious, if he objects to the word "false," and this it was, though I did not use the word false with any personal application to him—that his presentation was fallacious, though it purported to be true.

I gave him credit then, and I am willing, if he wishes, still to afford him that credit, that he received his information from others; and I only stated what I think still to be true, that the defect of the gentleman's character—for he has defects which are known of all men—is a too inconsequent and too reckless indorsement of the attacks made by other men upon the character and reputation of his friends. It comes perhaps from a defect in disposition which the gentleman cannot help; but for myself I should have less confidence in my own character and should feel less self-respect in my own heart if I were willing always to impute the falsest motives and the basest purposes to every other man.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I find in the gentleman's speech here—not delivered upon this floor, but prepared deliberately beforehand and printed afterward—many suggestions which I do not think would escape all the criticism which he would wish to impute to my utterances. He says among other things, I find in looking over the speech now hastily:

It is a strain on the charitable side of our nature to refrain from charging criminal incapacity to any one who advised or directed that this vessel should be repaired.

As I had directed it, and as I had within a day or two before said that I assumed the responsibility of these things and did not desire to shelter myself behind the grave of a dead man, and as the gentleman in the earlier part of his speech quotes that declaration, to whom was that remark that it was a strain upon the charitable side of his nature to imagine that there was no criminality in the person who advised or directed, &c.—to whom was that directed; not in the heat of debate, not in the turmoil of controversy, but deliberately prepared before and printed afterward?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. But that declaration is not quoted.

Mr. ROBESON. Is that declaration argument——

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. You said I quoted it; I did not quote it.

Mr. ROBESON. Is that inference, is that enlarging any proposition which the gentleman says, and I agree, is proper—or is it a deliberate charge made in the body of the RECORD on a printed speech not delivered but afterward inserted in the RECORD?

I might go on through this speech and strip off the cover of specious pretense of reasonable moderation in it if I chose to do so. I cite that only as one proposition. I think I may possibly refer to another if I can turn to it in a moment.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot now turn to it. I will quote it if it is necessary. But I remember the gentleman said, it is here in his speech, I do not know whether he said it or whether he printed it in his speech—"whether these contracts were the result of lawful commerce between the Department and the contractor, or whether they were the result of criminal intercourse between those parties I will not undertake to say;" or, "whether they were the result of lawful commerce, which I do not believe, or of criminal intercourse, I do believe." I leave anybody to draw the fair inference of what was the moderation and what was the candor of the gentleman from New York in that remark.

The gentleman's candor will more thoroughly appear when I say that through all that speech there is a labored attempt to attack me over the shoulders of Mr. Isaiah Hanscom, who has, since I left that Department, gone to his grave, honored and beloved by those who knew him, leaving behind him in the ships he built for the Navy of the United States the proudest record of his genius. I am not one who would shelter myself behind the grave of any man; and the gentleman from New York knew it, and knows it to-day. There were other people mentioned in this debate who are also dead and whom I have cause to attack if I chose to do so. Mr. Lenthall also has gone to the grave. But I would not attack him, because I do not admire the nobleness or the courage of that animal which shrinks from the face of living man but gather in packs to howl above his grave. Mr. Speaker, that remark I make at least, and the reporter will find it in his notes. If there is anything unparliamentary in it——

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Will the gentleman repeat that remark? I would like to hear it. I did not hear what he was saying.

Mr. ROBESON, (raising his voice.) I said that I did not attack men who were quoted as experts in this debate, although I had cause to attack them; because I did not mean to lay my hand upon the grave of any man, and because I did nôt admire the courage or the character, nor desired to imitate the conduct, of the animal that shrinks from the face of living man to howl its detestation over his grave.

Mr. Speaker, as I have said, it comes with an ill grace from the gentleman to question these remarks, because he says they were not actually delivered in debate. I may not be able now to say how much of them was delivered, but I intended to deliver them, and I accept them now. I say again that his presentation was not frank, that it was specious, and although I will not say the gentleman told a falsehood, I do not wish to do that, I say his presentation—and that is the language of that quotation—was false. If he prefers another word I will substitute it—was fallacious; though it seems to be frank, though it was presented as frank. I characterized the presentation, and I gave him the credit in that statement of having received it from others, I said nothing unparliamentary or unusual in this. If the gentleman desires to have it stricken from that RECORD, it can be done; but it will all be in this RECORD, two or three times over. So that to strike it out amounts to nothing. But I will not ask him or ask this House to strike out anything of insinuation or anything of characterization of acts of mine, not of presentation, which are to be found here in his speech.

It is "a strain upon the charitable side" of my nature, I admit it, to speak as guardedly upon this subject as I do now speak. I repeat again that I cannot say whether that exact language was repeated on this floor or not; but I will say that there is no idea, no proposition, no argument, contained in that printed speech which I would not readily repeat, and which I did not mean to say when I was on the floor.

Mr. MILLER. Before the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] takes his seat, I want to ask him a question.

Mr. ROBESON. Oh! no, no.

Mr. MILLER. I want to know if the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] is the same gentleman who certified that the Morey letter was genuine?

Mr. ROBESON. I am not dealing with abstractions at this time.

Mr. MILLER. And who said that he so certified from long acquaintance with Mr. Garfield?

Mr. ROBESON. I am not entering upon that subject now. I have no desire to do other to-day than merely to say that the remark concerning which the gentleman shows so much sensitiveness is moderate compared with the remarks which are scattered through that portion of his speech which was not delivered but printed.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The gentleman from New Jersey seeks to evade the only issue that there is in this matter. That issue is that he has deliberately inserted in the RECORD a sentence attacking me personally, which he had not the courage or the manliness to utter on the floor of this House; and that under the cover of the RECORD, supposing that it might escape notice, he has made a personal attack which he would not have dared to make on the floor of this House in the regular course of debate. He says now he is willing to substitute some other word for the word "false."

Mr. ROBESON. I take that back after the remarks of the gentleman.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Then the gentleman charges, as I understand it, a falsehood against me. Now, let me say one word. When a man has been charged upon the floor of this House by a gentleman responsible for what he says with being a thief, a liar, and a perjurer, and takes no occasion to have it stricken from the RECORD and does not seek to hold the author of that language to any account, then it seems to me that anything he can say after that, in the face of gentlemen and in the face of the country, is simply a matter of utter and absolute contempt. [Some applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, in the preparation of the speech which I delivered in part and printed in part by the consent of the House I was most careful to avoid the use of all unparliamentary language or to make insinuations which in any way, in my judgment, could be deemed to be offensive.

And the language which the gentleman quotes, (and I take it it is the most severe words he can find in any portion of that speech,) that language is strictly parliamentary; and whatever it may attribute of criminality to any man only becomes a personal charge in his case if he chooses to assume it, for I had most carefully stated, I felt bound to state it, that the acts which I denounced were done by his subordinates, and they could only be charged to him in case he chose to assume the responsibility. And all through his speech he carefully avoided assuming the responsibility for those acts.

I understand him now to assume the responsibility. I say, then, that if he assumes the responsibility of those acts, then every word that I uttered, that those contracts were conceived in iniquity and born in sin and that they were corrupt, may be fitted to the gentleman and taken down as the charge I make against him.

Now, lastly, the language which I uttered was uttered in this House and in his presence, and he took no exception to it. But the language which I now seek to have stricken from the RECORD was not uttered in this House, but was concocted by the gentleman in the private recesses of his own room, after five days of reflection in what manner he should make answer to the allegations I brought against, not him, but against the administration of the Navy Department while he was its Secretary.

If he stands condemned, he stands condemned by no words of mine; he is condemned by the record of fact which he made, and every word of which I have derived, as I have assured him already, and assure this House, not from the sources which he indicates, but from the answers to the resolution which I introduced into this House in January last, made by the Navy Department, and from the official reports made by boards of that Department; and not one suggestion came from any individual whatever discharged from a navy-yard or otherwise.

It was a careful attempt to get at the truth, and I believe I have got the truth. I think the evidence of it is that the gentleman having no adequate answer to make in fact, sits down, concocts, and perpetrates a foul libel upon a fellow-member who had no opportunity to make answer to it. And there I leave the gentleman to get out of this disagreeable predicament in which he has placed himself as best he may.

Mr. ROBESON. My position may be disagreeable to the gentleman, but it does not trouble me. The gentleman says that he made his speech on the floor of this House. I ask him if he used these words on the floor:

It is a strain on the charitable side—

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. No; I did not.

Mr. ROBESON, (reading.)

It is a strain on the charitable side of our nature to refrain from charging criminal incapacity to any one who advised or directed these vessels should be repaired.

That is the only thing I can now turn to. I would take the time, if it were worth while, to examine the RECORD in this respect, and I have no doubt I could find many more equally specious but equally false charges.

Now, the gentleman from New York has a specious reputation in the country, which he earnestly cultivates through the columns of the newspapers and by the expenditure of his private means, which avail him alike for advertisement of himself and for the depreciation of others. I know something of his history. I shall not here recite it. But I do know that all that he is, and all that he has been, and all that he hopes to be, he owes to the charity of an old man whom I heard him seek to depreciate on this floor. I heard him say in substance on this floor that he objected to being called "the son-in-law of Mr. Cooper," and he hoped the time would come when Mr. Cooper's title of distinction would be that he was the father-in-law of Mr. HEWITT. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Speaker, wherever liberal science aids the mechanical arts, wherever well-applied charity builds up and elevates the labor of American workingmen, there Mr. Peter Cooper's name will be known long after that of his aspiring son-in-law is lost and forgotten—sunk to the grave, covered with the obloquy which he seeks to pile upon others.

Now, let me say that I could answer the gentleman if I chose in strains as abusive as his own. He knows, and I know, what was the familiar epithet by which his romancing youth was characterized in the State in which we both lived.

Now, then, I do not know that I ought to allude further to the gentleman after his remark. But this I will say, to point his attack on me: I think that the forgery of that document which was known as the Morey letter was a crime of the deepest dye; and while I do not charge the gentleman with having written it, I consider that the man who stood by the telegraph window and telegraphed to California, too late for denial, and after the dead President had denied it circumstantially, that it was ascertained to be true——

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Who did it?

Mr. ROBESON. Committed a crime——

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Who telegraphed that?

Mr. ROBESON. Committed a crime——

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Who did it? Who telegraphed that?

Mr. ROBESON. The man who stood at the telegraph window and signed the name of the chairman of the Democratic committee——

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Who did it?

Mr. ROBESON. And telegraphed to California, too late for denial, that the statements of that letter were ascertained to be true—whoever did that committed a crime, not as punishable, but as detestable——

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I did not do it.

Mr. ROBESON. As was the forgery of the original letter. I do not know that it can be proved according to the strict letter of the law, since I do not know how a case can be made; but if the gentleman will ask for a Congressional investigation——

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I do ask it.

Mr. ROBESON. I will aid him with all my might to obtain it, and see if it was true. [Applause.] I will contribute toward a fair investigation of the matter all that I have of influence, and then the gentleman may clear himself of what is believed against him in this country—the maintenance after denial by the dead President of the truth of that forgery; and it cannot be denied that standing before a court of justice——

Mr. BROWNE. I demand the regular order.

Mr. ROBESON. That standing before a court of justice he did, in the face of the rebuke of the bench——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] make a point of order?

Mr. BROWNE. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order that——

Mr. BROWNE. I should have made it much earlier had I foreseen the result of this debate. There have been two personal explanations and two attacks on each side, and I propose to insist that we proceed with the regular business of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point well taken.

Mr. BROWNE. In the first place, as a question of order, I insist that gentlemen take their seats.

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order. Gentlemen will resume their seats.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. So far as I am concerned, I see no occasion to pursue this matter further, and only ask that the paragraph to which I have referred be stricken from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist that the Chair shall rule on the matter of striking out?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I submit to the Chair there is a passage in the printed speech the Chair would have ruled out of order if delivered on the floor, and I ask it be stricken out of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be called on in that case to ascertain a question of fact, and that it cannot now enter upon.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. He admits the fact, and the stenographer's notes are here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have to find the facts.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The Chair has control of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has also to investigate other questions in reference to it.

Mr. COX, of New York. Allow me, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BROWNE. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the call for the regular order of business. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COX, of New York. If the gentleman makes the point of order I will not rise at all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will not press it as I find I have no chance to make any remarks.

Mr. BROWNE. I ask the House shall now go to the regular order of business. We have had our usual matinee, and as the curtain has been rung down let us go to business. [Laughter.]

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move that the Senate amendments to the pension appropriation bill be taken from the Speaker's table, numbered, and ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I am directed by the Committee on the Territories to move the suspension of the rules and the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill of the House (H. R. No. 4456) to enable the people of the Territory of Dakota to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of the State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and make said bill a special order for Wednesday, December 13, 1882, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, not to interfere with general appropriation bills.

Mr. CONVERSE. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the second will be ordered.

Mr. CONVERSE. I object.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, and Mr. CONVERSE.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 65.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There is a mistake made by the Clerk. The count as I have it is—ayes 90, noes 65.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman probably fell into some error, but it is immaterial, as there is considerably more than a quorum.

The question recurs on the motion to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 102, nays 76, not voting 112; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives to the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year 1883, and for other purposes, and agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Senate had appointed Messrs. ALLISON, DAWES, and DAVIS of West Virginia as the managers of said conference on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 1819) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Elizabeth E. Custer.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendments bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 369) granting a pension to Jacob R. McFarren.
A bill (H. R. No. 1098) granting a pension to Martha Westervelt;
A bill (H. R. No. 1102) granting a pension to Elizabeth T. Dubois;
A bill (H. R. No. 1422) granting a pension to Mary Wade;
A bill (H. R. No. 2127) granting a pension to James F. Rose;
A bill (H. R. No. 2481) for the relief of Dicey Bobbitt;
A bill (H. R. No. 3316) granting a pension to David Darling;
A bill (H. R. No. 4719) granting a pension to Betty Taylor Dandridge;
A bill (H. R. No. 5239) granting a pension to Mrs. Speedie B. Eggleston; and
A bill (H. R. No. 6008) to restore the name of Eliza M. Bass to the pension-roll.

Also that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 864) granting a pension to Amanda J. McFadden;
A bill (H. R. No. 1873) for the relief of Patrick Sullivan; and
A bill (H. R. No. 3599) granting a pension to David T. Stephenson.

The message further announces that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 70) granting a pension to Sarah Hayne;
A bill (S. No. 703) granting a pension to Sarah Shea;
A bill (S. No. 1170) granting a pension to Jane S. Taplin;
A bill (S. No. 1577) for the relief of Hardy H. Helper;
A bill (S. No. 1925) granting a pension to Ann Elizabeth Rodgers; and
A bill (S. No. 2110) for the erection of a public building at Haverhill, Massachusetts.

JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES OVER SHIP-CANALS, ETC.

Mr. LORD. I move, under instructions from the Committee on Railways and Canals, to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5545) declaring and defining the jurisdiction of the United States over certain ship-canals and other navigable waters, and for the regulation and uses of certain public works, and for their care and preservation, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to assume full control over the Saint Mary's Falls Canal, Lake Superior; the harbor of refuge at Sand Beach, Lake Huron; the Saint Clair Flats Canal, on the river Saint Clair; the Des Moines Canal, on the Mississippi River; the Louisville and Portland Canal, at the Falls of the Ohio; the canal around the Mussel Shoals, in Alabama; the canal around the Cascades of the Columbia River, in Oregon; the jetties and other works of improvement at the South Pass of the Mississippi River, including the entire extent of the channel of the pass; and all other ship-canals, locks, dams, and harbors of refuge that are now or may hereafter be built, operated, and kept in repair by the United States for the improvement of navigation, so far as necessary to control the passage through and regulate the use of those works.

SEC. 2. That it shall not be lawful for any person or persons to take possession of, or make use of for any exclusive purpose, build upon, alter, deface, injure, obstruct, or in any other manner willfully or negligently impair the usefulness of any sea-wall, bulk-head, jetty, wharf, pier, or other work built by the United States for the preservation and improvement of any of its navigable waters, or boundary-marks, tide-gauges, surveying-stations, buoys, or other established marks, nor remove for ballast or other purposes any stone or other material composing such works.

SEC. 3. That it shall not be lawful to cast, or procure to be cast, thrown, emptied, or unladen, either from or out of any ship, vessel, or other craft, or from the shore, pier, wharf, or mills of any kind, any ballast, stone, slate, gravel, earth, ashes, rubbish, wreck, filth, slabs, edgings, sawdust, or mill waste of any kind, into any port, road, roadstead, harbor, haven, navigable river, or other waters of the United States for the improvement of which Congress has made or may hereafter make appropriations, nor deposit, or cause to be deposited or placed, any ballast, stone, slate, gravel, earth, ashes, rubbish, wreck, filth, slabs, edgings, sawdust, or other mill waste in any place on shore where the same shall be liable to be washed into any navagable waters for the improvement of which the United States has made appropriations, either by ordinary high tides or by storms or floods, or otherwise: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall extend to the casting out, unlading, or throwing out of any ship, vessel, or other craft, any stones, rocks, lime, bricks, or other material used, or to be used, in or toward the building or repairing of any quay, pier, wharf, bridge, weir, or other work lawfully erected, or to be erected, on the banks or sides of any port, harbor, or channel, or within any navigable waters where such works are in progress, or depositing of any material excavated for the improvement of navigable waters into such places and in such manner as may be deemed by the United States officer supervising said work most judicious and for the best interest of such improvements.

SEC. 4. That every person, persons, or corporation offending against the second and third sections of this act shall, for each and every offense, forfeit and pay a penalty of $250, (one-half, on conviction of the offender, to be paid to the informer,) besides such further sum as may be found, in any action for the recovery of the penalty or penalties incurred under this act, to be the expense of making good the damage incurred or of removing to a proper place the things deposited in violation of this act; such penalties to be recoverable by and in the name of the United States, with costs, in any circuit or district court of the United States, at the suit of any district attorney, in any district where or near where the offense shall have been committed or where the offender shall be.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War shall establish such regulations as he shall deem needful to regulate the movement of vessels through and in the various waters enumerated in section one of this act so as to avoid damage to each other or injury to the public improvements at those places; and he shall cause such regulations to be promulgated by public notice given in such newspapers as he may deem suitable to give them the greatest publicity; and such regulations may, in like manner, be changed from time to time; and any person willfully or negligently interfering with, or obstructing, or attempting to obstruct the free use of such improvements, in violation of the regulations aforesaid in this section, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $500, or imprisonment for not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court. And any person who shall willfully or negligently strand or sink any vessel, boat, or craft in any of the waters and within the works aforesaid, or in the channels or approaches thereto, or shall obstruct the superintendent or his authorized agent in enforcing the regulations of the Secretary of War in any of the said works or improvements, shall be liable to like penalties.

SEC. 6. That it shall be the duty of the officers and agents having the supervision on the part of the United States of the works completed or in progress for the preservation and improvement of said navigable waters, and, in their absence, the United States collector of customs and other revenue officers, to enforce the provisions of this law by giving information to the district attorney of the United States nearest to the place where any violation of any provision of this act shall have been committed, and the said prosecuting officer shall immediately proceed against the offender or offenders under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 7. That whenever the Secretary of War is reliably informed, or has reason to believe, that in any port or harbor, navigable river, or the approaches to any ship-canal of the United States navigation is impeded, or shoals, bars, or other impediments to navigation have been created by reason of the improper extension of wharves, piers, or other structures into harbors or rivers, under the authority of local laws or by individuals without such authority, or that the future usefulness of such harbors or rivers or approaches to ship-canals is imperiled by such structures to the injury of commerce, he shall cause to be made by the Corps of Engineers of the Army full and complete survey and examination of such harbor or river or entrance to ship-canal, and plans and descriptions thereof showing the depth of water in the same, and the location, size, and description of all piers, wharves, and other structures, and obstructions therein, and the extent to which the same encroach upon the channels and water-ways used for navigation, and further to lay down and mark on such plans and descriptions lines which should limit the boundaries within which any wharf, pier, or other obstruction shall thereafter be erected, constructed, placed, or projected in any harbor, or navigable stream, or entrance to ship-canal; and such plans or descriptions shall be on a scale and of a kind to be fixed by the Secretary of War, so that they may be easily understood and examined by all parties interested; and the Secretary of War shall be, and is hereby authorized, upon the application of any State, or the principal authority of any city, town, or county, to which the harbor or navigable waters of any such plan and description pertains, to have the same lithographed, or otherwise copied, at the expense of said State or municipal authority, and to supply such number of copies thereof as they may require.

SEC. 8. That if it shall be found by the officers making such surveys, examinations, plans, and descriptions that there are any existing wharves, piers, or other obstructions in any harbor or navigable waters surveyed, examined, planned, and described by them which are injurious to and impede the navigation thereof by being situated beyond the lines established by them, they shall so report to the Secretary of War, to the end that proper steps may be taken by Congress for the removal of the same by compensation to the owners thereof, if the same have been erected by State or municipal authority, or if not erected by such authority, then to take order for the removal thereof as nuisances by proper legal proceedings.

SEC. 9. That it shall further be the duty of the Secretary of War, when he is reliably informed that in any port, harbor, navigable river, or entrance to any ship-canal of the United States navigation is about to be impeded by the improper extension of wharves, piers, or other structures, to give notice to the party or parties about to make such wharves, piers, or other structures that he will order an immediate survey of such place or places; and when notice thereof shall have been given it shall not be lawful for such party or parties to proceed in the erection of such wharves, piers, or other structures until the Secretary of War shall have rendered his decision thereon, which shall be subject to an appeal to the Federal courts.

SEC. 10. That no bridge shall be built across any navigable river or ship-canal until a plan in duplicate showing the location and situation thereof shall have been presented to the Secretary of War and approved by him; and his approval, if given, shall be certified on one of said plans, and the duplicate thereof shall be retained and preserved in the War Department: Provided, That this act shall not be construed so as to give authority to erect such bridge without an act of Congress.

SEC. 11. That such sums of money as may be necessary to execute the provisions of this act are hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be paid out on the requisition of the Secretary of War.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for a second upon that motion.

A second was ordered.

Mr. LORD. If in order, I would like to have the report of the committee read in this case.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done in the gentleman's own time.

Mr. LORD. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has fifteen minutes.

Mr. LORD. It may be read, then, in my time; and there is also connected with it, which I desire to have read, a letter from the present Secretary of War upon the subject.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Railways and Canals, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4319) declaring and defining the jurisdiction of the United States over certain ship-canals and other navigable waters, and for the regulation and use of certain public works, and for their care and preservation, have considered the same, and respectfully report:

It has been the custom of the country during most of the period of its history to place all works of improvement in the navigable waters of the United States under the supervision of the Secretary of War while the said improvements were in course of construction, and they have usually remained under his direction afterward so far as needing governmental supervision.

There is no constitutional provision giving to the Secretary of War supervision over any of the navigable waters of the United States, nor any statutory provisions except as to each particular work, as the case has arisen, and then limited mainly to such authority as gave the Secretary custody and control for the purpose of making such works available for their several purposes and the subsequent keeping of them in repair.

It has been the custom of the War Department to publish notice of such regulations as were deemed necessary at the several ship-canals and other works of improvement in charge of the Department, but if resisted they lack the force of law which it is the design of this bill to supply.

There have been instances of temporary occupation of piers as landing-places for cargoes which, by their weight, might injure the works; but in most cases the practice was discontinued upon notification.

There are instances of injury to piers from collision of vessels, from carelessness as well as from unavoidable causes.

There are also instances of willful injury arising from the pulling up of the deck-planks of wooden piers for the purpose of tying vessels.

There are instances of serious injury to navigable waters by the discharge of saw-mill waste into streams; also from booms for logs being placed in such a way as to seriously, and sometimes totally, impede navigation; and also instances of removal of stone from wing-dams, and of breaking openings through them for the passage of small boats or running of logs, thus rendering the dams incapable of effecting the object for which they were built.

There are instances of injury to water-gauges permanently established for the record of fluctuations of water surface.

In fair-ways of harbors, channels are injured from deposits of ballast, steamboat ashes, oysters, and rubbish from passing vessels.

In some instances the local authorities have exercised a control over the public works in their vicinity, and in most cases the trespass or injury has been corrected upon notification.

So long as works are in progress and in charge of an officer or agent these evils are rare, but as they pass out of his hands they are at the mercy of evil-disposed persons.

It is the design of this bill to cover all cases of trespass on United States grounds and structures; to cover all cases of negligent as well as willful injury; to cover not only river, harbor, and navigation works, but also all structures or marks established by the United States, so as to include all boundary-marks, tide-gauges, stations, buoys, &c.

The special act of Congress (18 Stat. L., part 3, p. 30) for the protection of the work in progress for the improvement of the navigation of the mouths of the Mississippi by dredging has proved defective, inasmuch as it requires proof of malice or intention, instead of simple proof of fact of injury or impediment to navigation.

In the case of the Louisville and Portland Canal, and at the harbor of refuge at Sand Beach, Lake Huron, experience has shown the necessity of some enactment to regulate the movement of vessels therein, to avoid danger to vessels and injury to the works.

The Sault Ste Marie Ship-canal has just passed from under the authority of the State of Michigan, and that of the United States, except by presumption of law, has not yet attached. At that place proper police regulations resting on authority are indispensable.

Your committee have sought information from the Secretary of War and from the Chief of Engineers of the War Department, and from these and such other sources of knowledge as were available they are convinced of the urgent need of such legislation as the bill under consideration proposes, and report it back by substitute and recommend its passage.

The committee annex and make a part of their report a letter from the Secretary of War, dated the 14th instant.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, March 14, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, in response to your request, and for the information of the Committee on Railways and Canals, a report of the Chief of Engineers upon bill H. R. No. 4319, declaring and defining the jurisdiction of the United States over certain ship-canals and other navigable waters, and for the regulation and uses of certain public works, and for their care and preservation, and to invite your attention to the amendments suggested by the Chief of Engineers, the propriety of which is concurred in by me.

The necessity for such a law, particularly in respect to those works which are operated by the United States, has been represented to Congress in former reports of the Chief of Engineers, and I earnestly recommend the passage of the bill as modified by him.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

Hon. H. W. LORD, House of Representatives.

Mr. LORD. I do not care to take the time of the House in presenting anything in addition to what has been read from the report of the committee except simply to say this is a bill of very great consequence, its object being to supply the Secretary of War with authority he has never had for the regulation of the various ship-canals and water-ways of the country on which the Government has expended money for the improvement thereof.

The Secretary of War puts up series of notices and regulations in all such places, and they have a kind of deterring effect on mariners and others who would encroach and trespass upon those works. But he assures me he has no authority whatever, and no predecessor of his has had any authority to enforce the rules which they have published and endeavored to make binding on these various water-ways.

I have in my hand a letter which has come to me this morning, a letter from an extensive commercial establishment of Michigan and Ohio, in which they say in some of the harbors of Northern Michigan where money has been expended for improvement they are entirely unable to use the motive power of their own steamboats on account of the floating logs and other obstructions, and that they are compelled to employ tug-boats to tow their vessels through these harbors; and when they have appealed to the engineer representing the United States in that district, he has informed them that unless some such bill as this now pending be passed there is no authority whatever by which those water-ways can be cleared for those steamboats so that they can be propelled by their own motive power. But

I do not desire to discuss the bill, because it has been well discussed on its merits in the report.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question. Is this bill in accordance with the views of the Secretary of War and substantially the same as he approves at the close of his letter?

Mr. LORD. It is the very same bill, with every provision in it that the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers have suggested. I have been through it very carefully with both those officers, paragraph by paragraph, and the bill meets their entire approbation. Both the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers desire that this bill shall pass.

I yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. KENNA.]

Mr. KENNA. It had not been my purpose to say anything on this bill. I will remark, however, that the object of the committee in preparing and reporting it was to report a general bill to prevent obstruction to navigable waters of the United States. The committee was unanimous, I believe, in the opinion that the bill as drawn accomplishes that purpose. It was not intended that it should in any way interfere with the rights of any person, except to the extent to which it became necessary to accomplish the main object of the bill.

The bill as originally drawn gave to the Secretary of War absolute and final control over the question as to what did or what did not constitute an obstruction. Some of the committee thought that was going rather too far, and an amendment being offered the committee adopted it, to provide that an appeal should lie from his decision to the decision of the Federal courts. As that clause is embraced in the bill, it seems to me in every way well calculated to accomplish the object intended.

Section 9 winds up with the provision referring to the decision of the Secretary of War, and says it shall be subject to an appeal to the Federal court. I am not sure that the court would understand exactly how to deal with a provision of that sort; and I want to suggest to my friend from Michigan that with the consent of the other members of the committee and of the House he should accept of a modification of that clause. I have made a draft which I think will meet the difficulty; but if not satisfactory some other may be suggested in lieu of it:

Subject, however, to revision by the Federal courts upon petition for permit to erect such structure, and notice thereof of at least thirty days to the United States district attorney.

I add, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE,] "district courts." I think there will be no objection, Mr. Speaker, to that change of the phraseology, if it be acceptable to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. LORD,] for it does precisely what the committee intends to do by the language of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. I observe that the last section makes an appropriation of money. What is the probable cost of paying the tolls on these canals?

Mr. KENNA. There is no paying of tolls on canals.

Mr. RANDALL. Is it not provided that the Secretary of War may take possession of the canals?

Mr. KENNA. The possession referred to in the bill is a jurisdiction simply with reference to controlling the manner in which they shall be conducted and the uses of them.

Mr. RANDALL. Not interfering with them in other respects?

Mr. KENNA. No, sir; I cannot state the probable cost except in this way. The appropriation contained in the last clause is intended to be of such amount as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of War to direct an inquiry where an inquiry shall become necessary to ascertain whether what may be complained of amounts to an obstruction. It is necessary for him to have some amount at his disposal to allow of such investigation.

Mr. RANDALL. But the work would extend to a removal of the obstruction as well as to the inquiry as to the matter, would it not?

Mr. KENNA. It may go to that extent.

Mr. LORD. This bill is not expected to furnish the Secretary of War with money for the removal of obstructions.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the language would warrant that construction. If the gentleman would make it plainer, and confine the expenditure of the money to an inquiry as to whether there was an obstruction or not, and then require them to come to Congress, if there be an obstruction, to obtain the money to remove it, it would be better.

Mr. LORD. The object is simply to place at the disposal of the Secretary of War such small appropriation as would be necessary, for instance, if an engineer was sent to examine as to the construction of a pier or the situation of a mill or a wharf.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to a provision making an appropriation of money to cover the expenses of an inquiry. But to give full authority to the Secretary of War to involve the Government in the expense of removing whatever may be determined by the engineers to be an obstruction is, I think, going too far.

Mr. LORD. I think the committee would be entirely willing to accept any such amendment as the gentleman would suggest. It is simply intended to place in the hands of the Secretary of War a sufficient appropriation to cover the expenses of the inquiry.

Mr. HUBBELL. The gentleman cannot well do that, for that would be giving away the whole bill.

Mr. LORD. Oh, no!

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, it does. Vessels by throwing out ballast, or throwing overboard part of their cargoes, might cause obstructions to navigation, and you cannot wait until you come to Congress for an appropriation to remove them. You must have money sufficient to remove all such temporary obstructions.

Mr. RANDALL. I am inclined to think that it is rather a loose bill, and one that should be discussed at some length and not passed in this way.

Mr. KENNA. If the gentleman apprehends that in the final section of the bill too much money will be appropriated, a limit might be suggested which I think would be acceptable to the friends of the bill. There is no purpose whatever on the part of the committee to appropriate any large sum of money.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, say $5,000.

Mr. KENNA. I am willing, if that is acceptable to the other members of the committee.

Mr. LORD. Five thousand dollars annually.

Mr. CARLISLE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. KENNA. Certainly.

Mr. CARLISLE. Is it the purpose of this bill, when some party without authority has obstructed the navigation of a river, to authorize the Secretary of War to use the public money to remove that obstruction improperly placed there by some one?

Mr. KENNA. The purpose of the bill was to authorize the Secretary of War to remove such obstructions.

Mr. CARLISLE. The party putting them there should be required to remove them.

Mr. KENNA. Suppose that he does not; suppose he is not able to do so.

Mr. CARLISLE. Suppose that a bridge has been so constructed in violation of the authority conferred upon the company by Congress as to impede the navigation of a river; ought the Government of the United States to pay for removing that obstruction?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. There is no authority in this bill, as I understand it, for the Secretary of War to remove such obstructions. He is simply authorized to make an examination and report to Congress.

Mr. KENNA. There is no danger of that sort, because there are no bridges constructed over navigable waters of the United States except by consent of Congress; and hence they do not come within the provisions of this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I think if the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] will examine sections 7 and 8 of this bill he will find that it does not give any such authority. I have examined the bill very closely, and I do not think any such authority is given to the Secretary of War.

Mr. DAWES. I want to call attention to section 3 of this bill, which provides that it shall not be lawful to cast slabs, edgings, sawdust, or mill waste of any kind into any navigable river or other waters of the United States for the improvement of which Congress has made or may hereafter make appropriations; or to deposit any mill waste or sawdust or ashes on the shore where the same may be liable to be washed into any such navigable waters.

Now, along the Ohio River there are saw-mills which are doing this all the time, as a matter of course. It does not impede navigation at all; there is no danger that there will result from it any damage to navigation. But under this bill any such act is made unlawful. And every person, persons, or corporation offending against the second and third sections shall for each and every offense forfeit and pay a penalty of $250, one-half, on conviction of the offender, to go to the informer. Now the point I wish to raise is whether this does not endanger an inquisition upon the saw-mill men along the Ohio River and along the Kanawha River, represented by the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. KENNA.] I would inquire whether this provision in relation to ashes or mill-waste of any kind does not endanger the rolling-mill men who are doing the same thing? It does not obstruct navigation; it does not injure the channel of the river; but under this act it is made an offense liable to a penalty of $250, of which the informer is to get one-half.

Mr. KENNA. I do not take any stock in that clause of the bill which gives one-half of the penalty to the informer. I have never been in favor of any such provision of law. My observation and experience have taught me that such provisions usually operate to obstruct the enforcement of the law. But that would not affect the mill men of which my friend speaks, unless these cinders, &c., amount to an obstruction of the navigation, and if so it ought to affect them.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It is not so restricted in the bill.

Mr. BAYNE. The whole purpose of the bill is to provide that such things shall not impede or interfere with the navigation of any of these navigable streams.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIS.]

Mr. WILLIS. I am in full accord with the object of the committee as presented in this bill. I have myself, at the suggestion of a number of river men, introduced a bill similar to this in some of its provisions. But I do not think that a bill so important as this, and which is unquestionably, as shown by the debate on this floor, susceptible of different interpretations even by lawyers, should be passed in this hurried way. It is too grave and important a matter to come up in a short debate of twenty or thirty minutes.

I find that by the first section of the bill various canals are placed in the charge of the Government, a provision which, of course, implies and carries with it an appropriation to operate them. Whether all these canals are now under the charge of the Government I doubt if a single gentleman on this floor can now tell. I know that three of them are; I believe that three or four are not. That is one question suggested by the first section of the bill.

I find also that the Secretary of War is authorized to make regulations, which may be right or wrong, and no appeal is allowed to be taken from them. I think that section 5 ought to be carefully guarded.

In the concluding portion of the bill, as I find by this hurried review, appropriations which may amount to millions of dollars are made to carry out the provisions of the bill. No one with this bill before him and observing the duties imposed upon the Secretary of War under it can say that the appropriations authorized by the last section may not extend to hundreds or thousands and peradventure to millions of dollars.

Mr. DUNN. I wish to ask the gentleman whether this bill authorizes the Secretary of War to remove railroad bridges across navigable rivers which are not now complained of by steamboat men but which were built without authority of Congress?

Mr. WILLIS. I find in section 10 a reference to bridges; but my examination of the bill has of course been very hurried; and whether it goes to the extent indicated by the gentleman's inquiry I am not prepared to say.

Mr. LORD. The bill has nothing to do with bridges except where they impede navigation.

Mr. WILLIS. In the few moments remaining to me I will say that with the objects of the bill I most cordially sympathize. I recognize the necessity of regulations that shall control the navigation of our maritime highways. I recognize the necessity of some well-guarded legislation which will keep unobstructed the channels of our great rivers. But I do insist that this is a question which ought to come up deliberately and be discussed carefully before we put a measure of this sort upon the statute-book.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now yield for a few minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MCMILLIN.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I have given some attention to the bill now under consideration, and am compelled to state, in candor, I do not believe that there could be devised in the same number of lines any more efficient means of encouraging the institution of lawsuits which would be harassing in their nature. I say this with all deference to the committee reporting the measure, for I have no idea that such was their intention. Sir, let us scrutinize the provisions of this extraordinary bill. Section 3 provides as follows:

SEC. 3. That it shall not be lawful to cast, or procure to be cast, thrown, emptied, or unladen, either from or out of any ship, vessel, or other craft, or from the shore, pier, wharf, or mills of any kind, any ballast, stone, slate, gravel, earth, ashes, rubbish, wreck, filth, slabs, edgings, sawdust, or mill waste of any kind, into any port, road, roadstead, harbor, haven, navigable river, or other waters of the United States for the improvement of which Congress has made or may hereafter make appropriations, nor deposit, or cause to be deposited or placed, any ballast, stone, slate, gravel, earth, ashes, rubbish, wreck, filth, slabs, edgings, sawdust, or other mill waste in any place on shore where the same shall be liable to be washed into any navigable waters for the improvement of which the United States has made appropriations, either by ordinary high tides or by storms or floods, or otherwise.

It will be seen from this that it is made unlawful to "cast slabs, edgings, sawdust or mill waste of any kind into a navigable river or other waters of the United States for the improvement of which Congress has made or may hereafter make appropriations." Is this Congress ready to enact such a law? Are members going to place every mill-owner they represent in a condition to be indicted for dropping their sawdust and slabs in the river? I answer, no! We will never do it till we are ready to prove recreant to our trusts.

Mr. Speaker, I now call attention to the heavy penalty to be inflicted for a violation of this bloody statute. Section 4 is in this language:

SEC. 4. That every person, persons, or corporation offending against the second and third sections of this act shall, for each and every offense, forfeit and pay a penalty of $250, (one-half, on conviction of the offender, to be paid to the informer,) besides such further sum as may be found, in any action for the recovery of the penalty or penalties incurred under this act, to be the expense of making good the damage incurred or of removing to a proper place the things deposited in violation of this act; such penalties to be recoverable by and in the name of the United States, with costs, in any circuit or district court of the United States, at the suit of any district attorney, in any district where or near where the offense shall have been committed or where the offender shall be.

Sir, I have the honor to represent constituents living on three navigable rivers—the Cumberland, Caney Fork, and Obeds Rivers—embracing about three hundred miles of navigable water-course upon the banks of which, from one end to the other, are saw-mills. They are at Rome, Carthage, Celina, and other points. And where are these prosecutions to be? Not before the magistrates of the county; not in the State courts, but in that too often engine of oppression, the Federal court. And how? At the instance of any man who may be greedy enough to desire to obtain the penalty, half of which goes to the informer. It requires neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet to see that under this inducement of half the penalty, which is fixed at $250, parties would unhesitatingly go to a court where they will not be liable for costs, where they will have an attorney to prosecute their suit without expense to themselves; where they will have all to gain and nothing to lose. I predict that if this bill becomes a law there will be hundreds, and I would not exaggerate it if I should say thousands, of lawsuits commenced in the Federal courts all through the country under the third and fourth sections of this bill.

Let us not bind our people down with new criminal laws and deliver them over to the Federal court to be prosecuted and persecuted away from home, in strange courts, as long as cupidity may tempt the avaricious, or malice urge the vindictive to prosecute. We have seen too much of Federal court oppressions already. We have already heard complaints against its usurpations which were but too well founded. Let the representatives of the American people remember that these are the courts of which Mr. Jefferson said:

The great object of my fear is the Federal judiciary. That body, like gravity, ever acting, with noiseless foot and unalarming advance, gaining ground step by step, and holding what it gains, is ingulfing insidiously the special governments into the jaws of that which feeds them. * * * Yet be not weary of well-doing. Let the eye of vigilance never be closed.

Let us heed his admonitions to-day and put the stamp of our disapproval on this bill.

Furthermore, I wish to call attention to the fact that it is made penal not only to throw sawdust, slabs, edgings, &c., into the water-course itself, but to throw them anywhere under such circumstances that they may by the floods be drifted into navigable waters. It is a well-known fact that all the interior part of our country is drained by navigable rivers; and you can hardly conceive of a place where a saw-mill could be established where this refuse matter might not at flood-tide be washed into a navigable river.

Sir, a scrutiny of section 6 reveals to us the fact that not only the temptation of one-half the penalty is held out to drum up volunteer prosecutors of mill men, but the United States collector of customs and "other revenue officers" are forced to spy out violations of this law. It is in this language:

SEC. 6. That it shall be the duty of the officers and agents having the supervision on the part of the United States of the works completed or in progress for the preservation and improvement of said navigable waters, and in their absence the United States collector of customs and other revenue officers, to enforce the provisions of this law by giving information to the district attorney of the United States nearest to the place where any violation of any provision of this act shall have been committed, and the said prosecuting officer shall immediately proceed against the offender or offenders under the provisions of this act.

Sir, not only are these anomalous provisions found in the bill under consideration but the doors of the Treasury are thrown open, and without stint or limit those who are enforcing the law are let in. Section 11 makes the appropriation in the following language:

That such sums of money as may be necessary to execute the provisions of this act are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be paid out on the requisition of the Secretary of War.

What sane, patriotic legislator would, after his attention is called to the fact, give such an unbridled rein to officers. Any amount could be taken, from one dollar to one hundred million.

Now, from my experience and observation for years of the operations of some of the finest saw-mills in the country, I know that they are no impediment to navigation whatever. At the capital of my State and all the way up the Cumberland River you encounter fine mills which have been running for years, and still there has been no complaint; no trouble has ever arisen, and none will. Our people have been carried to the Federal courts on other questions, and they are jealous of the unnecessary yielding of criminal jurisdiction to those courts. In their behalf I protest against it. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield for two minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. DUNN.]

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I asked a question a few moments ago in reference to the provisions of this bill, because I am not informed as to the powers intended to be conferred by it. It so happens that all the railroad bridges in my State have, with one single exception, been built without any enabling act by Congress. The navigation of the rivers has not been obstructed thereby; and the steamboat men have made no complaint. But I presume that upon inspection the War Department would find that those bridges did not come up to the requirements of this bill, and they might be declared obstructions to navigation.

Railroad business might be seriously obstructed. They might pile up costs merely for the purpose of making fees for some informers or district attorney, or to enable one road to inflict an injury on another, or the enemies of a road inflict an injury on it. I should regret to see this bill pass before it can be understood. I have had no opportunity to thoroughly examine it and do not know exactly its full scope. I judge from the character of the arguments made here that everything which has not been heretofore authorized by Congress and does not happen to come up to the requirements of the War Department might be assailed under the operations of this act and great injury inflicted where there is no real complaint now and no harm done. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his bill and give members time to consider it.

Mr. KENNA. I wish to add to what the gentleman has said another suggestion——

Mr. LORD. I feel convinced from the tone of the House in regard to this matter, it is impossible such an extensive proposition can pass under a suspension of the rules and upon so short consideration, and therefore, with permission of the House, I will withdraw it for the present with a hope of getting it before the House with fuller information and more time for its consideration.

Mr. WILLIS. Let the gentleman change his motion and fix a day in December next for its consideration.

Mr. COX, of New York. Oh, no; the bill ought to be killed.

Mr. LORD. I withdraw the bill.

TESTING MATERIALS OF BRIDGES, BUILDINGS, ETC.

The SPEAKER. The next committee under the call is the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I have been directed by the Committee on Manufactures to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. No. 4726) authorizing the President to appoint a commission of experts, skilled in the investigation, production, and use of metallic substances and other structural materials, to execute tests and experiments on iron, steel, and other materials used in the construction of bridges, buildings, and mechanical structures, and deduct useful rules therefrom.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a commission of seven members, selected from among men skilled in the investigation, production, and use of metallic substances and other structural materials, to hold their appointment during the pleasure of the President of the United States, which commission shall plan and superintend the execution of such tests and investigations of materials used extensively in the construction of buildings, bridges, ships, and other structures, and machinery, as it shall think most important to be made, and from time to time publish results of the tests and investigations, and also such scientific principles and such practical rules deduced therefrom as it shall consider most useful. The said commission shall organize itself, and adopt such rules and make such assignment of duties among its members as it shall deem most promotive of the object of its appointment. Vacancies occurring from time to time in said commission shall be filled by the President of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the said commission shall report its work, with its results and the deductions made therefrom, annually, to the Secretary of the Interior; and its accounts shall be settled in the Interior Department, through such channels as the Secretary shall direct.

SEC. 3. That the members of said commission shall be entitled to mileage and other necessary expenses incurred in the prosecution of their duties, but no salaries as members of the commission.

SEC. 4. That the said commission is hereby authorized to appoint a principal expert, who shall personally conduct the examinations and tests which the commission shall direct, with such assistants and laborers as may be necessary, and also to purchase such material for test and investigation as may from time to time be required.

SEC. 5. That manufacturers of iron, steel, and other structural material who may request tests of their productions shall file with the commission a full and detailed statement of the mode and process of manufacture of said production, also giving the name and character of each of the original ingredients and the proportion which the component parts entering into such production bear to each other.

SEC. 6. That this act shall take effect immediately.

Mr. BROWNE. I demand a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. COX, of New York. This bill ought not to pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. I also demand a second.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the second will be considered as ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; let us have a vote.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. CAMPBELL and Mr. BROWNE.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 45.

Mr. COX, of New York. I voted under a mistake, as I am paired with my colleague, Mr. HISCOCK.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is to be the judge of that. The second is ordered.

Mr. BROWNE. Do I understand that less than a quorum is enough to order a second?

The SPEAKER. The point that no quorum voted has not been made. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMPBELL.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask for the reading of the report accompanying the bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the bill, as it cannot pass.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER. It will be read in the gentleman's time.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Manufactures, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4726) authorizing the President to appoint a commission of experts skilled in the investigation, production, and use of metallic substances and other structural materials, &c., submit the following report:

The object of this bill is the creation of a commission of experts to ascertain and make public the strength and other properties of materials used in structures upon a scale beyond that which can be carried out by private means, information rendered necessary by the requirements of the present and increasing developments of the future.

The work to be done is of the greatest importance. Its object is to secure information which will result in more economical construction, in increased safety for life, and in the more assured protection of much valuable governmental and private property now dangerously liable to accident and destruction.

In proportioning the parts of structures to resist the strains to which they may be exposed, constructors have heretofore necessarily been guided to a great extent by rules deduced from European experiments, comparatively few in number, differing in their character, in the methods of manufacture of the materials, and of their use from those of our own country; and in nearly every case made with specimens of small dimensions cut from the piece to be tested. The slight dependence placed on these rules is shown by the practice of our engineers, who have habitually proportioned their works to carry from five to ten times the strain which could come upon them, this large allowance being made to cover the existing uncertainty as to the actual strength of the materials in the forms and dimensions of practice. Recent experiments tend to show that the relative strength of materials in large pieces is less than that of the small specimens heretofore used for tests. This renders it probable that many structures in constant use do not possess the surplus of strength they were supposed to have, and also that many of the accidents involving loss of life and destruction of property are to be attributed to the lack of accurate knowledge of the materials employed.

These and many other considerations prove the necessity of testing materials of the full size of the members to be used in actual structures. Such tests, properly conducted, will enable the constructor to give his works ample and safe dimensions without that excess of weight which is sometimes in itself a source of danger and a limit to the capabilities of construction.

Everything which tends to the greater security of structures, of bridges, roofs, walls, floors, &c., is of direct interest to the general public, and is a fact so plain as to need no discussion.

The proposed commission would promote largely the interests of manufactures by indicating to them the value of different methods of obtaining strength, and, of still greater moment, securing uniformity in their productions.

Its work would affect the interests of the public by the economies it will promote. Bridges, warehouses, and other structures may be built not only of safer proportions but at diminished cost. During the year just passed some 80,000 tons of iron and steel were used in bridges, one-third of this being in forms in which the materials are proportioned solely upon theoretical considerations, not verified by experiments upon the actual scale of practice.

But the largest single user of materials of construction is the General Government. A hundred new public buildings will probably be erected during the present year, in the construction of all of which iron and steel will largely enter. The consumption of these materials in them will probably reach 25,000 or 30,000 tons. A more thorough knowledge of the characteristics of the materials and the methods for securing uniformity of quality might easily effect a saving of 10 per cent. upon this quantity, say $250,000 in the single year.

The science and practice of metallurgy are making great progress. New products are constantly brought forward, some of great value, and it is important to all industrial interests that their merits should be established at the earliest possible moment. There is, indeed, hardly a branch of industry which will not be benefited by a more thorough knowledge of materials, whether it be the armor, the frames, and the plates of our new Navy, the roof of a public building, the floor of an assembly-room, the long-span bridge, or the iron columns of the store-fronts that line our streets.

Among the many reasons why this commission should be appointed and maintained by the General Government are that the expense of making such investigations is too great to be borne by any but the most wealthy manufacturers. If made by such, or by private parties, they would remain unpublished, lest rivals should reap results; the large body of constructors who represent the interests of the general public would be deprived of any benefit from them. On the other hand, tests by manufacturers upon their own productions would never command that confidence which would be indispensable to their effective use.

Constructors, manufacturers, and users of all structural materials are deeply interested in the investigations to be made by a body of men, foremost in their profession, familiar with the processes of manufacture, with chemical analysis, and with the varied uses to which materials are applied, each one skilled in some special department of construction. Such a commission will command alike their confidence and that of the general public.

A testing-machine, said to be the best and most perfect ever built, is now the property of the Government, and is located in the Watertown Arsenal, near Boston. It has a capacity of 800,000 pounds, and is the only one in existence capable of testing and determining results on bars of the size which it is desirable to use in structures of such magnitude that it is important to use steel in them.

Mr. Ashbel Welch, of Lambertville, New Jersey, president of the American Society of Civil Engineers, at a recent meeting of the American Institute of Mining Engineers, said:

"I have been struck by the emphasis with which the confession is made that so little is known of the strength of the larger sized members constantly used in building structures of the magnitude which the present requirements of the country demand. * * * This is no disgrace, for with the means heretofore in use it was impossible to get the information required. A good preliminary step toward the acquisition of knowledge is to feel and frankly confess our ignorance."

Charles MacDonald, civil engineer, president of the Delaware Bridge Company, in discussing the same subject, said:

"It is safe to say that the recent fall of one of the most important bridges in the country would not have occurred if at the time of its construction the engineer could have tested full-sized sections of his material on such a machine as the Government now owns, at Watertown Arsenal.

* * * * * * *

"It would be possible to point out many other directions in which experimental knowledge is sadly needed, but if nothing else were done than to determine practically the laws which govern the strength of compression and tension members of bridges and the flexure of rolled beams, a very great advance would be made in our modes of construction, and a great safety would be assured to the hundreds of thousands of people who are constantly trusting their lives upon such structures."

E. D. Leavitt, jr., M. E., of Cambridgeport, Massachusetts, probably the greatest living authority on this subject, in discussing the question, said:

"Our knowledge regarding the strength and behavior of materials under strain is yet very limited. The best and most experienced constructors admit and lament this. In these days of high speed by railways and steamships, of long-span bridges and deep mines, engineers must know what materials will safely endure. Life depends upon it, and every means available for increasing and disseminating information on such a subject, which is of such vital consequence to all, should be provided.

"I freely acknowledge that I have learned more about structural materials through the tests made at Watertown during the last two years than in twenty-five years' previous experience."

Mr. O. Chanute, civil engineer, said:

"There is great uncertainty as to the actual strength of the bridges which we are daily erecting. Their strength is of course limited by that of the weakest part, but while we endeavor to make every part equally strong, as well as we know how, yet we are almost entirely ignorant as to what is actually the weakest part of a bridge of any magnitude, and of just where it would give way first, if loaded to rupture.

* * * * * * *

"The General Government is the proper party to institute and carry out the needed experiments, not so much because as has been claimed, the materials to be tested are American iron, steel, and other metals, but because there is need of general information, which no single other party is likely to obtain and make public.

The Government has the machine, it has abundant resources, and the manufacturers and engineers of the country, with universal good-will, stand ready to tender their aid and technical knowledge."

Alfred P. Boller, civil engineer, of New York, bridge and elevated-railway constructor, said:

"What so intimately affects the people in every household is worthy of the profoundest sympathy of the legislative powers, and the members of any Congress who grasp this subject as its magnitude and importance demand will live to see not only a great work performed in the interests of science and manufactures but also a web of protection thrown around every hearthstone in the land by removing, to a great extent, the ignorance and empiricism to which too many broken bridges, fallen buildings, and imperfect machines testify."

The committee are also in receipt of numerous communications from civil, mining, and mechanical engineers, and others, from various sections of the country, expressing views similar to those quoted, and urging early and favorable action upon this question.

Your committee, appreciating the magnitude and importance attached to this measure, report back the bill with an amendment, and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I interrupt the reading of the report and ask it be printed in the RECORD. I yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT.]

Mr. BAYNE. I hope we will have order, as this is an important matter and should receive the closest attention.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Speaker, if the report accompanying the bill in this case had been read, I think it would be necessary to say but very little in support of the propriety of this pending measure. It is known to most gentlemen here that a testing machine has been constructed and now belongs to the United States Government. This machine is at the United States arsenal in Watertown, Massachusetts. It is, perhaps, the most remarkable exhibition of mechanical ingenuity that has been produced in our time; and the inventor, Mr. Emery, has recently received from the machinist's charitable institution of Massachusetts the medal which they confer once in a long period upon the invention which is the most calculated to advance the interests of mankind. In other words, the machine in question has received the highest honor that it is possible to confer in this country at the hands of those who are competent to judge of its merits.

Now, the machine in question is kept in operation for the purpose of making sporadic tests, if I may use the language, of such specimens as may be sent to it by private individuals who desire to get information as to the strength of the materials they propose to use. But what is wanted is a systematic regulation and organization of these tests. The Society of Mechanical Engineers, the Society of Civil Engineers, and the Society of Mining Engineers, the three great practical scientific bodies of this country, have unanimously recommended the appointment or establishment of a commission for the operation of this machine, with a view to get full details or definite and systematic results. It has already achieved very great results, results of enormous value to the country, and there is not a bridge built in the United States nor a structure of any considerable consequence erected in which the tests and the results obtained from the use of this machine are not practically employed.

In the interests of human life—the safety of life—in the great architectural structures and operations of this country, the result of this machine, from the examination of material, has been absolutely essential in order that we may protect the public from unseen danger. More than that, the Government of the United States is itself a very great consumer of iron for structural purposes—the largest on the continent. We are expending millions of dollars annually for public purposes, and are to engage now in the building up of a new Navy. Now, the saving of one-tenth of 1 per cent. in the weight of metal in one of the vast structures of this country would pay all of the expenses of this commission and the continuance of these tests for a generation. Therefore, as a measure of economy this provision ought to be adopted; not only, I say, as a measure of safety in the interest of human life but absolutely a question of practical economy itself.

It is a curious fact, Mr. Speaker, that while in Europe—Great Britain, France, Sweden, Germany, and Austria—experiments of this kind have been made in order to determine the strength of materials used in building; this machine of ours, invented by a man who had never seen one of their machines, has corrected their data and led to large economy, and the eyes of the scientific world are upon the results. I for one trust that the House may rise to the importance of this question and put this thing in a shape in which the great opportunity may be realized, and the vast results which will sum up into millions and hundreds of millions of dollars in the course of a century, results obtained from the operations of this machine, may be accomplished and utilized by the adoption of such a measure as this.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to occupy the time for a minute or two on the opposite side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] is recognized to control the time in opposition.

Mr. BROWNE. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio such time as he may desire.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire only a few minutes. I appreciate, Mr. Speaker, all that has been said by the gentleman from New York upon the subject of these tests of iron and steel; but the most important fact bearing upon this bill he has not mentioned in his remarks, and that is that this machine for which he speaks so eloquently is in use at this time, and has been for the last two years.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I so stated.

Mr. CONVERSE. Why, then, do you want a board or commission to work it?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Because, as I stated, the experiments now being made with it are sporadic and should be systematic.

Mr. CONVERSE. They are not sporadic by any means. We made an appropriation two years ago of ten or twelve thousand dollars for this purpose and have inserted another item for the same purpose in a recent appropriation bill; and the men who are working the machine and making experiments are the most skillful in the United States. They are detailed from the Engineer Corps of the Army. The Government pays no additional salary to these men. They are all paid from the Army appropriation and are detailed to perform this duty. There is already a report, which has come in within the last few days from this board, and I hold in my hand a pamphlet of five or six or seven hundred pages giving the details of experiments made by this board within the last two years.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Now, will the gentleman from Ohio, who I know does not want to misstate, permit me to say those are the experiments made by the commission which expired, and not by the engineer officers? The gentleman is entirely in error.

Mr. CONVERSE. The gentleman from New York is entirely mistaken. The appropriation was made on my motion two years ago; and that appropriation bill requires the experiments to be made in industrial interests; not for purposes of war but for purposes of industry; and these experiments have been going on under that appropriation.

What the gentleman from New York alludes to is this: there were a few experiments that were not completed by the commission. Those experiments which were begun and not completed by the commission which expired two or three years ago have been carried forward by this board.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The gentleman does not want, I know, to misstate. Will he read this report——

Mr. CONVERSE. What the gentleman is refetring to is the first part of the report.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The gentleman ought to inform himself.

Mr. CONVERSE. And certainly the gentleman from New York ought to inform himself. I say this report was made by the commission which was raised on my motion.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It was a commission raised before the gentleman was in Congress.

Mr. CONVERSE. The gentleman is mistaken; that is all there is about it. The commission expired before I came into this House, three years ago, and on my motion $10,000 were appropriated, and these military officers were required to go forward and make their experiments in iron and steel for domestic use. That board has been at work for two years, and they completed the experiments which were begun, it is true, by the commission, and they have added tests since these experiments which are brought forward in this report. And these men have material for another report as large as this one which I have exhibited. These experiments are being made, and as carefully made as they could be by a commission.

This bill proposes to raise a commission of seven or eight men to rove all over the country at the public expense, employ chemists, &c., and be as expensive as the old commission was. I cannot state now exactly what that old commission did expend, but the law was repealed because it had become so expensive, while the results which had flowed from the expenditure were so few.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. They expended $50,000, and here is one volume of the results.

Mr. CONVERSE. If that is the volume it is the first volume published, two years ago.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. No, sir.

Mr. BROWNE. I cannot yield further to this controversy.

Mr. CONVERSE. I know I am trespassing on the time of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BROWNE.] I will only repeat there is already a board required by law to make these experiments. I repeat it has been in operation for the last two years and these men have been engaged daily and weekly in the business; and there is no necessity of duplicating that board.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Allow me to say there is no board at all. This is being done by Colonel Laidley, who is an Army officer and not an engineer officer.

Mr. CONVERSE. That is what I said. He is detailed by the President for this work.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Colonel Laidley is commandant of the Watertown Arsenal, and in the regular performance of his duties conducts what experiments are conducted; and there is no board.

Mr. BROWNE. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Ten minutes.

Mr. CANDLER. In opposition?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER. I should like to speak in favor of the bill.

The SPEAKER. There are seven minutes remaining for debate in favor of the bill, which are controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMPBELL.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. CANDLER.]

Mr. CANDLER. It seems to me it is a question of scientific engineering and mechanical authority as to the value and real merit of this bill. I am not a member of the committee, but I have been appealed to by some of the ablest and most scientific and public-spirited engineers in this country to advocate this bill as not only in the interest of science but in the interest of the safety of the people and of the industrial development of the country, so far as metals are concerned, in constructing bridges, boilers, warehouses, and ships.

I wish to say I sustain the position taken by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] that this great machine is almost lost to the public. To support the position which I take, and which he has taken, I shall read from a letter from a distinguished engineer in Massachusetts, the engineer who was appointed by the State and successfully completed the Hoosac tunnel, that cost the State of Massachusetts about $17,000,000. I think his opinion, the earnest request which he makes, will have a stronger influence on this House as an authority than anything I can offer. He writes to me:

The bill—

This bill which is before the House—was proposed by the American Society of Civil Engineers, in connection with the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and the American Institute of Mining Engineers, and provides for the appointment of a commission of scientific experts to test metals and materials used in construction.

And when the members of this House realize that to-day ships, bridges, and warehouses are continually constructed of metals, and this engineer states that "the new processes brought into use for making steel and refined iron within twenty-five years render useless all former tests;" when gentlemen realize that, and that every time they and the people who look to them for wise legislation pass over the water or the land in steamships or on a railroad, their safety and their lives depend on a proper construction of the iron vessels and the iron bridges which they are to use, they should feel it is time, when the engineers of this country believe that the past experience under old processes with the new processes is valueless, that the intelligent Congress of the United States should listen to their request, and appoint a commission, which is not a salaried commission, but a commission of experts, under the control of the President of the United States, to pursue systematic and thorough investigation and prove what the metals are worth for construction to-day.

It will be noticed that the bill covers two points; the first is the test of metals, and the second is the use of a machine which the Government owns and which is the best machine in the world. Whatever may have been said here to-day by others as to its use, I say it is at this moment practically idle at the arsenal at Watertown. I read again from the letter of Edward S. Philbrick, one of the distinguished engineers in New England to whom I have referred:

The machine belonging to the Government now at Watertown Arsenal is lying nearly idle, but might be made of great use to the community by a properly organized system of tests. Private parties can use it now, but the information they obtain is only a drop in the bucket and is their own property, not available for public uses. Engineers want to know what the new metals are to be depended on in various shapes and sizes. The information can only be obtained by a well-studied and systematized series of tests on full-sized specimens, by means of which we shall be enabled to use the metals economically, safely, and efficiently. We are now groping in the dark while the best apparatus in the world is lying comparatively idle for want of such organized action. Pray give this bill your favorable attention.

I submit the statement of this engineer against the statement of the gentleman on the other side. You have also in this report of the committee the statement of probably the best expert on metals in the world, so recognized by all, and he asks that this bill may be passed and this commission appointed—E. D. Leavitt, jr., civil engineer, of Cambridgeport, Massachusetts. He says:

Our knowledge regarding the strength and behavior of materials under strain is yet very limited. The best and most experienced constructors admit and lament this. In these days of high speed by railways and steamships, of long-span bridges and deep mines, engineers must know what materials will safely endure. Life depends upon it.

It seems to me that it is but a meager provision to carry out a proper system of tests when you recognize the advance that has been made in the use of metals and the importance of a knowledge of them. We ought not to hesitate to appoint at the call of the most scientific men of this country a commission under the control of the President, which commission asks no salary and only asks that their expenses be paid. It is not an extravagant or unreasonable proposition. Can we justify our action if we do not listen to the appeal that comes to us from them? It is a warning as well as an appeal that demands consideration.

Allow me to say that there are scientific men in this country who, when they advocate this measure, do so with a full consciousness that they have a reputation at stake. There is no humbug and no selfish purpose about it. There are scientific men who seek for knowledge with a patriotic and public-spirited purpose.

I believe that there can be passed no bill of this kind that can be of more service to the people, more important for their safety, or of more advantage to the development of our mining interest, our manufacturing, our building, and our refining processes, than this same bill. It is an advanced step in the right direction.

Let us send out through experiments upon this machine, which is acknowledged to be the best in the world, the information the people want. Let us prove all that we can and hold fast to those things which we find through these scientific tests to be true. I believe it is a first-rate measure, and I hope it will pass.

Mr. BROWNE. There are always distinguished scientists who have a patriotic inclination to scientific research, but who always seem to desire that their patriotism be supported by an appropriation out of the Treasury.

Mr. CANDLER. Not for a salary.

Mr. BROWNE. I shall not say that the Congress of the United States may not appoint a commission of the kind contemplated by this bill. But evidently the gentleman who advocates it so warmly has never read it.

Mr. CANDLER. The gentleman has read it very carefully.

Mr. BROWNE. Then I desire to say that he has read a bill of the most imperfect character. In the first place, it provides for the appointment of a commission for the purpose of making certain tests in metals, with a view to ascertaining their strength, &c. It provides that these scientists shall from time to time make reports.

Mr. CARLISLE. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] that the tests are not to be confined to metals; they can test woods, any structural materials whatever.

Mr. BAYNE. The bill is all the better for that.

Mr. BROWNE. First, they are required to make a report. I ask the gentleman to tell us to whom the report is to be made, how often it is to be made? How is the report to be secured? In what manner is the report to be paid for?

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest that if he will read the second section of the bill he will find that the commission is to report annually to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BROWNE. That had escaped my observation.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who is it now who has not read the bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANDLER. Allow me to suggest that I think the gentleman himself has not read the bill.

Mr. BROWNE. I have read the bill carefully. I will put this question to the gentleman: At what time does the commission begin; how long does it continue, and when will it end?

Mr. CANDLER. It begins whenever any one goes there for tests, or whenever they can make them from time to time.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. And it continues during the pleasure of the President.

Mr. BROWNE. I know the President has power to fill vacancies.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. And that continues the commission.

Mr. BROWNE. The bill continues it without limitation.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. And was meant to do so.

Mr. BROWNE. It is assumed by the gentleman that this is to cost nothing.

Mr. CANDLER. Oh, no.

Mr. BROWNE. There are no salaries to be paid to this commission, but it is provided that they shall be paid their traveling and other necessary expenses; and there is no limitation as to the sum that shall be paid.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The members are not to receive any compensation.

Mr. BROWNE. I know; but they are to receive their necessary expenses; and beyond that they are authorized to employ an expert and laborers and assistants, and the expert and the laborers and the assistants are to be paid. They are authorized to purchase material of every description without limitation as to amount or cost. They are authorized to do all this. They are authorized to make their reports and authorized, in addition, to publish them, at the expense of the Government I suppose, although there is no sum specified in the bill from beginning to end that is to be paid either for expenses or experts or laborers or materials or for the publication of reports.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BROWNE. Certainly.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Could not these men run the country in debt to the extent of millions of dollars under this bill?

Mr. BROWNE. There is no limitation whatever as to the extent of the expenses, except the discretion of the commission itself.

Now, I assume, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding what has been so well said by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CANDLER] that there is nothing in the objects of the bill or the purpose for which this commission is to be created that may not be as well done by private enterprise, if not better. I see no reason for the appointment of a commission the expenses of which are to be borne by the Government. To be sure, there may not be much money involved in this; but the tendency of our legislation is to commit almost every conceivable subject to a committee or a commission and to pay their expenses out of the public Treasury. It is only recently that it has been found necessary for the American Congress to engage in private enterprise at the public expense. I am opposed to a commission of this description. As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] who sits near me remarks, we have a liquor commission, a woman' rights commission, and I believe a tariff commission.

Mr. SPRINGER. You voted for the tariff commission, did you not?

Mr. BROWNE. We have had a silver commission; and I suppose next we shall appoint a commission of lunacy. [Laughter.] How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Two minutes.

Mr. BROWNE. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] who is in favor of this proposition.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I think that the importance of this bill can scarcely be overrated. Private enterprise cannot make these tests.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Private parties have not the machinery.

Mr. BAYNE. No, sir; they have not the machinery. The gentlemen who make this proposition are men of the very highest character—as high as that of any gentleman in the country. The Society of American Engineers, that met here in the city of Washington a short time ago, adopted resolutions unanimously asking Congress to pass a bill like this. These gentlemen are as a rule men without much means. They have ability, science, culture, candor, and every other requisite to make fair, honorable, and just tests. It is for Congress to say whether this talent which has been cultivated in the colleges and schools of the country shall be utilized for great public objects.

If the action of this commission should not be satisfactory, it can be done away with at the will of the President. These are men of such high character that we know they will not abuse the trust confided to them; and when men of the best intellect, of the highest scientific culture come here and make an appeal of this sort, I respectfully submit that Congress ought to respect the appeal where it does not involve the expenditure of a large sum of money, and where it subserves a great public purpose.

Mr. BROWNE. I yield my remaining minute to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CONVERSE.]

Mr. CONVERSE. Mr. Speaker, I desire merely to read the clause of the statute making appropriation for this very purpose last year:

For caring for, preserving, using, and operating the United States testing machines at Watertown Arsenal, $10,000: Provided, That the tests of iron and steel and other material for industrial purposes shall be continued during the next fiscal year, and report thereof shall be made to Congress.

Now, $10,000 is enough to buy all the material that needs to be tested in any one year. Men who are paid officers of the Government, men of skill and integrity, are making these tests with more care than they could be made if you appointed some politicians on this board. It is better to leave the matter just where it is. This course is in the interest of science; it is to the advantage of the iron interests of the country.

Mr. BAYNE. The iron interests do not think so.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Politicians could never get on this board, for there is no salary.

Mr. CONVERSE. They will be very likely to get salaries before they are done.

Mr. BROWNE. They will get whisky and cigars.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be modified by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That no purchases shall be made or liability incurred beyond the amount expressly appropriated for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there unanimous consent that the bill be modified in the manner indicated by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CONVERSE. I object.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. CAMPBELL to suspend the rules and pass the bill, there were—ayes 67, noes 41.

Mr. BAYNE. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BAYNE and Mr. BROWNE were appointed.

Mr. BROWNE. Would it be in order at this time to move that the House adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The House is dividing.

Mr. BROWNE. But there is no quorum.

The SPEAKER. That has not been ascertained in the proper way.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 92, noes 55.

So (two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended, and the bill was not passed.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution (H. R. No. 174) for printing the report of the Life-Saving Service; when the Speaker signed the same.

SALE OF OLD POST-OFFICE SITE IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to move that the rules be suspended and the bill (S. No. 1774) authorizing the sale of the land and premises formerly occupied as a site for a post-office in the city of New York be taken from the Speaker's table and passed with an amendment, to strike out "$500,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$600,000."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to sell at public auction in the city of New York to the highest bidder, after thirty days' notice in four of the principal newspapers published in the city of New York, the land and premises formerly occupied as the site of the post-office in the city of New York, lying upon Nassau street, between Cedar and Liberty streets, and known as the old post-office site; the time and place of said sale in said city to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury at a date not later than ninety days after the passage of this act, and at a price not less than $500,000, with power to reject any and all bids, and to readvertise and offer the said property in like manner as often as may be necessary to secure the value thereof; and if he deems it best for the public interest he may subdivide said land into parcels and sell in such parcels.

Mr. GARRISON. I demand a second of the motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the second will be considered as ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object. Let us have a vote on it.

The Speaker appointed Mr. GARRISON and Mr. BROWNE as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 83, noes 30.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will resume their places.

The House further divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 113, noes 35.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise for the purpose of discussing this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not control the time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. But fifteen minutes are allowed on each side for debate.

Mr. GARRISON. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. For how long?

Mr. GARRISON. Such time as he wants.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I am governed, Mr. Speaker, by one motive only, and that is to secure the proper value for this property belonging to the Government. I desire that it shall bring a fair price and that is all I desire. I wish to put the Government in a position where no combination can force the sale of this property except for its just and proper value. I do not think any honest representative of the people should break down any safeguard and risk in the sale of this property its sacrifice for a much lower price than it ought to bring.

The Government is not so poor that its property must be forced under the hammer at such figure as it will bring. We have the fact staring us in the face in respect to the sale of this property that holding it for four years its price has run up from $150,000 to $500,000. It was then proposed to sell it for $150,000, and holding it for four years the Government has gained $350,000. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is willing now to fix the minimum price at $600,000, or an additional gain of $250,000.

It was said the other day, Mr. Speaker, when the bill was attempted to be taken from the Speaker's table and passed with a minimum of $500,000, that that was all it would bring in the market, and yet the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds now come in with a proposition to increase the price to $600,000.

It was stated on the floor by Representatives of the city of New York that this property is regarded as worth $1,250,000. So far as we have any evidence of its value, it is shown that it is worth a million of dollars. If the opinion of those in New York who are competent judges of New York real estate is to be relied on, this property is worth from $1,000,000 to $1,250,000. I ask, in the name of justice and common sense, why we should fix the minimum at $600,000? All I ask is that the House will fix the minimum at $1,000,000, and I will then withdraw all opposition to the bill.

I have no other feeling in the matter than to get the best price we can. My constituents have an interest in that property as well as the constituents of the gentleman from New York, and I am here to protect their interests as well as the interest of the people at large. Feeling as I do, having the opinion of men capable of judging, men of the highest character and of the best judgment, I do not think we ought to fix the minimum lower than $1,000,000.

Then I insist that that guard should be placed around the sale of the property. But gentlemen say, "Why would you insist upon fixing the minimum value at such a large sum if this is to be sold at public auction?" They say a minimum sum is fixed in the bill and there will be no chance for combinations, but that the property will bring its full value. That is the argument? But what are the circumstances under which they are proposing to make this sale? You require in the first place that it shall be sold for cash. In the second place you put a provision in this bill by which you place in the Secretary of the Treasury discretion to sell it in one lot. Now, Mr. Speaker, let me ask gentlemen here conversant with business affairs in New York how many men there are who would be willing to come in and buy a piece of property of that character, with a minimum fixed at even $600,000, if required to pay cash down for it? There is only one combination that I have any knowledge of in New York, and that is the Chamber of Commerce, who, I understand, have been investigating the subject of purchasing it.

I think it only right and just to the people of this country and to the Government that that property should be sold in such a manner as to bring the very best price of which it is capable, and that it should be sold on time. But suppose you put into this bill a command upon the Secretary of the Treasury requiring him to sell it in lots. If he finds that the aggregate sum derived from the sale of the property by lots will amount to more than if he sells it in bulk then he should be compelled to accept the tenders made to him for certain portions of the property. All I desire to say now, however, in the brief time given to debate is simply this: that if gentlemen will fix the value of this property at a fair price I for one will not oppose the passage of the bill.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I have but a few moments.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I am sure my colleague does not mean to misstate the facts. The bill, of course, authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to sell at a higher price. Of course he is not limited as to the manner of selling; he may exercise his discretion.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I know it leaves it discretionary with him; but I do not wish to leave it discretionary with him. I want to put it in such a position that the Government will derive the greatest value from it; and, further, I am informed that we are now paying $110,000 rent per annum.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. One hundred and thirty thousand dollars.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Or $130,000, as my friend from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] suggests, as rental for property used by the Government there outside of what it owns itself.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Well, we had the figures before the committee, and I can tell the gentleman he is mistaken.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My friend [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] says the amount of rental paid there now for Government purposes is $130,000 per annum.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. That is not borne out by the examination of the committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. But whether that statement be entirely accurate or not, it must be apparent to everybody that the only way to dispose of this property is in that manner that will produce the best results for the people of this country; and if we do sell this property, there will be a clamor after a while from that city for the purchase of ground on which to erect some other public building, and then we will be compelled to pay a vastly increased sum for it. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has nine minutes remaining.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. VAN VOORHIS.]

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. It seems to me that there is no necessity for selling this property at this time. There is no business demand for the sale. The Government is not in such need of money that it should sacrifice this property. The Government is paying, as I am told, now rent for buildings which are other than those belonging to the Government of over $130,000 a year.

Mr. SPRINGER. Who says that?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I am informed by gentlemen who have examined the records in the Treasury Department. I do not vouch for the correctness of the statement, but I have no doubt of its correctness. It is stated in the committee's report that three years ago the rents paid by the United States Government in New York were $140,000 a year.

Mr. HUTCHINS. There is nothing like that amount paid.

Mr. SPRINGER. The committee have had all the facts before them, and I understand that they do not find any such figures.

Mr. McCOOK. The only mistake the gentleman makes is $100,000 a year, that is all.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Why should we be paying these large rents in New York when we have a piece of property that we can utilize without paying any rent at all? If we sell it it will be but a year or two before we will have to buy something there to build on, and when you go into the market to buy this property the Government will have to pay $2,000,000 to get it.

At the beginning of this business the Government received an offer from somebody of $200,000 for this property. It was afterward increased until it got up to $300,000; then it went up to $400,000; then to $500,000, and now we are told we can get $600,000 for it. That is not one-half of its value. There is nobody, so far as I know, Mr. Speaker, that desires to have the Government sell this property except those who want to buy it. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS.]

Mr. MILLS. I only rise to ask if the Government has had any appraisal of this property from any gentleman who has investigated it?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I reply to my friend from Texas by saying that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have investigated the question by calling before them the best men competent to judge of the matter in the city of New York and the members from the city of New York, and we have had no one before us except the present lessee of the property who objected to the sale. Nobody has estimated it at an amount exceeding that fixed as the limit in the bill.

Mr. MILLS. Six hundred thousand dollars?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. RUSSELL. How much is that a foot?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I cannot say precisely at this moment.

Mr. ATHERTON. From whom does the estimate come?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. From such men as John E. Devlin, who have estimated a much less sum than that.

Mr. ATHERTON. By whom were these witnesses produced?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. They were produced at the request of the committee.

Mr. MILLS. I resume the floor. It seems to me if gentlemen would act in a business way about this they would authorize by a joint resolution or act of Congress a board of appraisers to go and appraise that property at its present cash value, and then we can intelligently understand how to put the property on the market for sale. Nobody now knows what is its value. Some time ago they were proposing to authorize it to be sold at a minimum of $200,000. Then it was put at $300,000; then at $500,000; and now it has got up to $600,000. If we were providing for the sale of the property a year or two ago at a minimum of $300,000, if it is now worth more than $600,000, we were legislating very foolishly, it seems to me. This is a business transaction and it should be treated in a business way. The Government should ascertain from some of its duly appointed officers—not men who want to buy the property—what the cash value of that lot and house is to-day, and then Congress should fix a minimum corresponding to that report.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] allow me to ask him a question?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I reserve the remainder of my time till I hear the opposite side.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ROBINSON.]

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. This question has been before the House on other occasions and I have listened to hear what was the ground of objection to what is here proposed. If it is granted that the United States has real property in New York that is not needed at all, and not likely to be needed, it is certainly good economy to sell it if we can sell it for what it is worth. Now, how shall we find that out? The ordinary way is to sell at public auction.

I understand this bill provides for the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. I presume he is to be relied upon. Everybody seems to rely on his honor and good faith and judgment, and rightfully, too. The sale must be advertised. That is specifically provided in the bill. All the safeguards are there. And, as I understand, the public auction is to be had in New York. Now, I think it is very safe to assume there are people enough in New York City to make competition for the property so that it will be sold for its fair value. There is talk as if a ring will be got up, by which all the moneyed men of New York City who might otherwise buy will be in some way controlled.

I have been informed—if it is not the fact I will withdraw the statement—that some man of the name of Conant now rents that property at $12,500 a year and sublets it so that he makes $15,000 or $20,000 a year. If that be the fact he would have a very large interest in the matter, so as to induce him to persuade members of Congress, if he could, to interpose objections.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If Mr. Conant gets it at a cheaper rent than he ought to get it, why does not the Secretary of the Treasury take it out of his hands and rent it to some one who will pay a higher rent?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It is understood that is all the Government can rent it for.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. And why does not the Government use it instead of paying large rents elsewhere?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I understand it is not valuable for the purposes of the Government. There is a minimum put in here, and gentlemen say the committee are shifting ground as to that. I am not on the committee, but I say there is no shifting of ground. Somebody said unless you raise it to a certain minimum price we will object; and suppose the minimum was raised to a million, there would be objections still.

In other words it may be the policy of some parties to prevent any sale whatever that somebody may get the profit that Mr. Conant is evidently getting.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The Government has made $300,000 by holding on to the property for four years.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. If this property is worth so much as it is said, it is not to be supposed that it will not be sold for something near its worth merely because somebody suggests that after it is advertised in all the papers nobody will come to buy it, but all will stand off and allow a ring to control the sale.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield now five minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT.]

Mr. McCOOK. I ask the House to listen attentively to my colleague, [Mr. HEWITT,] who was absent when this bill was formerly under discussion.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. First, as to the grievance which the city of New York is under. Here is property upon which jurisdiction has been relinquished and which is not subject to taxation. If it is required for Government use, then there is no grievance; but if it is not required for Government use and is rented out for revenue, then the city of New York is deprived of its lawful taxes upon this property, and all the Government makes in the way of rent, while the value is rising, is money improperly taken from the treasury of the city of New York. That is the first thing.

Secondly, as to the misapprehension which prevails on the part of gentlemen. They seem to think that property put up at auction in the city of New York might not find bidders, for so much money as a million of dollars would be difficult to raise. To a New Yorker that is simply absurd and ridiculous. A hundred millions of dollars could be raised on one hour's notice for a real-estate transaction in New York on which the buyer could make 2½ per cent.

If this property is put up at auction the dealers in real estate and the great capitalists in New York will be there to buy, and it will be absolutely impossible to prevent the property from bringing a fair price. When gentlemen talk about the Government having made money by raising this limit of value that is all ridiculous nonsense. A limit of $100,000 is just as good as a limit of $600,000; and when the limit was put at $200,000 the property would have brought $1,000,000 just as quickly as it will to-day, if it is worth that amount of money. The limitation is merely the upset price and does not gauge the value of the property at all. No one knows what it will bring; but one thing is certain, it will bring more if sold as a whole than if divided up and sold in parts.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Who is urging the sale of this property?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I am urging it as the Representative of my city; and every Representative from the city of New York is urging it. And we are met here by one single man, Mr. Conant, who has been able to block the wheels of Congress against the unanimous judgment of the delegation from New York City.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Is the gentleman aware that two weeks ago the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] opposed the passage of this bill?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. ROBINSON is not a Representative from the city of New York; he is from the city of Brooklyn. As to Mr. COX, he admitted to me in conversation after I returned to this city that he had no proper idea of the value of this property; that he merely desired to see the sale properly made. He admits now that this bill is properly guarded. The change of limit to $600,000 has been made at his request. I went to the committee to have the limit made in order that the scruples of Mr. COX in that particular direction might be met. I wish he was here at this time to make the statement for himself.

But I want to say that whether you put the limit at $600,000 or at $100,000 will make no difference as to the amount which this property will bring when sold. And now as regards the value of this property. I am a judge of this sort of property, let me say, for when I was a young man, and "poor and a subject of charity," I delivered my first speech in this old church building, and I know something about it. [Laughter.]

I will say that in my judgment $600,000 is as near the extreme limit of the value of this property as I can possibly make it. I have some doubt whether it will bring $600,000, but I think it will.

A piece of property directly south of this, one block nearer to Wall street, comprising one-half of the block, with a six-story marble building upon it, was sold two months ago for $360,000. The building alone on the property is worth at least $200,000.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Allow me to correct my colleague; it was sold for $462,500.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I will correct my statement; it was sold for $462,500.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. On what street was that property?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. On the same street with this property, but one block farther south; on the corner of Pine street. I know about the value of the building, because I myself furnished a part of the materials used in the construction of that building. And I say that a similar building could not be put there to-day for less than $250,000, which would leave the ground to be worth $200,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. How much ground?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The block is exactly the same length and exactly the same front as this; but half the front was sold.

Mr. HUTCHINS. That piece of property was 70 feet front; the post-office lot is 170 feet.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. A hundred feet more.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. A hundred feet more front of ground, but the building is one of the very finest class of buildings built within the last seven or eight years.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Does not this post-office building front on three streets, whereas the other fronts on only two?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The other fronts on but two streets, because, as I said, but half the block was sold. The price at which that property was sold indicates that $600,000 is too high for this property. But I think this property will bring $600,000, for the reason that a large block of ground not built upon is to-day regarded in New York as more desirable than one that is improved, because the purchaser of it can improve it as he may desire.

Now, it is said that the Government should retain this property because it rents so much property in the city of New York. It is true the Government rents other property there, but for purposes for which this property is not at all suited. If the Government wanted this property to use in the way in which it uses property it rents, then it ought to keep it. But the property which it rents is used mainly for storage purposes, and this property is too valuable for use in that way.

I should be unwilling that the House should be misinformed as to the real facts in this case. I say to the House that it is not in the power of man to prevent this property from bringing all it is really worth at public auction. If there be any ring about the matter, any hugger-muggery about it, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to set aside the sale, and he is a man whom we all in the State of New York are willing to trust, whether we are Democrats or Republicans.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I would inquire of the Chair how much time I have left.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has six minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will yield three minutes of my time to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HUTCHINS.]

Mr. HUTCHINS. When the bill was before the House some weeks ago I took no part in the debate. Since that time I have informed myself concerning the facts of the case, and I am ready to vote for the bill as now amended by the committee. I have had knowledge of this property for forty years. During several years I had an office opposite to it. It was formerly a church, but was purchased by the Government about the year 1861 and changed into a post-office. Since the time it ceased to be needed for this purpose, it has been rented by the Government.

I can conceive of no purpose for which it can be now profitably used by the Government. It is not needed for a site for a post-office, a building in which courts may be held, or for Government offices of any description.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] stated that the bill provided that the property should be sold for cash. In this he is mistaken. There is no limitation in that respect. The Secretary of the Treasury may sell it upon credit—upon such credit as he may be pleased to give.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I beg my friend's pardon; I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] himself will correct the gentleman from New York on that point. The bill does contemplate the sale for cash.

Mr. HUTCHINS. There is no provision of that kind in the Senate bill now before us.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The reading of the bill will convince my friend from New York that the sale must be for cash; and I believe my friend from Pennsylvania will confirm this statement.

Mr. HUTCHINS. If it would not be taken out of my time I would pause to allow the bill to be read.

The SPEAKER. It cannot be read except in the gentleman's time.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I presume we can have the bill read again before voting upon it. I am satisfied an examination of it will show the gentleman from Illinois that he is mistaken.

Besides there is in the bill a provision that the Secretary of the Treasury may reject all bids. If the property does not bring as much as he thinks it ought, he has power to reject all bids, readvertise it, and offer it for sale again and again until it brings such price as he thinks it is worth.

Mr. Speaker, I took occasion to send an inquiry as to the value of this property to E. H. Ludlow & Co., who, as every member from New York City knows, are real-estate auctioneers in the city of New York doing an extensive business. They are men whose statements may be implicity relied upon, and who I am confident would have no interest in the purchase of the property. I have learned from them in reply that they fix the value of the property at $600,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I have now three minutes remaining. I propose to yield one minute to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MCCOOK,] one to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] and retain one for myself.

Mr. MCCOOK. Mr. Speaker, on a recent occasion when this bill was before the House I expressed my opinion in regard to its merits; and I am very glad that to-day two of my colleagues from that city, or practically from that city, one residing there, and one a short distance to the northward, [Mr. HEWITT and Mr. HUTCHINS.] have verified what I said in regard to the character of the bill and its justice. It comes before the House with the unanimous support of every member of the House from the city of New York—six Democrats and one Republican. I have never pretended to have any personal knowledge with regard to the value of this property. My views were based upon what I heard from men who were before the committee, real-estate owners or experts as to the value of property in New York City. I simply wish now to say that I believe it would be a gross piece of injustice to the city of New York if we should refuse to dispose of this property under the bill. So long as it remains in its present condition, the city of New York is deprived of between $40,000 and $60,000 of taxes from the property, which, when improved will probably be worth a million or a million and a half of dollars.

I wish also to correct a mistake which has been made here with regard to the amount of rent paid by the Government in the city of New York. My colleague from the northern part of the State [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] stated the amount I believe at $100,000; but the evidence before the committee showed conclusively that it did not exceed $33,000. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the passage of this bill. It is well known and admitted that the Government does not need this property. The true test, then, whether the Government should sell it or not, is whether the Government, if it did not own it, should buy it. Is there a gentleman on this floor who would propose that the Government should buy this property now, if it did not own it?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. And did not need it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir. Now if you apply this test what gentleman upon this floor would vote to buy the property? The Government has no use for it; and if, supposing it did not own the property it would not buy it, we ought now to sell it and let it pass into the hands of those who can use it for business purposes.

As to the value of this property, I am willing to take the opinion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] as against any commission or board that we might organize for the purpose of appraising it. If gentlemen representing the city of New York on this floor are not competent to judge of the value of this property I do not know where we can go to find competent men. I am willing to take their statements; and as they represent the views of their people, we ought not to go against their wishes in a matter of this kind.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SHALLENBERGER rose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. As I have reserved five minutes of my time, I should be glad to use that time now; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] when he takes the floor may reply to me.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Very well.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire that anything shall be done unfairly in regard to this matter. I am governed by no other motive in the question than regard to the public interest.

I am perfectly willing to take the opinion of the gentlemen from New York who advocate the sale of this property, and concede to them pure and honest motives, and I only ask the same motives shall be attributed to myself. I have no objection to the sale of this property and all I insist upon is that it shall not be offered for less than its fair cash value. A valuation has been placed on the property by good and honest men of from $1,000,000 to $1,250,000. And I stood on that property in the city of New York four years ago in company with an ex-Secretary of the Treasury, a man whose word is synonymous with honesty and truth throughout the land, and he told me then the property was worth at least $1,000,000. Now, Mr. Speaker, Mr. HEWITT, of New York, says this property has not grown in value during that four years——

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I beg the gentleman's pardon; it has grown in value.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It must necessarily grow in value every day. It is in the heart of the business part of New York City. It is within two blocks of Wall street. It is within two blocks of the Stock Exchange. The property is growing in value every day. Everybody familiar with the locality knows that there is not a spot of ground where property is growing more rapidly in value than this old post-office site.

A hue and cry is raised about some poor man living there. I am told he is there by the leave of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary can eject him whenever he pleases.

If Mr. Conant does not pay enough rent, then why does not the Government oust him?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Does my colleague believe when the General Government has acquired property for a specific purpose and has ceased to use it for that purpose that it should continue to hold it forever?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I have no time to answer my friend. I wish to come to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MCCOOK.] He says that the city of New York loses $60,000 a year in taxes on this property because it is Government property. What does that teach us? The gentleman no doubt is stimulated by his desire to advance the interest of the city of New York, but let me call attention to the fact that when the gentleman says the city of New York loses $60,000 of tax on this property every year that is an evidence this property is worth $3,000,000, for the rate in New York is 2 per cent., and 2 per cent. on $3,000,000 would only produce $60,000 a year the amount of tax he says is lost by the city of New York by this being Government property.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Then they would put a building on it costing $3,000,000.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has one minute left.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, this is a piece of Government property in the city of New York which has not been used by the Government for the last five years. The present Secretary of the Treasury says it will not be needed and should be sold. If he needs more accommodations for public offices in the near future he states this is not the property he would advise the Government to occupy with a new building. Secretary Sherman, the preceding Secretary of the Treasury, gave us a like recommendation to sell this property.

There is no question in the mind of any official of the Treasury Department, I think, as to the propriety of selling this piece of property. Not one Representative from the city of New York, not one prominent business man from that city or elsewhere has hesitated to indorse the sale at public auction as provided for in this bill. Although as a committee when considering this bill we gave public and private notice of our desire to hear both sides, not a single individual appeared in opposition to this proposition except one man, and he was the lessee, making $12,000, $15,000, or possibly $20,000 a year out of the lease of this property by subletting.

I say this property should be sold some time, and there never was a time, nor will there soon occur a time in all probability, when it could be sold to better advantage than now. There cannot be a bill more carefully framed or better calculated, in my judgment, and in the judgment of gentlemen better informed on this subject than myself, to secure the last dollar it is worth.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired. The question recurs on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill and amendment reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 26.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. No quorum has voted. If gentlemen will give us the yeas and nays I will withdraw the point of order, otherwise I shall insist on it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must take his own course.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order there is no quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. SHALLENBERGER and Mr. HOLMAN as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 126, noes 20.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill as amended was passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. No. 604) granting a pension to Margaret Beymer;

A bill (S. No. 984) increasing the pension of Emma H. Collins;

A bill (S. No. 1040) granting a pension to Theodore Rauthe;

A bill (S. No. 1068) for the relief of citizens of Tennessee;

A bill (S. No. 1201) granting a pension to Jacob Nix;

A bill (S. No. 1886) donating four condemned cast-iron cannon for the soldiers' monument at the village of East Bloomfield, New York;

A bill (S. No. 1942) granting condemned cannon to Abe Lincoln Post No. 29 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, for monumental purposes;

A bill (S. No. 2050) donating four condemned cannon and four cast-iron cannon-balls for the soldiers' monument at Ironton, Ohio; and

A bill (S. No. 2057) granting condemned cannon, &c., to the city of Marshalltown, Iowa.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. BRAGG, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. HEWITT, of New York, indefinitely, in consequence of sickness.

To Mr. TALBOTT, for ten days.

To Mr. PHELPS, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. LEEDOM, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to print some remarks on the bill to admit Dakota as a State into the Union. [See Appendix.]

RACHAEL J. FLOYD.

Mr. RAY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6798) for the relief of Rachael J. Floyd; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

And then, on motion of Mr. RANDALL, (at four o'clock and fifty-eight minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BELMONT: The petition of Mary M. Spencer, of Geneva, New York, and others, for the passage of the French spoliation-claims bill—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. DEZENDORF: The petition of E. H. Murrell, of Lynchburgh, Virginia, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DINGLEY: The petition of General Thomas W. Hyde and 125 others, citizens of Maine, for the settlement of the French spoliation claims—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. S. S. FARWELL: The petition of 141 citizens of the second Congressional district of Iowa, for the confirmation of the call for a peace congress to be held in Washington, District of Columbia, November 22, 1882—to the same committee.

By Mr. KASSON: The petition of 35 citizens of the seventh and ninth Congressional districts of Iowa, for a confirmation of the call for a peace congress in Washington, November 22, 1882—to the same committee.

By Mr. McLANE: The petition of Colonel and Brevet Brigadier-General Israel Vogdes, United States Army, retired, for relief—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr PETTIBONE: The petition of A. H. Pettibone, for the establishment of a post-route from White Pine to Parrottsville, in the State of Tennessee—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SPOONER: The petition of the Bailey Wringing Machine Company and others, protesting against the passage of bill (H. R. No. 5752) providing for extension of patent to the heirs of John Young—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. WHITTHORNE: The petition of W. T. Sutton and others, for the establishment of a post-route from Graham to Only, in the State of Tennessee—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 18, 1882.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. MORRILL, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PENDLETON presented a petition of 64 citizens of Ohio, praying for the confirmation of the call for a peace congress to meet in Washington in November, 1882; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SEWELL. I present the petition of William Hughes, late of the Capitol police, praying to be granted all pay and allowances, such as would have accrued to him as a member of the Capitol police force had he never been discharged on a certain false allegation. Attached to the petition is the certificate of George B. Corkhill, United States attorney for the District of Columbia. I move that the petition be printed, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL presented resolutions of the board of health of Philadelphia, praying for an appropriation to continue the publication of the bulletins of the National Board of Health; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of citizens of York, Pennsylvania, praying that the reductions in the tax on tobacco may by the proposed legislation on the subject be made to take effect from the passage of the act; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LOGAN. At the request of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] I present the petition of John P. Hamlin, foreman, and the other jurors in the Guiteau case, praying for additional compensation of $5 a day for their services as such jurors. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. COCKRELL, Mr. DAWES, Mr. GROOME, and Mr. VANCE submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2037) to amend the military record of Samuel S. Troy, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred sundry bills, authorizing the Secretary of War to donate cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for the decoration of certain cemeteries and national monuments, to report them favorably without amendment.

The bills were announced by title, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 6149) donating condemned cast-iron cannon for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6679) donating condemned cast-iron cannon to the town of Hatfield, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6721) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to Edward Pye Post No. 179 of the Grand Army of the Republic four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cannon-balls, for decorating the proposed soldiers' monument at Haverstraw, New York;

A bill (H. R. No. 6695) granting condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 5978) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for the soldiers' cemetery at Knoxville, Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. No. 6692) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6718) to donate two condemned cast-iron cannon and twelve cannon-balls to the A. E. Burnside Post No. 109 of the Grand Army of the Republic, of South Chicago, Illinois; and

A bill (S. No. 2154) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I ask consent that the bills just reported may be considered at this time.

Mr. MORRILL. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bills will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 89) directing the Secretary of War to loan tents and camp equipage to the Second Regiment of Virginia Volunteers, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MILLER, of California, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 209) to authorize the President of the United States to call an international conference to fix on and recommend for universal adoption a common prime meridian to be used in the reckoning of longitude and in the regulation of time throughout the world, reported it with an amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred an amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, the amendment providing for an appropriation of $5,000 for repairing and extending wharf and the erection of boat-houses at Coaster's Harbor Island, reported it favorably and moved its reference to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ANTHONY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2155) to authorize the Public Printer to make certain purchases without previous advertisement; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. JACKSON (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2156) granting a pension to Mrs. E. G. C. Abbott; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business the morning hour is closed.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand that the Senator from Rhode Island has some business to present which is in order, and as soon as he gets through with that I shall ask the Senate to continue the consideration of the tax bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont gave notice yesterday that he would not call up the tax bill to-day until one o'clock.

Mr. MORRILL. I know, but I have altered my mind.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolution for printing the Tenth Census, which I think comes up in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is in order under the rule. The resolution will be read.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the bill (S. No. 2151) to provide for the publication of the Tenth Census.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island asks for the consideration of this bill. If there be no objection, it is before the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. I object to the consideration of the bill. I thought it was a resolution, which would be in order, but it seems to be a bill, and I therefore object, and ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the tax bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Vermont is right; I thought it was a resolution, but I find that it is a bill.

Mr. HOAR. Before the bill passes from the Senate I should like to give notice of an amendment to it. I ask the Senator from Vermont to give consent to have the bill taken up, so as to have the amendment I propose printed with the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to having the amendment printed with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask to have the amendment read?

Mr. HOAR. It is not necessary that it be read now.

Mr. ALLISON and others. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HOAR. If the amendment is to be printed in the RECORD I ask leave to have two letters from the Secretary of the Interior relating to the subject printed also in the RECORD.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think these things had better not be printed in the RECORD. We are getting into the practice of cumbering up the RECORD with bills and letters that might just as well be printed in the usual mode and laid on the table.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. I will not take time by insisting upon the printing of the papers in the RECORD. Let the amendment be printed, and let it be considered that the bill is taken up for the purpose of offering the amendment and having it printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received and printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had appointed Mr. R. M. MCLANE, of Maryland, a member of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, in place of Mr. J. H. REAGAN, excused.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1774) authorizing the sale of the land and premises formerly occupied as a site for the post-office in the city of New York, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3411) for the relief of John M. Higgins; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 261) to continue the provisions of a oint resolution approved June 30, 1882, entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government."

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 15th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 219) for the relief of Rebecca Wright, widow of James Wright, a soldier in the war of 1812;

An act (S. No. 643) for the relief of Ellen Moore, widow of Allen Moore, deceased;

An act (S. No. 144) granting a pension to Mary E. Ambrester;

An act (S. No. 462) granting a pension to Emma A. Ramsey;

An act (S. No. 603) granting a pension to Sarah C. Golderman;

An act (S. No. 718) granting a pension to Ellen M. Godfrey;

An act (S. No. 725) granting a pension to S. Annie Esterbrook;

An act (S. No. 802) granting a pension to Mrs. Cornelia F. White;

An act (S. No. 1195) granting a pension to William Hazelit;

An act (S. No. 1532) granting a pension to George C. Quick;

An act (S. No. 1576) granting a pension to Ellen Lardner;

An act (S. No. 1852) granting a pension to Florida G. Casey; and

An act (S. No. 1095) to provide for the erection of a public building at Poughkeepsie, New York.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 30, noes 20.

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 39, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—39.

Bayard,	Davis of Illinois,	Hawley,	Morgan,
Beck,	Davis of W. Va.,	Hill of Colorado,	Pendleton,
Butler,	Farley,	Ingalls,	Pugh,
Call,	Ferry,	Jackson,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Garland,	Jonas,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Wis.,	Gorman,	Kellogg,	Slater,
Chilcott,	Groome,	Lapham,	Vance,
Cockrell,	Grover,	Logan,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Walker.
Conger,	Harris,	Miller of N. Y.,

NAYS—20.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Miller of Cal.,	Rollins,
Allison,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Saunders,
Anthony,	Hale,	Morrill,	Sewell,
Blair,	Harrison,	Platt,	Sherman,

Edmunds,	Jones of Florida,	McPherson,	Williams.
Fair,	Jones of Nevada,	Mahone,
George,	Lamar,	Ransom,
Hill of Georgia,	McDill,	Van Wyck,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five hours and twenty minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 369) granting a pension to Jacob R. McFarren;

A bill (H. R. No. 1098) granting a pension to Martha Westervelt;

A bill (H. R. No. 1102) granting a pension to Elizabeth T. Dubois;

A bill (H. R. No. 1422) granting a pension to Mary Wade,

A bill (H. R. No. 2127) granting a pension to James F. Rose;

A bill (H. R. No. 2481) for the relief of Dicey Bobbitt;

A bill (H. R. No. 3316) granting a pension to David Darling;

A bill (H. R. No. 4719) granting a pension to Betty Taylor Dandridge;

A bill (H. R. No. 5239) granting a pension to Mrs. Speedie B. Eggleston; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6008) to restore the name of Eliza M. Bass to the pension-roll.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. SEWELL submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3411) for the relief of John M. Higgins was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before anything is done, let me ask what is the pending question?

Mr. MORRILL. I moved before we went into executive session to take up the tax bill.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the unfinished business?

The ACTING SECRETARY. The bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce the internal-revenue taxation.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a joint resolution which passed the House of Representatives this morning, in order that it may be taken up and considered at this time. It will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. R. No. 261) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved June 30, 1882, entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government."

Mr. INGALLS. How much longer are these resolutions to be continued, succeeding each other, before the consideration of the regular appropriation bills which are on the table?

Mr. ALLISON. A joint resolution was passed on the 30th of June extending the appropriations of the last fiscal year until the 20th of July. That time expires the day after to-morrow, and the joint resolution now before the Senate extends the time to the 31st day of this month inclusive.

Mr. INGALLS. Before the joint resolution is considered I wish again to propound the inquiry when the regular appropriation bills which are on the table are to be considered, in order that this slipshod method of pontoning over the embarrassment may be avoided?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know to whom the Senator from Kansas addresses the question.

Mr. INGALLS. To the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLISON. There is but one appropriation bill now pending in the Senate. I think it is hardly worth while at this hour of the day to undertake to take that bill up.

Mr. INGALLS. My inquiry is, when it is to be taken up?

Mr. ALLISON. That depends upon a majority of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. Exactly.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the committee——

Mr. HARRIS. When will the Senator ask to take it up?

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] who has charge of the naval appropriation bill when he proposes to move that the Senate consider that bill?

Mr. HALE. I gave notice yesterday that I intended to move to take it up to-day. The day is so far gone that I do not think it hardly worth while to move to proceed with the bill to-night. I may also say to the Senator from Kansas that the Senator from Vermont who has charge of a little tax bill is quite desirous of bringing that bill up and perhaps passing it to-night; and if that can be done, I shall be very willing that he may do that in order to have it out of the way of the appropriation bills, so that we may go right on with that to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from Maine intend to wait until the tax bill is passed before he asks for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill?

Mr. HALE. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that the Senator from Vermont has a very persuasive way, and he has induced me in connection with the persuasions of sundry other Senators to yield in order that he may put his bill on its passage.

Mr. HARRIS. I know the persuasive ways of the Senator from Vermont. My question is, will the Senator from Maine yield to them and bide his time until the tax bill is passed before asking for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill?

Mr. HALE. I have for the present yielded to those persuasive ways. I hope the Senator from Vermont may get his bill up now, and that we may vote upon it at once.

Mr. HARRIS. How long does the Senator from Maine propose to wait if the bill of the Senator from Vermont shall not pass to-day?

Mr. HALE. That I cannot tell. I presume there will be no further debate on the tax bill and we can proceed to vote at once upon the amendments to it.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Maine is mistaken. There is a difference upon this subject. It is not possible that a bill entering into the reduction of taxation and dragging in great questions that relate to the duties on imports can be considered in any haste. There is no mistake about that at all. I do not want to enter into the discussion to-night, nor will I be betrayed into doing so; but it is not to be thought of that that measure will be voted upon in a hurry.

Mr. HALE. Let me say to the Senator, if he will allow me to interrupt him, that it cannot be with any justice now asserted that if we come to a vote it has been reached in a hurry, because the Senator from Vermont reported his bill more than a week ago, and all the time since has been given to different Senators to deliver long and eloquent and able speeches on the subject. It is the general feeling everywhere that we are ready now to go to work and vote. I do not suppose the Senator himself perhaps cares to discuss the measure at length any further.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have some remarks to make upon it, neither long nor eloquent.

Mr. HALE. Perhaps the Senator could make those remarks under the five-minute rule.

Mr. VOORHEES. No; I could not submit to any five-minute rule on a question that involves millions and hundreds of millions of revenue. I do not want to talk to-night at five o'clock; but if I were under the necessity of doing so, I could say some things to show the mere dribbling sham and trifling character of this proposed legislation that came here to the Senate preceded by a proposition on the part of the House to adjourn in ten days—a question involving millions upon millions—and it is not decent even to talk of a vote on the proposition now.

Mr. HALE. The Senate, I am sure, will be willing to wait to-night and listen to the Senator from Indiana, and even then we might get a vote after he has finished.

Mr. VOORHEES. There can be no vote taken now.

Mr. CONGER. Would there be any impropriety in inquiring when the regular order is to be proceeded with?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent, as there certainly will be no objection, to consider the joint resolution. It is necessary that we should prolong the time, whatever may be done with the tax bill or the appropriation bills.

Mr. GARLAND. I want to ask a question in reference to this joint resolution. I ask if the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate have considered it?

Mr. ALLISON. I must answer the Senator by saying that they have not formally considered it.

Mr. GARLAND. When the former resolution was passed I made the same suggestion. I thought then that twenty days was not enough. I have very great doubts now as to thirteen days further being enough. It makes thirteen days from now to the 31st.

Mr. ALLISON. I quite agree with the Senator, and if it will suit his purpose better I am willing that the joint resolution may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations to-night, so that it may be considered in committee.

Mr. GARLAND. I was going to object to its consideration this evening. I wish the joint resolution to go to the Committee on Appropriations, and I shall offer an amendment to carry it to the first Monday in October.

Mr. BUTLER. Let it be reported again. I have not been able to hear it.

The Acting Secretary read the joint resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Arkansas desires to prolong the time, I have no objection. Of course the effect of the joint resolution is only to continue this class of appropriations until the regular appropriation bills are passed; so if he desires to prolong the time, I shall interpose no objection.

Mr. GARLAND. I understand that perfectly well, but we have been called on now in the space of about twenty days to do this thing twice. It is getting a little tiresome, a little monotonous. I prefer that the joint resolution shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and if we have no more light on this subject to-morrow I think it is very likely we had better carry it to the first Monday in December. I move the reference of the joint resolution to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

NEW YORK POST-OFFICE SITE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 1774) authorizing the sale of the land and premises formerly occupied as a site for the post-office in the city of New York. The amendment of the House of Representatives is in line 11, after the word "than," to strike out "five" and insert "six."

Mr. MORRILL. If there is no objection, I will move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. ROLLINS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. That is right.

Mr. HOAR. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. VOORHEES. Then I have a motion to make.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the amendment of the House? Let it be reported, that we may vote understandingly.

Mr. HOAR. I ask for the regular order. What is the regular order?

Mr. INGALLS. This is the regular order. Such business is always in order.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the amendment we are asked to concur in?

Mr. ROLLINS. To strike out "$500,000" and insert "$600,000" in the limit of the price of the sale of the old post-office site in New York. That is all of it. It adds $100,000 to the price we are to get.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOAR. What is the regular order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the unfinished business.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order, then. The tax bill is before the Senate. The Chair may undoubtedly interrupt that by laying before the Senate for its information the action of the House, but it does not put the question of concurrence in the House amendment in order. In order to do that the tax bill must be laid aside by a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that this is commonly done, and there has been no objection made to the practice.

Mr. ROLLINS. That is all there is to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will then put the formal motion.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have the floor, and I believe a motion to adjourn is always in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator——

Mr. VOORHEES. I have the floor, and shall yield to no one.

Mr. LAPHAM. Before that is done——

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask for the question on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate adjourn.

The Senate refused to adjourn; there being, on a division—ayes 21, noes 31.

INTERNAL REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us go on with the regular business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, although it is customary to have a disposition of House amendments to Senate bills. The formal motion is to lay aside the bill in order to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us go on for ten minutes in order to proceed with the tax bill. I object, therefore, to laying aside the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation is before the Senate. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to the amendment of the Committee on Finance.

Several SENATORS. Let it be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The amendment to the amendment is to substitute for the words proposed to be inserted by the committee amendment the following:

> Now imposed by law on manufactured tobacco on and after January 1, 1883, from and after that date the tax on manufactured tobacco shall be 10 cents per pound; and.

Mr. VOORHEES. I wish to ask the other side of the Chamber whether it is proposed to act on the pending amendment with the Senator from Kentucky out of his seat, and without the slightest idea on his part that such a question would be precipitated upon the Senate at this hour? If that is the intention, we have as much endurance as you have.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President——

Mr. VOORHEES. I appeal to the Senator from Vermont, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, whether he proposes in the absence of the Senator from Kentucky to bring on a contest of endurance on this question and see who can stay the longest? If so, I want to know it. It will be so totally unfair and outrageous, and I so characterize it before he speaks, that I should be astonished if he gave his countenance to it.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand that the Senator from Kentucky is in the Appropriations Committee room, and was but a moment ago in the Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not know; that may be; but I ask the Senator from Vermont whether he proposes to sit the bill out to-night? Is that the meaning of this movement?

Mr. MORRILL. I propose to go on with the bill whenever the Senate is ready to go on with it.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Vermont knows very well that it is near the usual time of adjournment. The Senator from Vermont knows that it is impossible to deal double with me. He knows perfectly well the meaning of what I am asking, whether he means to force a sitting to-night on this question or whether he means simply for the next half hour to go on and consider the bill and then adjourn. As the Senator from Kentucky is absent, if he proposes to force a vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky it would be a very unusual proceeding.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend from Indiana can see that there are two Senators ready to speak on the question. Why not let them proceed?

Mr. VOORHEES. I should like to see the Senator from Kentucky here. I would not for one moment take up a question involving an amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio in his absence; I would not for one moment force a vote upon an amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio upon a great and important question in his absence, and I hope he would not in the absence of anybody else.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana make a motion?

Mr. VOORHEES. I yield for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the amendment now under consideration by the Senate is of very large importance. The question of the diminution of the tax on tobacco is perhaps more effective in the way of reduction of taxation than any feature of the bill. I propose to submit some reasons to the Senate why the tax should be diminished, and why it can be safely diminished not only with reference to the revenues but with regard to the general prosperity of the country.

The subject is large and very important and I had no idea that it would be taken up now or that the discussion would be ended this evening. The executive session began soon after eleven o'clock and we were shut in here without fresh air until within the last few minutes, and I am very sure that it is not the intention of the Senator from Vermont to bring up a bill of this kind and to continue its consideration at such cost to the health of the Senate, without gain to the public business; and therefore I hope that some gentleman of the majority will move that the Senate do now adjourn.

I do not care to address the Senate now on this subject. It is a matter to be discussed in a serious way. I hope, therefore, that we shall adjourn now at quarter past five, we having been shut in here with closed doors and closed windows in this fearful atmosphere.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I favor a reduction of the present tax on tobacco and I want the opportunity of voting to that effect. I understand that the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky is now not in a condition to be amended, it being in the second degree. It is my judgment that the per cent. named by him is lower than it should be, and I ask him if he is not willing to change the rate from 10 to 12 cents in his amendment?

Mr. BECK. I said yesterday I had no objection to testing it at 8 or 12 cents; and in view of the very large expenditures we are making and the reductions we ought to make on other things, I am entirely content to have the vote taken at 12 cents.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I suggest that the amendment be modified by striking out "10" and inserting "12."

Mr. BUTLER. In view of the statement just made by the Senator from Delaware it seems to me it would be very improper to go on with the discussion of this question this evening. The Senator from Delaware has stated that he desires to address the Senate on this amendment, and I think in view of that fact it would be almost indecorous to ask us to take a vote on this amendment this evening. As far as I am concerned I am inclined to vote for it, but the Senator from Delaware has stated that he desires to address the Senate, and does not feel ready to go on this evening, and appealed to the other side to move an adjournment.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I desire to read some telegrams now by way of argument on this proposition.

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to read some telegrams from large tobacco and cigar men, merchants, and others in the State of Illinois on this subject. They carry their own argument with them. From Quincy, Illinois, where there are some very large firms in the tobacco business, I have this telegram:

QUINCY, ILLINOIS, July 17, 1882.

Senator JOHN A. LOGAN, Washington, D. C.:

It is the unanimous wish of undersigned that the tobacco tax should all be taken off or allowed to remain as it is. Agitation is what hurts us.

That is the language of some large firms in Quincy. Then from Chicago:

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, July 18, 1882.

Hon. JOHN A. LOGAN, United States Senator:

Trade and consumers neither ask for nor require reduction of tax on tobacco and cigars; but if tax is reduced, we, the wholesale dealers, have laid in heavy stocks for fall trade, and to change the tax now without affording them the relief of rebate on stock on hand will entail great loss to all and ruin to some.

M. E. McDOWELL & CO.

And quite a number of others. Again:

CHICAGO, July 18, 1882.

Hon. JOHN A. LOGAN:

If tax on tobacco, cigars, and cigarettes is reduced we will sustain heavy losses, unless rebate is allowed on stocks on hand. Please use your strongest influence for our protection.

McKINDLEY, GILCHRIST & CO.

These are very large firms in Chicago. And here is another dispatch from large firms there:

CHICAGO, July 18, 1882.

Hon. J. A. LOGAN:

Owing to the agreement made in the House caucus some time since that there would be no change in tobacco tax this session, Western dealers demand in the name of justice that we shall be protected from heavy losses by rebate on stocks on hand when reduction takes place.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Do I understand that there was a proposition in that House caucus that there should be no reduction on the tobacco tax, as the telegram states it?

Mr. LOGAN. They are speaking of the House caucus. It was published in the newspapers that the House caucus agreed that there should be no reduction in the tobacco tax.

Mr. SAULSBURY. A Republican caucus?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir; it refers to that of course.

Mr. BUTLER. Are any of these parties producers of tobacco?

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; they are wholesale and retail dealers in tobacco and cigars, and some of as large firms perhaps as there are in the United States. These are very large firms of Chicago and Quincy, Illinois.

Mr. BUTLER. Are any of them manufacturers of tobacco?

Mr. LOGAN. Some of them are; quite a number.

Mr. VOORHEES. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois if the same caucus of the Republican party of the House to which he alludes did not give forth to the world that they did not intend to disturb the internal-revenue tax on anything?

Mr. LOGAN. I am not discussing the caucus of the House; I have nothing to say about it. I only, in answer to the Senator from Delaware, said this dispatch referred to that.

Mr. VOORHEES. Such was my understanding.

Mr. LOGAN. It does not make any difference about the Senator's understanding; I have no understanding about it; I was not in the caucus and had nothing to do with it; I only stated what the dispatch referred to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I desire, in connection with the telegrams that have been submitted by the Senator from Illinois, to read a telegram received from two of the largest manufacturers of tobacco in Milwaukee, dated to-day:

MILWAUKEE, WISC., July 17, 1882.

Senator PHIL. SAWYER, Washington:

We protest against the passage of any law reducing the tax on tobacco. The manufacturers of tobacco, the merchants, and the tax-payers of this section are opposed to any legislation on tobacco at the present time. A change to take effect January 1st next, without rebate, would be ruinous to the trade generally, and we request you to oppose the measure. If a change is unavoidable it should be made to take effect March 1st, with rebate. Please communicate this to Senator CAMERON.

F. F. ADAMS & CO.,
Tobacco Manufacturers.

Mr. LOGAN. In connection with what I said a moment ago I desire to make a remark. In reference to the telegram from Quincy, in response to the Senator from Indiana, I will say that it was from manufacturers of tobacco, and, as I understand it, the firms in Quincy who telegraphed me employ about 2,000 hands in the manufacture of tobacco. The first telegrams I read from Chicago were from manufacturers of tobacco who employ a very large number of hands. The others were from wholesale dealers.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The firms who sign the telegram from Milwaukee which I read are very large manufacturers of tobacco.

Mr. JONAS. I have a similar dispatch directed to myself and my colleague, from New Orleans, dated July 11. The parties say:

NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, July 11, 1882.

Hon. B. F. JONAS or W. P. KELLOGG, Washington, D. C.:

We most urgently and earnestly request you to insist on having inserted in the internal-revenue bill a provision to refund to dealers the difference between the new and old rates of tax on the tax-paid cigars, cigarettes, and tobacco on hand at the time the act goes into effect, whether it goes into effect immediately or subsequently. If tax is reduced immediately without this relief, great loss will be sustained by dealers, inasmuch as relying on the protection of the Government they have bought and hold large stocks, the value of which would depreciate in proportion to the reduction of the tax. If reduced to take effect subsequently, great loss would be consequent by reason of great reduction in volume of business and unsettlement of values. If provision is made, but little loss or interruption to business will ensue. Outside of its justice and equity it would be policy of Government not to interfere with business of its citizens, but aid and promote it by all possible protection. Get all Representatives from Louisiana to aid you effectively.

JNO. I. ADAMS & CO.

These signers are some of the largest tobacco dealers and merchants in New Orleans. Before this bill was reported I presented similar dispatches and letters from very large tobacco manufacturers and manufacturers of cigars and cigarettes in New Orleans, and handed them to the chairman of the Finance Committee, and I understood that they were laid before the Finance Committee. Still this bill comes to us reported to the Senate with the proviso inserted in the House for a rebate stricken out. The House bill is perfectly acceptable to the tobacco trade. The proviso contained in the House bill would afford ample protection to the parties who relied on the faith of the Government. Believing that the Republican party were responsible for the legislation of Congress, they saw that in the popular branch where revenue bills must originate the Republican party in caucus had determined not to legislate upon the question of the reduction of internal revenue, and they laid in large stocks of cigars and cigarettes, and paid the tax to the Government. It is certainly but reasonable that the heavy loss which will be caused by the reduction proposed should not fall upon them, and that a rebate should be allowed; but the Finance Committee of the Senate with a Republican majority has stricken out this proviso, and no rebate is to be allowed and no protection, but on the contrary the time is extended until the 1st of October, during which dealers are to get rid of the immense stocks which they have laid in.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I desire to state in this connection that my colleague and myself have received telegrams from associations of tobacco manufacturers in our State, which embrace, I believe, nearly all the manufacturers in the State, of the same tenor as those presented by the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Wisconsin, protesting very strongly against any reduction of the duty upon tobacco that does not carry with it a rebate of all the taxes that shall be due when the act takes effect.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to say a word in connection with the statement of the Senator from Louisiana that through a Republican majority this rebate was refused in the Committee on Finance. I of course will not state what occurred in the committee room, whether by a majority or a minority, or whether there was any majority or minority. I only want to call attention to the fact that there never has been in any reduction of taxes hitherto a rebate. That involves considerations which it is practically impossible to carry out, and therefore hitherto when we have reduced the taxes upon tobacco and upon cigars, as we have two or three times, and upon other articles, the uniform practice has been to make the law take effect at a future time. The rebate is wholly an impracticable idea.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to present a telegram from the principal manufacturers of tobacco in the city of Detroit, and have it go upon the record, dated July 18, 1882:

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, July 18, 1882.

Hon. OMAR D. CONGER, U. S. S.:

All observe the question of reducing tax on manufactured tobacco is again being agitated. If any change is made the Detroit manufacturers are in favor of reducing to 8 cents, to take effect January 1, 1883. We must be protected against a free-leaf bill as long as any tax is paid.

AMERICAN EAGLE TOBACCO CO.
JOHN BAGLEY & CO.
GLOBE TOBACCO CO.
DANIEL SCOTTEN & CO.

This is signed by the four leading manufacturers of tobacco in the city of Detroit.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to make a statement? I desire to say, that it may go on record, that my colleague [Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois,] has similar dispatches to those I read, from tobacco manufacturers and merchants in the State of Illinois.

Mr. BECK. I have no doubt of it, and I feel sure there never was a change in taxation made where there was not a concerted movement on the part of men who had stocks on hand to get all the relief possible by a rebate. The other day when the matter was under consideration before the Committee on Finance the patent-medicine men all wanted a rebate on the old stock they had on hand for perhaps five or six years, and the match men came before us. We did agree at that time to make the reduction take effect on the 1st of May, to give them the longest time possible to prepare for the change. Everybody wants a rebate. If we were to go into it fully we should have to give ten years' rebate. I have plenty of telegrams of the same kind, all wanting rebates. That is the reason why I proposed to have the reduction take effect the 1st day of January next. When the tobacco men were here the other day, thirty or forty of them, they all agreed that the 1st day of January was the best time if the change had to be made. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. JONAS. The committee amendment proposes the 1st of October.

Mr. BECK. Not on tobacco. We made some provision relative to matches, putting them in warehouses, I believe. The House thought it better to have a rebate. If the Senate thinks it wise, it can be made. No doubt any change makes a disturbance to dealers and manufacturers, and they want a rebate for everything they have on hand. The only question is, how to do it with the least possible harm. The House provided for a rebate.

Mr. JONAS. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that the bill as reported provides:

SEC. 3. That on cigars which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or sale on and after the 1st day of October, 1882, there shall be assessed and collected, &c.

Mr. BECK. I am speaking about manufactured tobacco, not cigars.

Mr. JONAS. My dispatch referred to cigars and cigarettes.

Mr. BECK. I was not aware of that.

Mr. FARLEY. I wish to present a dispatch that does not interfere with the proposition of the Senator from Kentucky. I have a dispatch dated at San Francisco last night, from the board of trade, asking me to urge attention to the rebate clause in the tobacco bill. There is nothing in the dispatch that indicates any opposition to the reduction of the tax on tobacco, but it simply asks that the rebate clause which was in the House bill be retained in the Senate bill. This dispatch was sent by the board of trade, signed by its president, Jacob S. Taber. My colleague, I understand, has a similar dispatch, in which there is not a word said against the reduction of the tax on tobacco; it only suggests that the rebate be retained.

Mr. MORRILL. And not calling for the reduction of the tax on tobacco.

Mr. BECK. The proposition I made is changed to 12 cents now, and I agreed to that for two reasons: the tobacco is put up now in packages of pounds, half pounds, and quarter pounds; the tax being 16 cents a pound, 12 cents for three-quarters of a pound, 8 cents for half a pound, and 4 cents for a quarter pound. Making it either 8 or 12 cents is better than 10, on account of the way tobacco is put up, and as I believe we shall not have as much revenue as I thought some time since we should have, as we have made larger appropriations than I thought we would, I think we shall get rid at 12 cents of as much revenue as we can spare.

I am one of those who believe we had better make some arrangement about the time, allowing a margin to the 1st of January, rather than have a rebate; but that can be considered hereafter.

Now, one other suggestion. The Senator from Illinois yesterday thought all the benefit of a reduction went to the dealer who had a stock on hand. I think the Senator from Illinois will see now that all the dealers do not think so. I said the producer and consumer got the benefit of the reduction, and yesterday I happened to speak to a gentleman who was very largely interested in the tobacco trade——

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will understand that that does not change the statement I made at all. If these men who have purchased are allowed a rebate, they make the profit just the same.

Mr. BECK. I do not want to discuss that.

Mr. LOGAN. Nor I; but that is the effect of giving them the rebate, and they ought to have it in justice.

Mr. BECK. What I said yesterday was that the producer got largely the benefit of the reduction of the tax. I know that personally. My colleague is a large producer of tobacco himself, and he advises me that that is true. I therefore went to a gentleman yesterday who I supposed knew all about it, and he sent me a letter, which I got but a few minutes ago, which takes the same view I take.

Mr. LOGAN. If you reduce the tax and the dealers do not reduce the price of tobacco I do not see how the consumer gets any advantage. It is the manufacturer who gets the advantage and not the consumer.

Mr. BECK. Everybody gets it. I will present this letter, as the man who wrote it is very well informed on the subject:

WASHINGTON, July 18, 1882.

Senator BECK:

DEAR SIR: The statistics of the various leaf-tobacco markets of the country show a remarkable increased value of tobacco immediately following the reduction of the tax to 16 cents, and continuing until the present. This is more particularly the case in those markets where the tobacco is mostly used for home consumption, and consequently subject to the tax.

Reduction resulted exactly as the advocates of the measure predicted, namely, the grower and consumer were about equally benefited, each obtaining 4 cents of the reduction. It is far from being true that the consumers were not benefited, for they have either obtained the same quantities for less price, or better articles for the same price.

For instance, under the 24-cent tax the common smoking tobacco, which constitutes a large proportion of the whole and which cannot be sold for more than 16 cents for 4 ounces, had to be made very largely of stems, (the woody fiber,) with a small proportion of leaf and of consequent inferior quality. Now this grade of smoking can be made exclusively of leaf, and the 4 ounces sold for the same price is worth to the smoker 8 ounces of the former mixture; so that the benefit to the poor man in the use of his greatly begrudged luxury is far greater than the mere reduction of the tax.

The stems formerly used are now principally converted into fertilizers, and their place in manufacture supplied with low grade leaf tobacco, thus greatly increasing the demand for the latter.

There are certain tobacco regions where they cultivate principally for export, and as most of these countries have a government monopoly, their object is to buy a cheap, common article.

It is well known that this country is the chief tobacco-producing country in the world, and our exportation is about equal to our home consumption.

The price of this export tobacco, while not directly regulated by the rate of tax, is so indirectly to a very large extent.

For instance, the substitution of leaf for stems, and the very large increase in consumption of the common smoking, under the 16-cent rate, have drawn largely from the stocks of export tobacco, so that the price of these grades, which fell off one-half under the cruel and most disastrous advance from 20 to 24 cents, financially wrecking thousands of dealers, much more than recovered their original values under the benign influence of the 16-cent tax.

So well is this principle understood by the great contractors for foreign governments, that they keep a watchful eye over our tax rate and bring their powerful influence to bear against any reduction of tax.

It is well known to those who have carefully considered and are familiar with the subject, that no reduction of any taxes in this country ever resulted in such large and widely diffused benefits to any class as did this reduction to the agriculturists interested in tobacco culture.

The whole history of the tobacco tax in its effects and results, if carefully studied and analyzed by political economists and legislators, will give much light and guidance on many vexed topics of finance.

It can be clearly demonstrated by the trade statistics that reduction of the tax from 24 to 16 cents has been worth to the growers of tobacco more than $12,000,000 annually, and at least an equal amount to the consumers of the same. This has all been gained with, as is well known, an increase instead of a diminution of revenue, notwithstanding the doleful predictions of the Government and the opponents of reduction.

The interest in the study of these tobacco subjects is enhanced by the fact that in every effort for reform of system or of amelioration of tax (with but one single exception, the free-leaf measure) the whole force of the Internal Revenue Department has been arrayed since 1867 against the trade; and in every case the result has been directly opposite to the labored theories and predictions of the officers of revenue.

It is a popular idea that the culture of tobacco belongs almost wholly to the South. The census will show this to be far from the case. The valley of the Ohio, embracing Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, West Virginia, Illinois, Missouri, has so far reaped the largest benefits from the last reduction of tax. The market centers of this, the greatest tobacco-growing region of the world, are Cincinnati, Louisville, Evansville, Paducah, Saint Louis, Henderson, Kentucky, and Dayton, Ohio. The annual sales at Cincinnati exceed that of any other original market of which there is a record. Last year the amount paid there for leaf tobacco exceeded $10,000,000, the product of a radius of one hundred miles, giving steady and remunerative labor to many people and important business to banks, insurance companies, and railroads.

Ten or more counties of Southern Ohio find to-day their most profitable product to be leaf-tobacco, and the acreage is constantly increasing. Uncleared land in those counties, which was formerly only worth $10 per acre, is now worth from $30 to $50 per acre, and this change has all taken place since the reduction of the tax.

Allusion was made yesterday by an honorable Senator to the fact that tea had not been materially reduced in price by the removal of the duties upon it.

This fact is in entire harmony with the teachings of the tobacco tax, namely, that the tax or duty depresses the value of the article in the hands of the producer more than it increases the price to the consumer.

Tobacco has become a necessity through long use to the laboring and middle classes of society, equally so at least as tea and coffee, and enters into the expense of nearly every household.

It is called a luxury and therefore should be taxed, and if that is the reason hundreds of other far greater luxuries should be embraced in the tax-list, unless the fact that tobacco is one of the original and great staples of the country and that it is emphatically the cheap luxury of the laboring man in its untaxed state should be reasons for excepting it from ordinary rules.

Other luxuries, the product of foreign lands, remain untaxed for apparently the benefit of those countries, while tobacco, the especial product of this country, covering thousands of acres and employing a million of producers, with its thousands of manufacturers, should, in the opinion of Senators, be subjected to the highest burdens which it can bear.

There seems to be a strange and unaccountable blindness to the economic aspects of this great agricultural interest, for if justice or equity prevailed it would be wholly liberated from taxation, and if necessary other sources of revenue would be substituted for it.

The reduction, however, to 8 cents would give marked relief both to growers and consumers, and no other reduction is worthy of consideration.

We know that it would produce a great revenue at that rate, with a steady annual increase.

The advantage of reduction to manufacturers is of secondary importance, and benefits them principally in their competition with the consumption of natural leaf and by the increased volume of sales which has always followed reduction.

They are, however, greatly interested in having the question settled, so that the regular current of business may go on without these serious interruptions.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 18, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of that portion of the Journal relating to the introduction of bills.

There was no objection.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to correct the Journal and the RECORD. In the resolution for information which I presented on yesterday, the date of the last resolution adopted by the House is given as the 18th of June; it should be the 28th; it is printed incorrectly both in the Journal and RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

The Journal as corrected was then approved.

MARK WALKER.

Mr. O'NEILL. I ask, Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table at this time and put upon its passage the bill of the Senate No. 297, for the relief of Mark Walker.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let it be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Reserving the right to object, I desire to hear a statement from the gentleman presenting this bill as to the facts in the case.

Mr. O'NEILL. I will make that statement in a few minutes. This bill, Mr. Speaker, has passed the Senate twice, during the last Congress and the present Congress——

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. It is impossible to hear a single word the gentleman is saying.

The SPEAKER. As soon as order is restored the public business will be proceeded with.

Mr. O'NEILL. I repeat that a bill for the relief of Mark Walker passed the Senate during the last Congress, and the present bill which is now pending in this body passed during the present session. A bill of similar effect passed the House during the last Congress.
